NOTES AND COMMENTS

THERE is abundant and true comfort in remembering at the beginning of a New Year that "the steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord, and He delighteth in his way." The good man is he who yields his will and his wishes up to God, and is willing to be taught and led. Then is given the safe and gracious guidance which makes his steps sure. They may have to descend into deep valleys of humiliation and tears, and climb steep places of sacrifice and effort, but they will all be in the onward way to truth, and holiness, and God.

We need have no fear as to our being led into ways of usefulness, if we are ready and willing to be useful. There is work mapped out for us, which will be shown to us in due time. There are souls to whom our Saviour would have us minister his word of love, and life, and peace. What a joy it will be to come upon the opportunities of service He has manifestly prepared for us. He will lead obedient souls to hid treasure. "Oh, how great is thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee; which Thou hast wrought for them that trust in Thee before the sons of men!"

In its closing issue for 1897 The Times gives, as usual, a comprehensive summary of the past year's events. On some previous occasions of this kind we have had to remark on the utter ignoring by The Times historian of God as the supreme disposer of events. This year we welcome the note we formerly missed. In connection with the Diamond Jubilee celebrations we read :—

> The formal close of the Jubilee celebrations was marked by a letter from the Queen to the Empire, a touching letter of heartfelt thanks, happiness, and praise. Very appropriately the same moment saw the publication in these columns of a short poem which spoke the word for which, amid all the joy and pride of the Jubilee, sober and God-fearing England had been waiting—Mr. Rudyard Kipling's "Recessional." The tumult and the "shouting" were over, the fires had sunk, the fleets had melted away, there remained the "ancient sacrifice"—the chastening recollection of a Higher Power. Non nobis, Domine!

The year just closed has been marked by an unusual deathroll, which has removed many strong and influential personalities from the arena of public life. In almost every profession and calling prominent names have disappeared, and the Church of Christ has lost some noble leaders and teachers, including four bishops, some noted theologians, and a still larger proportion of the rank and file. The inroads of death are a call to the living to renewed strenuousness of endeavour and earnestness of service. One of the features of such losses is that it takes many years to replace ripe, wise leaders from among the recruits. A heavier responsibility rests on those who have to step into the vacant positions. Meanwhile the work increases, and its difficulties do not decrease, nor its opportunities. The highest ground of confidence is that while the workers fall, our great Leader abides for ever, and that his power to save and bless and lead his people never wanes.

We have received from many quarters accounts of Christmas and New Year's gatherings, and of treats given to sailors, to the poor, and to children, showing to what good purpose earnest workers, who have sought the help of our readers for this seasonable form of effort, have turned the aid sent them. We have no space for a description of these festive meetings, and such accounts are indeed quite unnecessary. The mere recital would become tedious, but all understand the pleasure of the guests, and the care taken by the hosts to seize the opportunity for pressing home the Gospel message.

In dispensing Christmas charities, the practice of giving dinners or materials for dinners has very largely replaced the older method of doling out money. In some places this latter custom still persists, but we know from sad observation that in too many cases the money finds its way into the till of the publican, and the gift which was intended to enhance the comfort and happiness of the poor really brings nothing but misery and debauchery in its train. Giving is not the only ingredient in Christian charity, it is needful so to understand your recipient that the gift shall produce the helpful influence you desire.

It is a gratifying feature of philanthropy that child-life bulks so largely in its benevolent ministration. The bairns in the slums have a hard time at the best. To brighten the dull monotony of their fearsome lives at this season of the year is a near approach to the Christ's loving sympathy for children. The Church never does a more worthy service for God and humanity than when she sets herself to the fair task of winning the children for righteousness and purity. To save the children is, in time, to save the nation. May this year be distinguished for untiring and successful labour amongst the young!

One of the London dailies in its Christmas Day issue says: "It is Christmas Day, nearly 1900 years since the birth of the Prince of Peace, and the dying century offers to us a remarkable spectacle, of which unbelief is certainly entitled to make the most in its contention that Christianity has failed as a social force among mankind." We join sincerely in mourning the great labour strife, the huge and ever-growing national armaments, and the threatening war-cloud in the far East, but all this is not the result of Christianity. This is the result of not accepting and practising Christian teaching. The unbeliever has no right to use these terrible facts as a condemnation of Christianity, they are rather a condemnation of his own infidelic attitude.

Were all men unbelieving as he, the world would be a thousand times more bellicose than it is to-day. Christianity forces itself upon no man or nation, and if individuals or governments will persist in the mad course of ignoring its warnings and commands we must wait until bitter experience will teach them that they cannot do without the methods of Christ, but in the meantime the responsibilities of man's reckless folly must not be cast upon the Prince of Peace, who is anxious to save him both from his sin and the results of it.

It is a remarkable fact that in India—with its two millions of gods and its Athenian quality of being "too superstitious"—during plague, famine, and cyclone, little or no help is given to the destitute or bereaved by the wealthier natives of the country. The Altruism which is the very essence of Christianity, finds no adequate practical expression in Buddhism or Mohammedanism—and so during the recent terrible scourge and famine in India the amelioration of the suffering has come almost entirely from a foreign and a Christian hand. Will "unbelief make the most" of that?

Nothing but regret has been expressed by outsiders at the continuance of the unfortunate engineering dispute. We are sorry for the men, many of whom must be suffering acutely; we are more sorry for their wives and children, because their sufferings are probably worse. And we are sorry for the masters, many of whom, if not all, must loathe a struggle with such of their workmen as they respect. One of them sent a substantial Christmas-box in money to each of his locked-out men, without prejudice to the merits of the dispute. Such things add to the pathos of the situation, and make one long the more to see the men at work again.

Recent legal proceedings, undertaken at the initiation of the South London Central Branch of the Free Church Federation, against the keepers of disorderly houses, have culminated in an exceedingly important High Court decision. The action was brought by a ground landlord to recover possession from the defendant and her under-tenants and lodgers of three houses in thoroughfares off the Waterloo-road, on the ground that the premises had been used for improper purposes, in contravention of the terms of the lease under which the property was purchased. The disgraceful facts seemed to be beyond question, and Mr. Justice Barnes held that they justified a forfeit of the lease. This decision shows that owner of property and ground landlords have prerogatives which they may legally assert in the interests of public morality against disorderly leaseholders as well as tenants. It is to be hoped that due regard for the terms of covenants made in the interest of the public good, will henceforth be firmly insisted upon by Christian landlords.

A conversation with Dr. Jameson, published by a London financial paper, contains a rebuke and a lesson applicable, both of them, to Christian work, not only in South Africa but in all heathen lands. Questioned as to the prospects of Rhodesia, the doctor said :—

> You harp on the immediate prospects of Matabeleland as a dividend-paying country. You seem to think of nothing else in London. Now I want you to take a wider view, an imperial view.

How true! Is half the interest felt in Matabeleland, or any other Christless land, even among Christians, as a field for winning, that is taken in it as a gold-stocked land? We may be proud of being a commercial nation, but if the earnest Christians of England were half as keen on opening up new mission fields as earnest worldlings have been in rushing to South Africa or Klondyke, we would be much nearer becoming a Christian nation. And if when we had undertaken mission work in a country we were not so anxious to see dividends paid in satisfactory statistics, often much more real work would be accomplished and much bitter disappointment avoided.

I admit that we are living on imagination; it always has been imagination; it will continue to be imagination till we have an output. We have faith in the country, and are content to wait.

This is a noble position, but with the Christian what Dr. Jameson calls imagination and faith in the country means the evidence of things not seen—faith in God, the Creator. Surely if men with no higher than an imperial aim can so toil on, content to wait, we whose efforts form part of a divine plan can never doubt. Let us, too, take a wider view when tempted to discouragement by poor results, and, realising that there is One alone who can and must conquer, boldly launch out this New Year in greater faith and deeper effort for the world's salvation.

In the sudden concentration of attention on the Far East, which has been the feature of the closing week of the old year, an undercurrent of political forces has been revealed, which has been flowing for a long time. We know not what a day may bring forth, and as usual, when anything surprising happens, there is an abundant crop of extravagant and impossible rumours. The duty of this nation at the present crisis is to keep a calm and balanced mind. Whatever be the individual purposes of the several powers in this invasion of the East by the West, one thing is certain—the issue will be controlled by Him who has the hearts of kings in his holy keeping for great ends. Our national duty is to evangelise China, not to annex it. The better we do our work, the less evil and the more good will flow from the present development of affairs.

No part of the world is creating more interest at the present moment than China. To the Christian it is intensely interesting because the old barriers against the Gospel, and the new life it brings, are yielding in the capital and in every province. Mrs. Richard, of Shanghai, says that proclamations favourable to Christianity, and to foreigners in general, are being issued to officials, high and low, over all the empire. Instructions have come from Pekin to all the governors of provinces commanding that a school of Western learning be opened in the capital of each province. With such promising prospects one would have wished the mighty empire to develop according to the law of its own life, to become a Christian nation according to its own type. But now other eyes than the missionaries' or the traders' are upon it. Statesmen have brought it within the sphere of their influence, and now the partition of China threatens to follow that of Africa. Shall we, then, have Chartered Companies, and booms, and all the evils of Western greed?

The Governor-General of Kieff, General Count Ignatieff, who has taken a prominent hand in the violent persecution to which the Stundists of that province have been recently subjected, has been removed from his post by Imperial order. He has been the moving spirit in the harsh treatment of these devout people (whose only crime is that they read and believe the Bible)—a treatment that has resulted in the banishment of thousands of them to the bleak and barren districts of the Caucasus. The friends of religious liberty will rejoice that this fanatical official has now been shorn of his power to persecute Christian people, and should pray that his successor may be a man of more liberal views and kindlier methods. It has been a hard time for these poor people, who have been faithful to their convictions under severe temptation to conform against conscience to the ruling form of religion.

In Mrs. Ramsay's just-published work on her wanderings among the Turks of Asia Minor while engaged with her husband, Prof. Ramsay, in his fruitful researches on the journeys of St. Paul in that region, there is a searching inquiry into the character and prospects of survival of that nation. Her conclusion is that the Turk as he is at present is in a hopeless case. Though he possesses certain estimable virtues, his religion makes him utterly incapable of improvement in the sense of Western civilisation. He is a born fatalist, and is careless of all progress. His philosophy, whether his house is tumbling about his ears or his clothes need repairing, is to "let things slide"; and while the womenfolk do all the hard work the men loaf about smoking or gossiping. The result is that the Turkish population is decreasing in that country "with appalling rapidity." And these are the people who think they glorify the name of God by massacring their Christian fellow-subjects!

The official review of the Indian famine informs us that its cost to the Treasury was eight million rupees, while loans and suspensions of revenue amount to four million more. Including the English Famine Fund, the charitable contributions approached £1,750,000. The Viceroy speaks in the highest terms of the splendid work done by the numerous officials employed on famine service, and praises the fortitude and patience of the natives during this dire calamity. To this list should be added the names of hundreds of missionaries and voluntary workers who supplemented the Government help in many ways. The whole bears witness to a vast upheaval of sympathy and kindness, apparent in all parts of the world. It is the one bright side of such visitations that they awaken the sense of human solidarity and brotherhood, and lead to the breaking down of many walls of partition between one nation and another.

In 1893 the C.M.S. appealed to individuals and churches in its community to support "Substitutes for Service" in the foreign field. The result is that there are now no fewer than 323 C.M.S. missionaries, each supported by some wealthy Christian, or by a Church. There is much to be said for this plan. It rouses the interest of a church in the work of a particular missionary, which is a great aid to the imagination of busy people, but once the interest is aroused it does not cease there. Next comes a comparison of his work with that of others in the same country, and when the minds of Christian people are thus awakened to the need it is not difficult to obtain money. The Baptist Missionary Society is following in the wake of the C.M.S., and we hope this will be the means not only of getting rid of the huge deficit which stares the Society in the face, but also of maintaining the "forward" policy which has characterised it for more than a century.

True as it is that in some respects we are the freest nation under heaven, in some respects we are the most slavish. For instance, who would believe that in all the countries to which the Salvation Army has gone, except our own, the officers are allowed to visit the prisons, and to hold meetings within the prison, and even to enrol prisoners as members of the Army? Sir Walter Besant calls attention, in The Contemporary, to this strange fact, which is made all the stranger by another fact, viz., that a Departmental Committee recommended that the Army should be allowed to visit prisons. It is perfectly well known that the labours of outsiders frequently succeed where those of regular workers, however good, fail. Why not use all? But red-tape is a curious thing.

The daily papers last week announced a dramatic performance to be held shortly at the Church House, Westminster; and described arrangements for a forthcoming "grand fancy dress skating fete and carnival," designed to raise funds for the encouragement of the minister of St. James's Church, Marylebone. Another item showing how the worldly spirit is embodied in religious effort was the report that a Presbyterian minister at Webster City, Iowa, had been whipped by two young women whose conduct in attending a dance he had felt compelled to censure from the pulpit. The forthcoming dramatic performance is to be on "The Conversion of England." If this conversion were realised in very deed, or if even the nominal Church of Christ experienced it, theatricals would be given a wide berth, amusements would be pure and holy, and only worthy means would be used in the advancement of the kingdom of Christ.

Mr. McNeill's London Mission.

WE have already given the programme of the first fortnight of this special effort, which begins on Sabbath, Jan. 16. There will be noon meetings during the subsequent fortnight (except Saturdays) at the City Temple, and evening meetings at the Metropolitan Tabernacle (For details, see p. 21). The second fortnight's mission, beginning January 30, will be at Westminster Chapel (out of Victoria-street, S.W.), for the week evening meetings; with the afternoon meetings at St. James's Hall, Exeter Hall, and Cannon-street Hotel. Next week we will give specific particulars.

We remind our readers of the special meeting for united prayer with respect to the mission to be held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sabbath evening next at 8.15 p.m. It is hoped there will be a large muster of friends to join in beseeching the Divine blessing on these Gospel meetings.

A meeting of welcome to Mr. McNeill will be held in Exeter Hall on the evening of Friday next week, January 14. Lady Hope and Mr. T. A. Denny will have a reception of friends from 6.30 to 7.15. The public meeting in the large hall will commence at 7.30, when it is expected that addresses of welcome will be given by Preb. Webb-Peploe, Dr. Joseph Parker, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Rev. J. G. Train, etc.

The arrangements for the Mission Choir, under the leadership of Mr. Livesey Carrott, are in a forward condition; any musical friends who can render help should communicate at once with the secretary of the Mission, Mr. N. R. Hughman, Exeter Hall, Strand, to whom contributions towards the expenses of the Mission should also be sent.

Admission to the services at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, on January 31 and February 1, at 8.30 p.m., will be by ticket, for which early application must be made in writing, marked outside "St. James's Hall Meeting," with addressed stamped envelope enclosed for reply, to Mr. Hughman at Exeter Hall.

The New Year Outlook.

A NEW YEAR has dawned upon us, and we offer hearty words of greeting to all our friends and companions in the tribulation and kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ our Lord.

The year has opened darkly, and we know not what it will yet bring forth. Already changes of grave import seem imminent, and many hearts are beginning to tremble. The world is not at rest, not satisfied. Armed millions stand ready for war; while in our own land we are daily watching a well-nigh life and death struggle between masters and men. Disasters by sea and land, great fires, huge losses, storms and awful tragedies are the order of the day. Evil men wax worse and worse. Hasting to be rich, men tread down friend and foe alike, until they are pierced through with the arrows of their own selfishness. Faith seems waning. The good things of this world are sought with almost frenzied eagerness, while the things that make for peace and bring us to God are forgotten or ignored.

Further, many who profess and call themselves Christians are sweeping away the old landmarks to the exaltation of human wisdom. To us it is clear, all our boasted education and civilising progress notwithstanding, that this dark world is growing darker. Men may be drawing nearer to each other in some respects, but their heart is as far as ever from seeking after God. It would seem that the times of the Gentiles have almost run out; and, as prophecy is fast becoming history, that the end of all things is at hand.

But let none of us therefore tremble for the Ark of God. The Lord reigneth! The Lord is on the throne, and his kingdom ruleth over all. The Lord knoweth them that are his, and his coming draweth nigh.

The seriousness of the times in which our lot is cast, and the darkening shadows of events just at hand, should drive us first of all into closer conformity with our Divine Leader, to walk as He walked, to bear some resemblance to Him who gave up his life as a ransom for men; and then to "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel."

The need for this injunction was never more apparent than now.

of peace and glad tidings, and we must make it known "to every creature," at every opportunity, in every kind of way. It is the King's great business, and requires haste. The Church has but one mission in the world—the saving of the lost, and one command: "Preach the Gospel." "Compel them to come in."

One of the most hopeful signs that we are approaching a time of blessing is the renewed emphasis which is being laid upon the worth and necessity of individual conversion and individual soundness of character. The tide of collectivism which has run so high for several years past, has not submerged the individual, and never will. The attention paid to men in the mass has already done not a little to better the outward conditions of life though there is still room for great improvement. But the old truths of the value of one man, of the power that one can wield, of the accountability of each one to God, of the general social regeneration being the result of personal regeneration, are shining forth again with renewed lustre.

Let us then, with the dawning of the New Year, with increased earnestness and in the might of the indwelling Spirit, give ourselves to prayer and the preaching of the Gospel, that we may by all means save some.

Personal Influence.

By Rev. G. AVERY, Dorking.

"That at least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them."—Acts v. 15.

IT was a time of great excitement in the city of Jerusalem. The new religion of "Jesus and the Resurrection" was making a profound impression, accompanied with such signs and wonders that people's hearts were stirred with a new hope and a new joy. These humble fishermen, disciples of Jesus, became suddenly famous. The city thoroughfare was lined with groups of men and women to see and hear the men who proclaimed this new Gospel of pardon and healing. They brought out their sick and dying, men worn with pain, and children smitten with disease, that they might receive the healing touch of these new heralds of mercy.

Nor did these pale upturned faces appeal in vain for help. The sad scene was swiftly changed to joy—"they were healed every one," and felt the glow and lustre of renewed health. This is everywhere the sign of Christ's Gospel, it brings health and happiness to diseased and degraded lives.

Peter seems to have been the central figure of this great movement; and so great were the throngs that gathered to obtain the blessing that many, despairing of personal contact with him, laid their sick ones on beds and couches that "at least his shadow might overshadow some of them." What the shadow did, whether Peter knew of its virtue, we are not told; but the people felt that there was something in it; at any rate, it called forth solemn, silent trust in the influence of a good man's presence. A Christ-surrendered soul must ever carry power as the flower carries its own fragrance. It is not more certain that the sun has warmth and healing in its rays, than that the truly godly life has comfort and healing in its shadow. It is one of the immeasurable qualities of Christian character that, apart from any particular effort, it imparts influence to help from its own inherent resource. As one has said, "A deed is sometimes done in which the hand has no part; a word is said which the tongue does not utter."

Our acts our angels are
For good or ill;
Our fateful shadows
That walk by us still.

This mysterious, subtle power of personal influence becomes a bane or a blessing—a shadow to hurt or to heal. The poet Dante speaks of good influences as

God's passionless reformers
That purify and heal, and are not seen.

But, seen or unseen, they stand as great forces in life. Consider the analogy between our shadows and our personal influence, as suggested by the incident before us.

1. Our shadows are cast by the light in which we stand. Without light there can be no shadow. God has placed our lives in the light—in the sight of one another, to be "children of light" and of the day. It is its high and sacred associations that gives our life such influence and power. The poet talks of the "fierce light that beats upon a throne," but there is a "fierce light" that beats upon every true life, which gives to the humblest and lowliest a power and position all its own. Our manhood and womanhood carry in them the germs of infinite possibility; God's plan is for us to live in the light, casting healing shadows upon others. To dwell in "his marvellous light" accentuates and intensifies our best powers of influence.

Many shadows there be, but
Each points to the sun:
The shadows are many,
The sunlight is one.
Let us look to the light
Which is common to all,
And down to the shadows
That ever do fall.
Ay, even the darkest,
In this faith alone,
That in tracing the shadows
We find out the sun.

2. Again, our shadows are intangible things, so impalpable that we cannot grip them. They cannot be weighed or arrested. We cannot detach and examine them as we can a garment. Yet they are our visible and intangible second self, without bone or body, yet testifying to our personality and presence. So our individual and involuntary influence. What a strange, subtle thing it is! Like the wind, it "bloweth where it listeth." We "know not whence it cometh nor whither it goeth," yet that it does come and does go its results incontestably prove. In the day of the final reckoning we may be startled by the great effects it has produced in other lives.

3. Moreover, our influence is like our shadow in its silence. Shadows are still as moonbeams. Like Time and sunshine, God's mighty forces, our shadows have a voice which is not heard. How softly and silently falls the thistledown, borne by the passing breeze and carried here and there! This noiselessness of influence gives to it a mighty force, but it too often makes us indifferent to its operation. We naturally take account of things which arrest us by their noise—the peal of thunder, the sighing of the wind, the crackling of the fire—but these great silent forces of life, how little we heed them; and least of all possibly this silent, solemn power of influence.

4. Not the least important point is that our shadows resemble us. They walk with us as our second selves—part and parcel of our own personality. We can neither detach nor imprison them, for they are indissolubly linked with us, and are, more or less, the image of ourselves. So influence is the key to character: it opens to others the life within. What we are, our influence is. Peter being a servant of Christ, his shadow had healing and help in it. There is always a complete harmony between a man's character and his influence, and character cannot hide itself; it must express and expose itself through influence. In spite of all the subtle arts of concealment life has a way of of the inner man. The Christian life will become attractive only as it manifests the spirit of Jesus, and if Christ be in us, the graciousness of his presence and power must reveal themselves.

Henry Ward Beecher, walking one day in his garden, plucked some fragrant flowers, and, crushing them, put them in his pocket. When he went into the house the little children soon discovered them by their perfume. If Christ is in the life others will soon detect the fact. Our influence must always correspond with our inward life, and our inward life can never be true and real till Christ reigns and rules within.

Thou must to thyself be true
If thou the truth wouldst teach;
Thy soul must overflow if thou
Another soul wouldst reach;
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.

Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed.

There are two important spheres where influence is most operative and where it should always be safeguarded, namely in the Home and in Friendship. It is here more than anywhere else that we help or hurt the lives of others, and leave behind us undying memories and imperishable influence.

On the tomb of a little girl was written: "A child of whom her playmates said, 'It was easier to be good while she was with us.'" That was indeed the shadow of a beautiful and healing influence. May God by his Spirit enable our lives to bear as good a testimony.

The Last Judgment.

By Rev. W. B. RUSSELL-CALEY, M.A., Vicar of Watton, Norfolk.

I. THE CHARACTER OF THE JUDGE.

"God the Judge of all."—Heb. xii. 23.
"The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son."—John v. 22.

THERE are few questions of more engrossing interest to a criminal than what will be the character of the judge by whom he will be tried. Amongst human judges some are severe and unrelenting, while others are more lenient and easily persuaded to take a merciful view of the case. Some are more rigorous in their punishment for certain crimes than others, largely owing to personal opinion and predilection; while others prefer to let mercy triumph over justice. But when we come to consider the character of the Eternal Judge there are none of the frailties and defects inherent in humanity. God is to be the Judge of all, yet to one Person in the ever Blessed Trinity has been entrusted the judicial function. "He hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father" (John v. 22, 23).

Consider the character of this Divine-Human Judge, "Son of God" and "Son of Man" (John v. 25, 27), the twofold character qualifying Him pre-eminently for administering justice to all the creation of God.

I. This Judge is Omnipotent. He can compel attendance when and where He pleases. The dead will hear his voice and instantly obey (John v. 25, 28). The Divine power that sends and controls the brilliant lightning, the screaming gale, and all the magnificent forces of Nature, shall then be used to summon the human race to judgment. At his behest and according to his will, all Nature's tremendous powers will do their part to bring together the vast concourse into his Holy Presence. Earthly judges can summon criminals and witnesses, but very often they cannot compel attendance at their courts. Men fly from their native land, and either succeed in evading the messengers of the law, or find refuge in some country with which their own has no extradition treaty; or if guilty of political crimes they may become so powerful, or be so largely and influentially befriended, as to be enabled to openly defy the majesty and authority of their king. But at the last Great Day there will be none of these loopholes of escape. The Judge can and will compel your presence at his awful Tribunal. No monarch so mighty that he could refuse to obey the high mandate. No person so poor as to avoid the service of that "writ." No one so cunning as to evade this decree. "For the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" (Rev. vi. 7.)

II. He is impartial. There will be no favouring of any person or cause, no calling out some feature in the character of the Judge that shall be sympathetic to the criminal or the crime. Earthly judges often look with peculiar abhorrence upon certain crimes, or with especial leniency upon others. But not so here. There can be no appeal to sympathy or compassion, to the detriment of Divine justice, righteousness, and truth. (Job xxxiv. 12; Rom. ii. 6-9; cf. Eccles. iii. 16, 17). To the sinner

HOW TERRIBLE IS THIS THOUGHT!

All ideas then of appealing to the love of God against his justice will be seen to be vain and futile; all foolish thoughts that God will allow his Divine attributes to be set the one against the other will be found groundless. Absolute, holy impartiality will characterise the Supreme Judge.

III. Incorruptible.—There can be no favour obtained for the sinner either by the bestowal of a bribe or the exertion of influence. "He shall judge the world in righteousness. He shall minister justice to the people in uprightness" (Psa. ix. 8). The wealth and power of the wicked will not then prevail against the saints. There will be no one then unable to obtain justice owing to his poverty or his lowly station. Men often think now they can bribe God by their good works; then they will know how delusive is this thought. (Job xxxv. 7, Prov. xxi. 30.)

IV. He is Omniscient. "There is nothing hid from the Lord," all things are open before Him" (Heb. iv. 13; Prov. xv. 11; Luke xii. 2). A human judge may sometimes be blinded or deceived; an astute lawyer may often mislead him by some side issue, or by the exaggeration or suppression of some fact. But at this great tribunal all such tactics will be hopeless (Rom. ii. 16). You will not be able to "colour," pervert, or suppress any evidence, so as to delude the Judge. "God shall bring every work into judgment" (Eccles. xii. 14; Luke viii. 17). Here sometimes a judgment is reversed, or revised, owing to subsequent facts coming to light; then all facts will be known at once. The judgment will be unalterable and according to truth (Rom. ii. 2).

V. Lastly, the Judge is holy and wise. Everyone must acknowledge the purity of his character, the wisdom of his decisions. He is "the righteous judge" (2 Tim. iv. 8). There will be no defects in the judgment owing to ignorance or imperfection, it will be unimpeachable (Rev. xv. 3, 4).

Oh, how wise this Judge—to untangle the skein of life, to unravel its problems, to decide what was owing to circumstance and disposition. What a perfect balancing will there be of all the conflicting concomitants of our lives. But the text reminds us how calmly happy the Christian is in prospect of meeting this Holy Judge. He is in covenant relationship. He is under the blood. Penalty has been turned to pardon, and with regard to a judgment of works (1 Cor. iii. 13-15). "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" (Gen. xviii. 25).

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—The work at this Society's headquarters, in Ratcliff-highway, continues to be greatly blessed. Although the locality is vastly improved, it is still very far from being free from drunkenness, vice, and violence. Only recently a seaman, who had been drugged and robbed, was brought in by the workers, and is now a total abstainer, and trusting in the Saviour. The other evening the meeting was broken up by a sailor, with a cut and bleeding face, rushing in for shelter, followed by a crowd of roughs. Last week, maddened by drink, a sailor, in attempting to strike the missionary in charge of the reading-room, sent his fist through a glass door, much to his own injury. Still, it is encouraging to know that not a week passes by without some seamen signing the temperance pledge, and others being led to the Saviour. At last Thursday's Gospel temperance meeting five converted drunkards (four being seamen) addressed the meeting, three of the five having been converted in the hall.

The Testimony of Jesus

Concerning Himself.

By Rev. DR. JAMES CULROSS.

HIDING AND REVEALING.

DIVINE knowledge—that is to say, the knowledge of God and the things of God—comes to us by a revealing. There are many things that we find out for ourselves by searching. It is thus that science is built up; we investigate; we observe; we make one discovery after another; we apply tests; we correct mistakes; and so we rise into higher and higher knowledge. It is in this way that present-day science has been built up; we have slowly and laboriously found it out by searching. But the knowledge of God comes to us in a different way. We could not have found it out by searching; it comes to us by a revealing.

Take the great questions on which we must have light thrown. Is there a living God behind the phenomena of this world? Who and what is He? Is He only an omnipotent Fate or Necessity? Or is He a Thou, to whom I may speak and who will hear and answer me? Has He created the world and set it a-going, to keep on so long, as one winds up his watch and slips it under his pillow and falls asleep, knowing that it will go all night? Or does He take a present interest in the affairs of his creatures? What is his character, his will, the nature of his government, his attitude toward us? Has He a heart? Will He forgive? Can He feel? Can He be grieved? Does He love? Is there a Beyond and a Hereafter? What will be his aspect when we meet Him there? Such questions are old and yet ever new. They were asked yesterday; they will be asked again to-morrow. They belong to us all. They come from the heart, not of the unfortunate and unhappy only, the men who have been beaten down in the battle of life, but of the most successful; not from men of peculiar temperament, but from all men. We must get them answered, else we can have no true peace of mind.

Science cannot wring an answer to them from nature. Chemistry, for example, does not answer, does not profess to answer, a single one of them. Geology does not, astronomy does not, physiology does not. Go the round of the sciences. Every science says these questions do not belong to my province. I do not profess to answer a single one of them; you must go elsewhere. The whole apparatus of science is but an extension of the senses. The telescope, for example, is but an eye that sees farther off; the microscope is but an eye that sees more minutely; and so with the whole apparatus of science. You are never taken out of the realm of the senses, and so the greatest questions—the questions of conscience and heart—are left unanswered, or answered with a vague perhaps.

How does the knowledge of these things come to us, then? Just as Jesus says in Matt. xi. 25-27—by a revealing. "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." And again, "No man knoweth the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him." This is how Divine knowledge is attained. The revealing has been going on in manifold ways in history, continually increasing, like the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

This paragraph declares a law of the revealing. "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." The hiding and revealing are two sides of one and the same method of procedure. Let us look in to it and try to understand it. "The wise and prudent"—those who are so in the worldly reckoning and their own; the men who think they know and are above being taught; the proud and lofty, whose self-wisdom exalts itself against the wisdom of God; the philosophers and Rabbis who have never learned to humble themselves before God, and to confess that they know nothing; the doctors of divinity who construct a God out of their own consciousness, who are full of their own thoughts, and who walk in the light of the sparks of their own kingship. God hides his secrets from them, and they remain in ignorance, and all the while they think they know. "God resisteth the proud."

This is no strange principle. It runs through ordinary life. You have sat in a room while some important subject was discussed. You were really ignorant of it, but you talked as if you knew. If only you had been humble enough to confess your ignorance, there was one present who could and would have explained to you; but you were too proud to confess your ignorance, and so you learned nothing.

Or suppose a boy is apprenticed to some craft in which skill and taste are required. He is placed under a master of the craft able to teach every detail to perfection. The teacher points out the boy's mistakes, and shows him how to do the work in the best way, so as to produce the finest result. The boy does not like it, but is full of self-conceit; and when a hint is given he resents the interference, and says, "Yes, I know that." What happens? His very he who could and would have taught him is silent. Even so in religion. Pride of intellect, pride of knowledge, pride of wisdom, or pride of seeing, blocks out the light, and keeps a man in ignorance—and all the time he thinks he knows.

On the other hand the babes, the little children, the simple and lowly-hearted, whom the wise and prudent despise, who know nothing and confess that they know nothing, who are willing to sit down on the lowest seat they can get and be taught. God reveals his things to them, He has pleasure in doing so, He discloses his secrets and shows them his only covenant. "Babe" is the representative of receptiveness. The open, simple, receptive, trustful heart appeals to God. It must be a joy to him to teach in such a case. Higher than learning, higher than intellect, higher than the critical faculty, however finely tempered and keenly sharpened, higher even than genius, is childlikeness. It has

NO PREPOSSESSIONS AND BYE-ENDS.

It lies open to the light; it lies open to God. It is an old saying and a true one that children make the best theologians. They see with their fresh, clear eyes what older and wiser people are blind to. The great struggle for grown men is to get rid of their own wisdom which is often prejudice, and to become little children again, with the child's insight, simplicity, teachableness, and fearless trust. The child-spirit is in sympathy with the Father. A father delights more in his child's trustfulness and open-heartedness than in his cleverness or argumentativeness. A father meets trust and childlikeness by revealing his heart.

Here then is the two-fold way that God in his character of Father, in his supremacy as "Lord of heaven and earth," deals with men. He hides his things from the wise and prudent, and reveals them to babes. And the Lord Jesus is pleased with this way. He says, "I thank Thee" for doing thus; and He rejoiced in spirit when He said it. It is a mode of action to be rejoiced in. It means the widest possible revealing to the largest number of men. It is at once the grandest and the most gracious way of acting. And God will not swerve from it for the cleverest man living. And if anyone is too proud to fall in with it, there is nothing for him but to remain in ignorance. This is why so many men, shrewd, highly educated, able to pronounce on any question of the day, instructed in all public affairs, are blind among the realities of the kingdom of heaven. In that Kingdom up is down, and down is up. God's word to the learner whom He teaches is, "Bow down thine ear."

On Music and Singing.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

STRANGE as it may seem to those who have not thought of it, yet it is true that more is said in the Bible about praise than about prayer.

At the dawn of creation the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted for joy. At the dawn of the new creation, when an angel brought the glad tidings of the Saviour's birth, suddenly there was with him a multitude of the heavenly hosts, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, goodwill toward men."

The book of Psalms has been well called the book of Praise. Every experience of which the human soul is capable in relation to God is the subject of song by the sweet singers of Israel; and during the three thousand years which have elapsed since they were written, they have served to express the convictions and confessions, the hopes and fears, the prayer and praise, the love of right and hate of wrong, which, through the ages, have exercised men of every kindred and tongue and people and nation. Praise is the DOMINANT NOTE OF ALL THE PSALMS.

Nothing so symbolises the harmony of heaven as the union of voices and of instruments in joyful praise. Thus we read that at the dedication of the temple "it came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord; and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the Lord, saying, 'For He is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.'" Then "the glory of the Lord filled the house of God."

In the revival under Hezekiah, when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets and with the instruments ordained by David, King of Israel. "And all the congregation worshipped, and the singers sang, and the trumpets sounded; and all this continued until the burnt offering was finished."

So also in Ezra's day, "when the builders laid the foundation of the Temple of the Lord, they set the priests in their apparel with trumpets, and the Levites the sons of Asaph with cymbals, to praise the Lord. And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid."

In Nehemiah we have this remarkable fact recorded, that "the singers were over the business of the house of God." And further, that "it was the King's commandment concerning them that a certain portion should be for the singers, due every day." And they were not undeserving of this special care, for when "at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem they sought the Levites out of all their places to keep the dedication with gladness, the sons of the singers gathered themselves themselves together; for the singers had builded them villages round about."

The pattern prayer in which our Lord taught his disciples to pray begins and ends with praise. "Hallowed be thy Name...for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, for ever."

The apostle exhorts us, "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

And in the Revelation the praise and worship of all preceding Scripture is expressed in "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty," and "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain."

And as music and song not only accompanied all the revivals in Scripture, but were essential parts of deepening spiritual life, so have they ever been in later times. We owe our best hymns to seasons like these, when in the family and in the church, in the factory and in the street, the great truths of the Gospel are heard in song. Each great revival has its own peculiar features, and new hymns are written and new tunes composed to give them utterance; and singing does at least as much as preaching to impress the words of God upon the people's minds.

During the forty years since it pleased God, who called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach Him among the people, the importance of praise expressed in song has grown upon me. I am now more than ever desirous of seeing the ministry of song and although not myself a musician or a singer I have ventured to make the following suggestions in the assured belief that, if adopted, they would do much to promote the work of God, not only in connection with meetings specially evangelistic, but in the maintenance of interest in the intervals between the periods of revival. The ministry of music and song plays a vital part in these, and promotes communion with God and with each other.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

1. That one evening in the week should be set apart for the whole congregation, when they may practise in unison and harmony the singing of the hymns and tunes they know, and learn new ones.

2. That a consecrated Christian man of good musical ability should be chosen as leader of the chorus choir.

3. That hymns containing the elementary truths of the Gospel should be sung to melodious tunes, not too difficult for average men and women.

4. That the pastor should take a lively personal interest in the singing, and that a thoroughly good understanding should be cultivated and maintained between himself and the leader, so that they may work in fellowship and harmony.

5. That good new hymns and tunes should be introduced, the preparation of which would thus be encouraged.

6. That alternate singing by the choir and congregation, by the male and female voices, and by the older people and the children, might be practised.

7. That the Sunday evening service should be preceded by a half-hour's service o

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, January 9.

"The Lord bringeth again the excellency of Jacob."—Nah. ii. 2 (R.V.).

TOO long Nineveh had exerted its malign influence upon the fortunes of the chosen people; to use the expressive simile of the eleventh verse, it had resembled a den of lions, whence ravenous beasts prowl forth to devour the villagers. The Assyrians, pouring forth from their mighty metropolis, had devastated the excellency of Jacob, the cry of the land had gone up to Jehovah, and he announced his determination to quell the enemy and avenger, and to bring again the excellency of the people whom He loved.

It may be that you, too, have been carried into captivity, or devastated by strongly besetting sins; though you pray and yearn for emancipation, still you are kept low by the depredations of the power of evil. But be of good cheer; God is moving to your help. He is against those who are against you; He will bring again your excellency.

You shall excel in faith when the hindrance is removed. The faith that once characterised you shall arouse with its former vigour, and make an open pathway down which heaven's best blessings may enter your life. At its summons the unseen will become more real than the seen, and God will be all in all. You shall excel also in hope, which is the realising faculty, which accepts the assurances of faith, follows them as the beacon-lights that guide weary sailors; for hope is more than faith, as the artist is more than the preparer of colours. You shall also excel in love. When evil looses its hold upon the soul, love springs spontaneously from its soil. God is love and heaven, and to love is already to live the life of eternity. O God, bring again the excellency of thy people!

MONDAY, January 10.

"There is no assuaging of thy hurt, thy wound is grievous."—Nah. iii. 19.

This is one of the greatest chapters in Old Testament prophecy. Nahum, the Elkoshite, was a man of uncommon power of imagination and force of eloquence. His denunciation of Nineveh is remarkably forcible and eloquent. You can almost hear the crack of the whip, the rattling of wheels, and see the heap of corpses that block the passages. Every traveller, from Layard downwards, has attested the literal fulfilment of these predictions. For Nineveh, from the time of her fall to the present, has been utterly waste. Her hurt has never been assuaged. A scar upon the earth's surface alone marks her site, and all because she had hidden impurity, and been glutted in blood.

From such a spectacle we may well turn to our beloved country, and seriously question whether we are doing all that we can to stay a similar fate. There are many signs that she is being swept along in the same stream as has borne many mighty nations down to ruin. The growing luxury of the rich; the abject poverty of the poor (a child was burned in Whitechapel the other day because the mother had to sell the fireguard to buy bread); the gross impurity and immorality of our streets; the increasing desecration of the Rest Day, and the overwhelming bill for drink — these things cannot be unpunished. May we not indeed fear that God will soon rise against us? Let us use our influence as citizens, and our prayers as saints, to avert a fate which when it comes will be irretrievable.

TUESDAY, January 11.

"Art not Thou from everlasting, O Lord my God, mine Holy One? Thou diest not."—Hab. i. 12 (R.V. marg.).

Note the attributes of God, which are enumerated in these words. His eternity—He is from everlasting; He is the Holy One—of purer eyes than to behold evil; the Almighty—the Rock. Is it not wonderful that mortals should be able to put the possessive pronoun before these wonderful words, and claim this glorious God for themselves. My God: mine Holy One.

But the most remarkable is the reading suggested above by the words "Thou diest not"; "He only hath immortality." Time cannot lay its hand upon his nature, or death dissolve it. He need not tremble at the summons of of man's great last foe. Unchangeable. The same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. The death of death! The destruction of the grave! He dies not.

All this is true, but it is true also that in the person of his Eternal Son He died. He laid down his life, though none took it from Him. He bowed his glorious nature beneath the yoke of death. Because the children were partakers of flesh and blood, He took part in the same, that through death He might destroy death. Though He ever liveth, yet He became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross.

There are many mysteries like those at which the prophet hints. He holds his peace whilst the wicked swallows up the man that is more righteous than himself. It is the problem of all ages why God should permit it; but whatever be the explanation, it cannot be because He has vacated the throne of the universe, or that his arm is weakened by the disease that precedes death, or that He is deficient in love.

WEDNESDAY, January 12.

"I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will look forth to see what He will speak with me."—Hab. ii. 1.

The prophet had made his complaint in the preceding chapter, and now he climbs the watch-tower, much as the watchman did who waited for tidings of the battle between Joab and Absalom. He looks forth for God's answer. This, to say the least, is respectful in our dealings with the Almighty. Too often we ask questions, and do not wait for replies; shoot prayer-arrows into the air, without stopping to see where they alight, or what quarry they strike. We are in too great a hurry, to take time and trouble for climbing the watch-tower, and awaiting the Divine reply.

God still speaks to the waiting soul. Sometimes, there is a direct answer to its perplexity; at others, there is the assurance that the vision is yet for the appointed time, but that it is hastening towards the end. O long-waiting soul, dost thou hear those words? Thou hast been standing long upon the watch-tower. Hope has almost died, but the vision is panting in its haste to be fulfilled. If it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come. Every throb of the pendulum brings it nearer. The express train is hurrying towards thee, with its precious freight.

How often God's answers come, and find us gone! We have waited for a while, and, thinking there was no answer, we have gone our way; but as we have turned the first corner the post has come in. It is not enough to direct your prayer unto God; look up, and look out until the blessing comes.

THURSDAY, January 13.

"O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years."—Hab. iii. 2.

When we are oppressed with the state of the Church and the world, as Habakkuk was, there is no resource but to turn to God. It is of no use to say to our brother, "What shall we do?" Better at once get into the presence of the Almighty. All conferences with flesh and blood are wasted breath, unless there has been a previous one with God. "O Lord": that must always be the beginning of revival. We must begin with God. We cannot get one up, we must bring it down.

Note also the unselfishness of the prayer which precedes revival. We must not pray; revive my work, lest the insidious temptation come in of using the stream of God's blessing to turn our own tiny water-wheels for our own profit. Let us get beyond the narrow limits of our church or section, and ask for a revival of God's work everywhere.

We do not want a new Gospel, but a revival, a revivifying of the old Gospel. If any preach another Gospel than that which the Apostles preached, let him be accursed; he is selling bran for wheat; he is filling cartridges with sand. We want nothing but the Gospel of the Cross of Jesus Christ, proclaimed from lips which have received a new baptism of power.

Note the time. Not at the end of years, but in the midst. It will not do to wait. The broad road is crowded with a thronging multitude which is ever pouring over its course to the precipice which hurls them into ruin.

What an argument! "Remember mercy." We cannot appeal to merit, but can lay great stress on mercy. Lord have mercy on thy Church, revive her; and ere the dispensation close, may she arise for one great work of soul-salvation.

FRIDAY, January 14.

"I will search Jerusalem with candles."—Zeph. i. 12.

The state of things in the chosen city was scandalous. The people worshipped the host of heaven on the housetops; the temple-courts were filled with the priests of idolatry, the court affected foreign dress and manners—and all this in the reign of Josiah. Nothing could prevent the invasion of the Chaldeans as ministers of the Divine vengeance. These were the terrible guests whom the Almighty had summoned to the feast, and the feast consisted of the spoils of the city (ver. 7).

No sin of his people can escape the notice of God. He searches out the secret evils of our hearts with lighted candles, not for his vision alone, but for ours; that we may know, and abhor them, and put them from us. There is the candle of conscience. The spirit of man is as the candle of the Lord. In some men the candle is present, but not lit: in others it is lit by the power of the Divine Spirit; and there is something of the incandescent flame about it then. There is the candle of outward events. How often does God allow some incident of which we hear in social conversation, or read in the newspaper, to cast a sudden and unexpected light upon some passages in our lives which we had carefully shrouded in darkness.

Then there is the candle of his Holy Word. A text or sermon unkindled by the Spirit of God is like an unlighted candle. But when God's Holy Spirit rests on it, interfusing it with fire, then how mighty is its effect. It searches the heart and tries the reins; it reveals to man his thought, and the real bent of his existence.

SATURDAY, January 15.

"Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger."—Zeph. ii. 3.

The name of this prophet means, "Whom God hides or protects." The hidden man invites others to his hiding-place: so should we whose life is hid with Christ in God. They say that in the centre of the wildest cyclone there is a point of absolute calm: so, amid the wildest storms that have swept the face of the world, there have always been some of God's hidden ones:—

> The secret place, the refuge from the blast,
> The glorious Temple, Lamb of God art Thou;
> Our feet shall tread the golden courts at last,
> Our souls have entered now.
> Awakened! to behold Thee face to face,
> Henceforward and for ever drawn apart,
> To learn of Thee within thy holy place
> The secret of thine heart.

Only those may know the hidden life who fulfil the conditions here described. They must be meek; they must work his judgment; they must seek righteousness and meekness. It is the soul that bends before the blast of the terrible ones; that gives place to wrath, not because of pusillanimity, but because of the fear of the Lord; that hands over its cause of alarm and fear to the Most High, which abides in his secret place, and hides under his shadow.

Let us seek these things, and then there will be no may-be in our being hidden. We shall certainly be hidden in the day of the Lord's anger; hidden in the wounds of Jesus, hidden in his heart, hidden in God with Christ, hidden in the fiery glory of his intolerable holiness.

> Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
> Let me hide myself in Thee.

F. B. M.

Witness-Bearing.

A NEW YEAR'S ADDRESS.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.*

THE Lord Jesus Christ came into the world to perform various work for it. He came to redeem men by his precious blood, but He also came to be a witness to the Father. The whole of his teaching, life, and death may be looked upon as the reflection of the unseen and eternal. Having dwelt in the bosom of the Father, He came to declare Him to men, and to bear witness to men of the fact of the eternal world. Therefore, the life, the words, and the death of Jesus Christ are like a mirror, reflecting those things which are presented to it.

Just as Jesus Christ was always bearing witness to the Father and to eternal relationships and facts (and for this He was done to death by his foes), so the Church on earth has got to bear witness to Him—the living Christ bearing witness to the Father whom no men hath seen or can see, and the Church bearing witness to the Son; so that the light of the Eternal Father breaks upon the face of Jesus, and from Him is reflected to the faces and lives of his children.

The Church has many functions. It has the exorcising function by which it casts out devils. It has the argumentative function by which it stands up and speaks for the principles of the heavenly kingdom. But it has also the witnessing function, and I want to say a little to-day about the necessity of this work of witnessing. We know that there is a conscience in every man, but we may also say that there is

A CONSCIENCE OF SOCIETY.

Just as the conscience of the individual man needs educating by the presentation of subjective truth from the outside, so the conscience of society needs to be trained and educated by the presentation to it of truth from without. Those who are to present that truth to the conscience of men are surely God's own children, the Christian Church which has been placed by Him in the world to witness to the world to the eternal truth, the everlasting facts of purity, truth, and righteousness, with the view of awakening the slumbering conscience of mankind. Thus it is necessary for us in our Church life, as citizens of the State, as members of a great community, perpetually to be witnessing for truths and facts and relationships which the world is only too glad to ignore. I would press this part of the Christian's work upon you because

IT IS CONSTRUCTIVE.

No doubt there is an aspect of witnessing which brings us into collision with error and wrong. But I think that on the whole our work in the world is not so much destructive, in the first instance, as constructive. We are to bear witness to that which is positive—not simply against falsehood, but because we stand for truth; not simply and primarily against impurity, but always holding up the crystalline purity of Christ; not simply against the discord of the present, in which class is arrayed against class, but on behalf of Eternal Love by which the whole shall be bound in one body together. In these days we often hear the cry, "Back to Christ." We hear men—even men of Christian name and influence—speak as if we had to travel back 1800 years to find Jesus Christ somewhere in that remote age. We challenge that cry. We refuse to think that we are merely witnesses to the facts that happened in the past. We stand here to witness to One who died but who rose and lives. We are perpetually so to speak and act that our life-influence may not be "back to Christ," but "up to Christ." We want to induce people to think that Jesus Christ is with us as much as when He walked to Emmaus with his disciples. His presence accompanies living and moving in our great cities and centres of population to-day, as much as ever it did in Jerusalem or Galilee of old. But we cannot bear witness to Jesus until we are in daily, hourly, perpetual contact and fellowship with Him of whom we speak.

I think further that we have to bear witness not only to the Living Christ but to the great facts that stand out in his ministry—that souls are only won through the cross and blood of others. I know perfectly well that there is a sense in which the cross and death of Jesus Christ are unapproachable by any one of us. He died on Calvary as a perfect satisfaction and sacrifice for the sins of the whole world. But there is also a truth to which we must bear witness—that men are only saved from lust, and passion, and drink, and sin, by the cross-bearing, the suffering, the blood-letting of others. There is a tendency amongst us to think that men are going to be saved by great social schemes, by running institutional churches with any number of societies attached to them, by education, by having agents whom you pay at so much a week or year.

YOU WILL NEVER SAVE SOULS THAT WAY.

You will never do it until you go down as Christ did, and stand on their level; till you are prepared to sacrifice yourself even to blood and tears and death on their behalf. Babes are not born into the world without sacrifice and travail; and souls are not born into the heavenly kingdom without sacrifice and anguish.

Then we want also, I think, to bear witness to the essential unity of the Church of Christ. There was a time when we thought the whole world was going to agree upon a creed. The great creed of the Evangelical Alliance was promulgated, was assented to and accepted by vast numbers of Christian people. Some of us have lived to see that that creed, good though it is, is not sufficient. There must be a witness to something which is even deeper than a number of propositions—the witness of a common life, the life of Jesus Christ. You Church of England men must be more prepared to bear witness to the common life in the heart of the Nonconformist or Salvationist. So also the Salvationist or Nonconformist must be much more prepared to appreciate the earnest, holy, devoted life of those from whom, theologically, he may be furthest removed. We must stand together and bear witness to our common life. If these three things are borne in mind—the witness to the living Christ, to the need of self-sacrifice, to the common life of the True Vine—we shall be doing a great deal in the world and in the Church.

Let me refer to another circle—the circle of social influence. There are several things I want very much that we should bear witness to as Christian men. We ought to witness to

THE SERIOUSNESS OF LIFE.

The last decade—perhaps the last five years more especially, have been remarkable for an immense devotion to amusements on the part of our population. I suppose there never was a time when young men and women, in all classes, were so intoxicated with amusement. We must be very careful here. Let us bear in mind that the great strain of modern life demands recreation. Let it be made clear that we have nothing to say against that which recreates, which makes a man better able to do his work, which refreshes the weary and exhausted brain. But when we see young people, and Christian young people, devoting the whole of the Lord's Day and all their days to bicycling, to golfing, and so on, we are forced to say that things which may be right when taken in moderation as a relief to the overtaxing demands of life, are wrong when they become the chief object for which we live. We need also to bear witness to

THE SIMPLICITIES OF LIFE.

I was horrified last night at my church to see a young working lad, whom I had been the means of bringing to God, wearing what seemed to be a gold and diamond ring. I knew it was neither gold nor diamond, and I must take the opportunity of saying to my young friend, "For heaven's sake drop that ring." But we see a great deal of the same sort of thing among Christian people, who are living very extravagantly—up to their means if not beyond them. We want to hark back to simpler days. One goes into the houses of Christian people that are so splendidly and extravagantly furnished. One sees also that Christian women must be spending as much on dress as worldly women are doing. We notice that Christian men with whom we come in contact are spending too much on their comfort, on their residences, on their equipages, which are only ostentation and luxury. Surely we ought to so arrange our dress, our adornment, our domestic appliances, that we at least may be able to say that life consisteth not in the abundance of the things a man possesseth, but in frugality, simplicity, and nobility of character.

One other circle I must say a word about—on the application of the law of God

TO NATIONAL LIFE.

It seems to be supposed in the present day that nations are not bound by the same laws as hold individuals. Expediency is quoted as a maxim. There are certain abominable things perpetrated in India to-day which can only be defended on the ground of expediency; the law of God is clear and straight against them. We have to stand out and say that that which could not be right when applied to the individual man, cannot be right when applied to the national life. Look at the events in China, which are causing us so much anxiety. We need to recollect that for forty years we have demoralised the Chinese by our opium; and that the evil is now coming back on this country in the impotence of China, for which we have ourselves to thank. We cannot escape the Greek word Nemesis in national life, or that Christian word that nations as well as individuals must "stand before the judgment seat of Christ." It is constantly being enacted. Christ is always judging nations; sending Nineveh and Babylon to the bottomless pit; raising England so long as she is true to God, then putting her aside, perhaps, when she is unfaithful to her high privileges.

One word more: "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses to me." I cannot but think that as we are coming to the end of the present age (surely we are within measurable distance of it; everything points in that direction) we are to look for the latter rain. We have had the former rain, the Pentecost; and we are bound to have the latter rain ere this dispensation closes. They say that 1898 is to be as remarkable as 1848 in the history of the world. Let us ask that whatever happen in the world, this year shall be characterised by a mighty outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon the church of God. The great preparation as we go forth to witness in the world is the reinforcement of the Holy Ghost, according to the promised word.

Soldiers' Home, Spital Tongues, near Newcastle.—On Tuesday, Dec. 21, the eighth anniversary of the Soldiers' Home was celebrated; Councillor H. Crawford Smith presided. Colonel H. T. S. Yates, R.A., and others addressed the audience, which was large. Mr. A. Draper read the report, which was full of encouragement. Three Bible-classes, meetings for mothers, and Band of Hope were held weekly. The Home is well used and much appreciated by the men in barracks. Several thousands of soldiers have visited the Home since the opening night, and hundreds have signed the total abstinence pledge, and scores have found the Saviour in the building. £1000 are required for the proposed new Home.

The Message of the Muffler.

A TRUE STORY FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Part I.

Far away, where land-locked fiords, from the storm-tossed ocean leap,
Bearing to the dark pine forests, salt sea breezes from the deep,
Comes a tale across the waters from old Norway's rugged land.
Ah! how close earth's links are drawing heart to heart and hand to hand.

Up the fiord roll the waters, with a murmur from the sea,
"Who will hear the ocean calling? who will rise and come with me?"
Forth there went two hardy fishers, though their mother bid them stay—
"Mother! we can rest no longer in this little changeless bay!"

But her youngest son is with her, joyous Karl, her pride and pet,
His the merry voice that greets her with the spoils of chase or net;
His the blithe "good morn," inspiring strength to labour through the day,
Blending thanks with each petition as she kneels at night to pray.

Will the cruel ocean draw him? Has his dark eye lost its fire?
And the music of the pinewoods, seems it his young heart to tire?
Ah! the morning comes too swiftly, when he says, with accents low,
"Mother, the good ship is waiting—for a little let me go!"

For a little!—so he told her; but the seasons come and go,
Golden sunsets on the fiord, glitter with the summer glow;
Snowy peaks its waters mirror, in the fair, faint winter noon,
Glorious night lies there reflected, quivering stars, and radiant moon.

Once or twice at first a letter—then a dreary silence falls.
"He is dead," the neighbours tell her—how the thought her heart appals!
Now his name she only utters to her loving Father's ear,
Something tells her Karl is living—God a mother's prayer will hear.

Part II.

Hark! the Christmas bells are calling!
And the Christmas anthem rings;
On a sailor's ears 'tis falling,
Tidings of the Christ it brings.
Some such words his mother chanted
As the Christmas tapers burned,
And by that old memory haunted,
Now within the church he turned.

Well the English tongue he knoweth,
Grown familiar as his own,
Yet some sign the stranger showeth
As he sitteth there alone—
Service o'er, kind voices greet him,
Bid him to the sailors' feast;
Light, and warmth, and comfort meet him,
Welcome for each stranger guest.

"Number ninety-nine—your present!"
'Tis a muffler soft and warm.
The Norwegian's smile is pleasant,
Some one thinks of cold and storm—
See! Within its folds a letter!
"To who e'er my gift shall fall!"
Than the gift it seemeth better,
Welcome as a comrade's call.

"Friend, I greet thee"—this the writing;
"God will know for whom I plead,"
"Blessings on thy head inviting,
"May my God be thine indeed!

"Lonely by my hearth fire sitting,
"It has seemed to ease my care,
"That my aged hands are knitting
"Something for a sailor's wear.

"Three sons on the ocean sailing
"Long have left me here alone;
"Where the wild north winds are wailing,
"And the fiord waters moan;
"But of all I have a token,
"Save of Karl my youngest one;
"Ah! that silence is unbroken—
"And the years so swiftly run!

"Twenty-one years since he left me;
"Oh! it seems so long ago!
"Death must surely have bereft me,
"Karl could not forget me so!
"So I say, and here I ask thee,
"Friend, to whom my gift may come;
"Think of Karl—with this I task thee.
"If you meet him, send him home."

Tears the sailor's eyes have blinded,
Scarcely can he read the close;
Little does he need to find it,
Well his mother's name he knows.
All the long years rise before him
Of her loving, patient wait,
Tempests of remorse sweep o'er him,
Yet, thank God! 'tis not too late!

Part III.

The short winter day is over, and the stars begin to shine,
Every moment makes them brighter, casts upon each snow-clad pine
Light the southern heavens know not, lovely as the rays new born,
O'er a world unfallen rising, on the first creation morn.

"New Year's Day," the mother sigheth, "New Year, and no tidings yet,
"Death the Healer, the Revealer, he alone will calm this fret;
"God's good will is best—I know it—Karl is safe within his hand,
"Safe in living or in dying, safe on sea, and safe on land."

So she says, and yet she sigheth, human hopes are hard to part,
Well the Heavenly Father knows it—pities the poor throbbing heart.
Karl is standing on the threshold—the old love light in his eyes,
"Mother, kiss me and forgive me"—'tis his well-known voice that cries.

"Mother, kiss me and forgive me!" just as in the boyhood days,
With his sweet eyes raised in pleading, when she chid his wilful ways;
He has wandered—has forgotten; but her weeping time is o'er,
For he whispers, as he clasps her, "I shall never leave thee more!"

New Year's Greeting.

1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.

Each year that shows more clearly
Earth yields no lasting home,
Reveals to faith more brightly,
The better things to come.

Each day that severs from thee
Some link of earthly bond,
Joins closer ties that bind thee
To endless life beyond.

Now faith writes over all things
A full and glad "content,"
Knowing his hand hath led thee
In all the way ye went.

Knowing the onward journey
Shall yet reveal his love,
"Goodness and mercy" leading
To fuller bliss above.

The Birth of the New Year.

Another year is come,
Another new life given
For thee to train on earth
For vaster life in heaven.

From out the buried past
It shines, a ray of light;
Unsullied are its wings,
But tremulous its flight.

Ah! whither shall it tend?
Say, who shall guide its way—
Through trackless realms of night,
O'er scorching plains of day?

Upward, celestial beam!
On wings that never tire,
Consumed with fervent life,
Fed by an inborn fire.

To God who gave thee birth,
Aspire, ascend, in flame—
A burning, shining light,
To glorify his name.

Lost Years.

A WORD OF HOPE.

(See article by Rev. F. C. Spurr in last issue of The Christian.)

Look not behind upon thy wasted years,
'Twere vain to shed for them thy bitterest tears;
Those years are fled; the shadows they have cast
Upon thy heart need not for ever last.

Thy sins confessed, behold the Lamb of God!
'Twas for thy sins that death's dark vale He trod;
Thy sins atoned for, at the bar of Heaven,
Thou shalt acquitted be, and all forgiven!

Thy youth is past, thy manhood flies apace;
Let heavenly visions cheer life's evening race;
Look up to Jesus, He thy steps will lead;
Let Him control thy every word and deed,

Yet not alone for safety shouldst thou seek,
But ever list what Christ thy Lord shall speak.
Thy spirit hath He blessed with light divine,
Trim then thy lamp, nor let it cease to shine.

Sow Gospel seed, the harvest Heaven will reap;
Go soothe the mourners, weep with those that weep,
And should sad stricken hearts appeal for aid,
Let not the hand of mercy be delayed.

Let youthful hearts thy kindly greetings share,
Nor let thy brow a shade of sadness wear;
God's sunshine will our hearts with gladness fill,
As 'tis our joy to do his holy will.

Still keep thine eye upon the heavenly goal,
And God will pour his blessing on thy soul;
Look not behind thee—seek not to retrace
The dreary past, and faith shall win the race.

The Last Nights of 1897.

The committee of the Midnight Meeting Movement held meetings for fallen at Notting Hill, Borough, King's Cross, Victoria, and Whitechapel on the last nights of 1897. Five hundred young women and girls were got together, fed, and lovingly addressed by the Society's voluntary workers. Four good cases were the result of the effort, the whole neighbourhoods were missioned, and the Gospel message proclaimed to all, young and old alike.

Christian Workers in Conference.

In response to the invitation of the Y.M.C.A., a company of Christian workers gathered in Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon for prayer and conference at the opening of the year. Mr. M. H. Hodder presided, and addressed some encouraging words of greeting and cheer to his fellow workers.

A number of friends led in prayer or bore testimony to the faithfulness of God in connection with their work in the past year. Mr. W. R. Lane spoke on Christ's three words to Peter, "Thou shalt catch men," "Strengthen thy brethren," and "Feed my sheep." These exhortations comprise the whole of Christian work. Mr. Lane emphasized the importance of caring for and restoring backsliders.

The Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird.

THE honoured name of Kinnaird is linked with the Evangelical activities of the century. Various members of the family have been intimately associated with some of the most important institutions which sprang out of the great revivals of 1859-60. The late Lord Kinnaird is well remembered as a leader in Christian work and an able and frequent chairman at missionary meetings. His wife, the late Lady Kinnaird, one of the foremost Christian workers of her time, has left two monuments—in the Y.W.C.A., so potent for good amongst young working women, and the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, now so happily reaching the secluded women of India with the story of the Gospel. Her daughters, following in her steps, are devoting their lives to unwearying labours in these and other directions; while her son, whose portrait is herewith given, is fully recognised as one of the busiest and most energetic workers of to-day.

ARTHUR FITZGERALD KINNAIRD, eleventh Baron Kinnaird, was born in 1847, and received his education at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. The earnest solicitude of his parents for the higher interests of their children—as indicated by Dr. Donald Fraser in his memoir of Mary Jane, Lady Kinnaird—had the happiest result in the development in their son and heir of a strong sterling character which has moulded his whole career. Whilst sympathising heartily in all evangelical endeavour, he has always concentrated his personal force and energy on certain branches of effort which he has made peculiarly his own.

He married in 1875, Mary Alma Victoria, daughter of Sir Andrew Agnew, of Lochnaw Castle, Wigtonshire, who has proved a true helpmate in many paths of usefulness. This union has been blessed with three sons and two daughters. He succeeded to the estate and title in 1887, on the death of his honoured father.

It is interesting to learn that Lord Kinnaird first caught the enthusiasm for Christian service—like so many other leading workers—in the Ragged School. About thirty-five years ago he entered the old and long-vanished York-place School, near Exeter Hall, where he rendered good service as a teacher of rough and unruly boys. His gift for dealing with this difficult class led to his taking a deeper interest in their condition. Soon, in his practical fashion, he made himself familiar with their life and special temptations. Ere long his discoveries resulted in the opening of a home for homeless working boys, the precursor of the present Homes for Working Boys in London, and in the formation of a Lads' Institute in Castle-street, and afterwards in Long Acre. Amongst his earliest co-workers for boys was Mr. Quintin Hogg, who frankly avows that his famous Polytechnic, with its innumerable activities, found origin in the Long Acre Institute.

Out of this again came Lord Kinnaird's close association with shoeblack brigades. These brigades had already been started by "Rob Roy" (John Macgregor), and Mr. Martin Ware, but the evident necessity for finding some such outlet for a certain class of boys—too handless and untrained to earn their own living, without some training such as is provided in the Shoeblacks' Homes—led the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird to take up the shoeblack idea heartily. In this way he became associated with the "Reds," that is, the City Brigade of Shoeblacks, and ever since he has been one of the leaders in the work at the Saffron-hill Home.

Besides this personal effort, he has taken full share in the more public Christian and philanthropic movements of recent years. He was well to the front, for example, during the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1875, and again in 1884, to London. An active member of the United Committee, he spared neither cost nor pains to further the arrangements of the sustained Gospel campaign, while in the inquiry-room he was one of the hardest workers, especially among young men.

At present he is particularly identified with the Ragged School Union, the Y.W.C.A., and the Y.M.C.A., though he is president or treasurer of hosts of other societies. To these three great organisations he gives much time and labour, and indeed seems ever at the call of secretaries all over the land for annual meetings and conferences. It is well-nigh bewildering at times to find him presiding one evening at a ragged school meeting in London, the next at a Y.M.C.A. in the north of Scotland, and the following day perhaps in the Midlands. How he gets through it all, considering that he is a very busy business man, with large responsibilities as one of the partners of a large banking concern, is simply amazing. He is, moreover, an athlete, a keen footballer, and President of the Football Association.

In Scotland Lord Kinnaird is a Presbyterian. In London he is an Episcopalian—strongly Evangelical, and profoundly concerned in the simplicity and purity of the Reformed faith. He is trustee of a number of important livings to secure the appointment of faithful incumbents. Personally, he has a soul above denominationalism.

His Lordship is a warm supporter of foreign missions; but his interest in India is peculiar. The Zenana Mission is to him a mother's sacred legacy, and since her death he has taken a large share of the responsibilities of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission upon him. During his present tour in India he hopes to visit the stations of this Society, while, of course, in his own large-hearted, catholic spirit, he is cheering and aiding all sorts of workers who come in his way. Isolated missionaries, as well as Y.M.C.A., S.V.U., and S.S. workers, have already been delighted by a visit from his lordship. He and Lady Kinnaird hope to leave on their return home about the end of February.

In many public questions concerning our Eastern Empire, Lord Kinnaird has rendered effective service from his place in the House of Lords—notably in connection with the revival of the C.D. Acts and the recent famine relief measures. A question put by him in the House was the means of quickening Government action in the early stages of the famine; and later on, when the distress became great, he exerted his personal influence to good purpose, and was the means of raising a large amount of money for the relief of the sufferers. Nor is his interest confined to India. Many missionary societies in other lands have been helped by him.

In certain home movements—such as the Purity Alliance and Vigilance Associations—he is, moreover, warmly concerned. The present crusade against gambling and other social evils has found in him a strong supporter, so also the excellent work of the Christian Colportage Association and of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. But, indeed, a mere enumeration of the good works in which he is interested would prove tedious to the reader. His genial kindliness, frank and unassuming demeanour, and warm sympathy with every undertaking which commends itself to his keenly practical judgment, have endeared him to thousands of Christian workers at home and abroad.

Some mention must be made of his beautiful seat in Perthshire. Rossie Priory has become of late years a recognised rallying point for leading Christian men. Thither have come the prince of evangelists, Mr. Moody, and eminent servants of Christ, such as Sir S. A. Blackwood, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, the late Dr. John Bennett, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and Dr. Pentecost. During the season there are generally some such men of note to be found resting and working at Rossie, where Lady Kinnaird is a most genial and thoughtful hostess. Lord Kinnaird's relations with his tenants and dependents are of the happiest kind. It is a model estate in many respects, and the good feeling between landlord and people is most evident. Evangelistic and tent work is actively carried on.

Aphorisms on Man.

WHO seeks those that are greater than himself, enjoying their greatness, and forgetting his greatest qualities in their greater ones, is already truly great.

We see more when others converse among themselves, than when they speak to us.

Ask yourself of everyone with whom you are concerned, What can I give him? What is he in want of? What is he capable of accepting? What would he accept of? If you can answer these questions, you know at least three-fourths of his character.

There is no mortal truly wise and restless at the same time; wisdom is the repose of minds.

Who writes what he should tell, and dares not tell what he writes, is either like a wolf in sheep's clothing, or like a sheep in a wolf's skin.

LAVATER.

The Week of Prayer.

WEST END MEETINGS.

FOR many years it has been the custom to devote the first week of the New Year to special prayer for the Church and the world; and in connection therewith united gatherings are held wherever Christians are to be found. In London meetings of this kind are being held during the present week at many centres of Christian activity. The West End meetings, arranged by the Evangelical Alliance, are being held day by day in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross.

On Monday Colonel Douglas Jones presided, the subject for prayer being Humiliation and Confession.—For want of conformity to the mind of Christ; for disloyalty to the truth; for misuse and neglect of precious privileges; for lack of courage in witnessing for Christ. Thanksgiving and Praise.—For revealed truth; for the dispensation of the Holy Spirit; for the promises of God; for Great revivals, amid persecutions, in China and other parts of the mission field. Prayer.—That Christ's reign may extend in the hearts of all his people, and throughout the world.

Dr. J. Monro Gibson dealt with these topics, showing that while confession of sin is at all times fitting it may regarded as peculiarly so at the opening of the New Year. It is true that we believe that the sins of 1897 are forgiven, being washed away by the blood of Christ, and that we in Him are pardoned and accepted; but there are the sins of the Church and of the nation which we have to deplore. Not merely open and flagrant sins, such as the putrefying sores, the wounds, and festering evils, social and moral, which corrupt society and endanger public safety. Amongst these the speaker noted the pitiful continuance of the great strike, which is working widespread ruin. So the wide world o'er there is sin, with its bitter fruits in sorrow and perplexity. Persecutions in Armenia, unrest in the East, complication in the Far East, famines in India, jealousy among the nations—only God can touch the secret source and cure the malady from which these evils spring. Nor is this all, for turning to the Church, what do we find? Worldly conformity; self-seeking; the heaping up of wealth. Alas! there are many such evils to be deplored inside the Church. Referring to the unity of Christians, Dr. Gibson spoke of the Free Churches Evangelical Council, and the efforts being made on the lines of the Evangelical Alliance to further loving and loyal fellowship in Christ.

The subject of prayer on Tuesday was:—

The Church Universal.—Prayer: That clearer and truer views of the spiritual nature of the Church, as revealed in the New Testament, may prevail; that believers may yield themselves wholly to the Lord, and through the influence of the Holy Ghost, grow in the spiritual life; that all ministers of the Gospel may be filled with the Spirit of Christ; and that true unity and fellowship may be increasingly realised.

The Chairman, Mr. W. H. Seagram, read Eph. iv. 1-16, and Rev. i. 12-20, and urged the supreme importance of the subject suggested for prayer. If men are to be blessed it must be through a united and revived Church. Rev. Charles A. Fox and various others led in prayer.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, dealing with the needs of the Church, took four points—the spirituality of the Church, the spirituality of individual members of that Church, the spirituality of the ministry conferred on the Church by her great Head, and the result of that spirituality in manifested unity in the Spirit because of vital union in Christ. On these lines he expounded and applied the teaching of the Apostle in his letter to the saints at Ephesus, warning his hearers that Paul is dealing with the Church and not the churches. The intense spirituality of the Church at large must depend upon the vitality of the members who compose it. If these be cold and worldly, the whole tone of the Church will be lowered, and true unity in Christ will be obscured. In proportion as we get back to God's view of these truths will we realise and display the vital unity of all believers in Christ, and that altogether apart from mere denominational association. In proportion as we are a spiritual people in that proportion will we touch and influence the world around us.

Border Counties.—The annual report of evangelistic work in the Border Counties' Tent shows good services in various villages in Berwickshire. Messrs. William Burnside and Richard Hill have been the evangelists, and their Gospel testimony appears to have been followed by many cheering results. The secretary of the united committee is Mr. W. G. Turnbull, Spittal, Hawick,

A New Year Example.

"NOW they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify," etc. (2 Chron. xxix. 17). Hezekiah commenced his reign very wisely by sanctifying the Priests, cleansing the Temple, and restoring the worship of Jehovah. God first was the principle upon which he acted, and blessing was the result.

If saved we are the temples of the Holy Ghost, to be filled with his Presence, Power, and Praise, and so fitted for his Service, but through careless neglect the Lord's Holy Temple becomes polluted and unfit for use.

Hezekiah commenced to put the Temple right on the first day of the first month; this was a good start for the New Year. This experience will help us to see the importance of a good start with God, if we would have 1898 to be a year of blessing. There are four links in this chain of grace:—

1.—The Lord's Sanctuary (v. 18).

The lamps out, the door shut, the song ceased, and the service stopped. Picture of man unrenewed, and God outside.

2.—The Lord's Salvation (v. 24).

They cleansed the temple, but they must have their own hearts cleansed too. Therefore, follow the offerings. The Sin Offering, Sin question settled; Burnt Offering, Self question settled; and Thank Offering, Service question settled. The Divine remedy is always close at hand for us. The cleansing blood (1 John i. 7), the purifying word (1 Peter i. 22), and the consecrating grace (1 Thess. v. 23).

3.—The Lord's Song (v. 27).

"And when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began." The Lord has graciously linked three things together—Salvation and Song (Psa. xl. 2, 3), Service and Song (Is. xii. 2-6), and Suffering and Song (Acts xvi. 25). Let us praise the Lord.

4.—The Lord's Service (v. 35).

"So the service of the House was set in order." Encouraged by the King, restored by Grace, and inspired by Song, they were fitted to serve the Lord. Let us serve the Lord with Grace (Acts xx. 19), Gratitude (1 Chron. xxviii. 9), and Gladness (Ps. c. 2).

The Song was the public expression of their Obedience (v. 25), Worship (v. 27), Union (v. 28), Gladness (v. 30), and Gratitude (v. 31). The Service was the fruit of prepared hearts by the Holy Spirit.

Winchester.

The Silver Star Society has, during the past year, conducted over 500 meetings in East, North, South, and West London, Silvertown, Yorkshire, and South Essex. The Marquis of Northampton writes: "The voluntary members are devoting themselves to the service of Jesus Christ by carrying his Gospel into all parts of London, and by their readiness to assist all Christian agencies. They labour with word and song in the streets, and conduct Gospel and temperance lantern services. They distribute wholesome literature, give clothes to the needy, feed the hungry, and visit the sick and dying." Much more could be done if the necessary help is given, and I, therefore, earnestly appeal for generous contributions."—The Hon. Secretary, Mr. W. S. Robbins, 14, Little Ilford-lane, Manor Park, E.

A Seventy-five Years' Record.

THE useful work which, for seventy-five years, the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland has been doing amongst the Irish people in making known the simplicity of the Gospel and winning a way for the Scriptures of truth, surely entitles this Society to cordial recognition as one of the most valuable agencies for good in the sister isle.

From a booklet issued in connection with "the Diamond Jubilee" of this Institution we learn that as far back as 1822 a Christian gentleman, who had his heart deeply stirred as he saw the degraded moral condition of the peasantry of Ireland, called a meeting of distinguished men to see what could be done to give these untaught masses the Gospel, which he rightly regarded as the only remedy which could uplift and save them. The result of the meeting was the starting of this Society.

From the first the most prayerful care has been taken to secure the right agents for this purpose. Whatever the society into which they may enter, whatever the class of persons with whom they are brought into contact, they prove themselves simple Scripture readers, and count this as their only object; in fact, it may be said of them, "This one thing I do." The committee are confident that the work of the Society has been nothing short of a national benefit during the troublous times through which of late years Ireland has been passing. Recent ecclesiastical changes have seriously affected many of the remoter districts, and, as appears from letters lately published, have rendered the need of such workers as these humble Scripture readers more urgent than ever. For example:—

The Archbishop of Dublin, who has, like his honoured and beloved predecessors, thrown in his lot with the Society, has been most anxious that agents should be sent to important districts in the south.

A rector in the county Wexford made a strong appeal for the services of a Scripture reader. In a letter to the honorary secretary of the Society, he says: "The district is simply enormous, and quite beyond the working powers of a single clergyman. Need is pressing of cottage meetings, and, above all, of teaching children the Holy Scriptures. I have under my care four coastguard and light stations, and twenty Protestant seamen, their wives and families in some cases remote from all spiritual influences. There is no Church school, and the children are attending Roman Catholic schools, from which I am excluded, and the scattered nature of the parish prevents my undertaking more work. At the visitation his Grace Archbishop Peacocke recommended me to write to you, and mention him as advising the procuring of a Scripture reader for this parish, and he hoped the Society would assist me. I trust your committee will give the matter their favourable consideration. I may mention that I do not receive one penny from the Government for looking after the coastguards." An experienced Scripture reader was sent to aid this case of need, but others equally as pressing are left without agents owing to hampered funds.

The Rector of Innishannon, co. Cork, says:—"The reader works over seven parishes, where there are ten Roman Catholics to one Protestant. He walks, on an average, seven miles every week-day, and visits, on an average, eight families daily, of whom more than half are Roman Catholics, besides innumerable conversations with those he meets on the way. I have sole charge of three of the seven parishes referred to, and these three parishes, before disestablishment, were worked by four clergymen. This fact alone shows the advantages to the Protestant community of the presence of a reader in our midst, while, as regards the Roman Catholics, there is a growing disposition manifested by them to listen to what is said in a brotherly spirit, and a rebuff from them is a thing almost unknown to our reader. Often as he tells them of the One Mediator and Redeemer, they respond in a manner and disclose an awakening to the truth—which, had I space to record it, would surprise and rejoice all readers. It is to prevent the reader's removal from amongst us that I appeal."

These testimonies form the strongest possible plea for the extension of the operations of this Society, so that Scripture-readers may be sent forth all over the land. An earnest call is being made for liberal aid at the present time by the hon. secretary, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

For Young People

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

A Good Start.

THIS is to wish all my young friends a very happy and bright New Year. Many of you have been kind enough to send me Christmas and New Year cards which have pleased me very much. Of course you know I do not expect remembrances of this sort, because my kind helpers and myself enjoy the weekly work we do for you; but it is none the less pleasant for us to feel that you count us among your friends at these seasons of the year.

I wonder if any of you have been making resolutions to this year. I expect Father Time heard a good many of you doing so on Friday night and Saturday morning. And I hope God heard it too, as some of you solemnly knelt before Him and asked forgiveness for the past and grace for the future.

Well, dear children, I hope his eyes have not seen any of these broken already. It is a good thing thus to dedicate your lives to God, not only now but all through the year.

I have come across young people sometimes who began the year so well, but somehow they did not get very far before they were in sad trouble with bad tempers, hasty words, and unkind thoughts or deeds. And then they thought they had better wait till their next birthday or next New Year's Day "came round" before they earnestly "began again."

This is a mistake. Life is not a circle, but a road, and each year is like a milestone along its course. You can never come to the same point a second time. If you fall, get up at once and go on again, and do not wait for some imaginary starting-point to "come round again."

A LITTLE BOAT-RACE.

One day I saw some boys racing their boats across a pond, one or two splendid model yachts being among them. They were arranged in a line and, at a given signal, all the little vessels "started fair." Presently one began to get ahead of the rest until it seemed certain to win the race. But, alas! a gust of wind blew it near a piece of wood, which got entangled in its rigging; and, instead of sailing straight on, as it should have done, it circled round and round, until all the others passed it, and it had to be fished out with a long pole.

What a sad end to a promising career! But there are many young lives that are spoiled like that by becoming entangled in some evil thing, which turns them out of their course. "Ye did run well. Who did hinder you?" said St. Paul to the Galatians (v. 7). What then shall we do? "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus" (Heb. xii. 1).

Ask the Saviour to help you,
Comfort, strengthen, and keep you;
Look ever to Jesus,
He will carry you through.

Then you will know what it is to have really what I wish you all—

"A HAPPY NEW YEAR."

UNCLE TOM.

From a Mother in America.

DEAR UNCLE TOM,—You must feel very much encouraged to know the work you have been engaged in this past year. I will also thank you personally for the help the Bible Searchers have been to my little ones. Indeed, they know a great deal more of the Bible than ever I did at their age, though my dear parents had family worship, morning and evening, and we children had to memorise our whole Sunday-school lesson every week. I pray that this work may go deeper than mere knowledge, and that many of these dear little ones will be led to follow Jesus.

The Starless Crown.*

WE stood before a city's walls most glorious to behold;
We passed through gates of glistening pearl, o'er streets of purest gold.
It needed not the sun by day, the silver moon by night—
The glory of the Lord was there, the Lamb Himself its light.

No tribute of immortal souls unto my Lord I brought;
Salvation for myself had been the highest boon I sought.
Lowly I bowed before his throne, o'erjoyed that I at last
Had reached the goal of all my hopes—that earth at length was past.

But oh! how solemnly He asked, "Where is the diadem
That ought to sparkle on thy brow, adorned with many a gem?
I know thou hast believed on Me, and life through Me is thine,
But where are all those radiant stars that in thy crown should shine?

"It was not meet for thee to tread the way of life alone;
But that the clear and shining light which round thy footsteps shone
Should guide some other weary feet to My bright home of rest;
And thus, in blessing those around, thou hadst thyself been blest."

[* From THE STARLESS CROWN AND OTHER POEMS. By J. L. H. (Elliot Stock. 2s.) A collection of poems which will find a warm welcome. Some of the pieces have already gained a front place in Christian song, while others certainly merit attention as tuneful in rhythm and poetic in spirit.]

Something to do in the Holidays.

MISS PERKS, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, thanks my nieces and nephews for the welcome parcel of blotters, and says:—

Our soldiers are so very, very glad of them, and by giving them we can get into conversation about the Lord Jesus. The texts on the blotters give us a nice start. Many hundreds of soldiers on their way to India spent Christmas on the sea, poor fellows, thinking of their homes, and many of them wishing they were back. Please send us some more when you are able.

Personal.

Many thanks to my nephews and nieces for their pretty cards and good wishes for Christmas and the New Year.

Your old friend UNCLE TED asks me to thank some of you who kindly remembered him with messages and cards, and to assure you that he by no means forgets you.

JESSIE ALEN, L. BERRY, H. J. CHENEY, and M. L. RICKARDS are eligible for the prize competition. I could not send them postcards as no addresses were given. ALICE COOKSEY.—Unfortunately you have only had eight papers correct. CHARLES PARKIN.—Very glad to hear from you, and to know that you are starting the Searcher again. DORA E. WALLACE.—Your paper is very neatly written this week. Are you among the group which heads your paper? MARY BECK.—Many happy returns. BOB BROWNE.—Yours was indeed good news. May God have you in his keeping. OLIVE ROBERTSON.—I am glad you have been successful in getting a new member. RONALD STUDD.—Your name was in the correct list for No. 100 Bible Searcher. You must keep a better lookout. ROSETTA SHERWIN.—Yours was a nice long interesting letter. The number of prizes you and your sisters received is a proof you have been working hard this last term.—VERA AND FRANK SJÖSTRÖM (New York).—You must not send more than two papers at a time, and in every case have each paper signed by a parent or teacher.

Christ's Love and Pity.

I LOVE to think of Jesus, the blessed Son of God,
Who for our sakes came down from heaven his Father's blest abode,
And dwelt in human form on earth, and felt its keenest woe,
And died at last a cruel death because He loved us so.

I love to think how all his life was spent in doing good,
And how He felt for others' griefs, and fully understood
The need of every human heart that sought his power to bless,
And how He longed that all should come and find in Him their rest.

I love to think how once when He was passing on his way
He saw a poor blind man who sat and begged from day to day.
And Christ, who only lived to bless, in mercy gave him sight,
And showed him how He came from God to be this dark world's light.

It must have grieved the gentle heart of Jesus when He knew
That they had cast the poor man out because he held Him true.
For He in love had come to earth to do his Father's will,
And many a blessing He bestowed on those who wrought Him ill.

And still it grieves Him when He sees his wondrous love despised,
And blessings He has died to give by us are lightly prized,
O, how our hearts should burn with shame that we could ever be Unmindful of the One who died for us on Calvary.

It seems so strange that we should be afraid to own his name
When 'twas to save our guilty souls a ransom He became,
For us He bore sin's heavy load that we might be forgiven,
And share with Him the glory of his Father's home in heaven.

But Jesus knows our weakness, and He knows we fain would be More true and steadfast in his cause and serve Him faithfully;
And He will give us grace and power to do his blessed will,
If we but wholly yield to Him these hearts of ours to fill.

"The Beginning of Christ's Ministry."—Matthew iv. 17-25.

Golden Text: "The people which sat in darkness saw great light."

Introduction.

THE portion of the life of Jesus we are about to study occurred a year and a-half after the temptation. The intervening period had been spent in Judea, and the events of it are recorded chiefly by John (i-iv.); but these were only the opening portions of Christ's work. During the Galilean ministry (which our lesson enters upon) there were rapid developments and definite results attending his efforts. This should be an encouragement to us to persevere with our small beginnings. Teacher should emphasise this patient waiting through thirty-one years on the part of Jesus. The greater the work the longer the preparation necessary.

Galilee was a commercial province—it became a proverb: "If a person wishes to be rich let him go North (to Galilee); if he wishes to be wise let him go South (to Jerusalem)." These people would not be so much bound by the religious traditions as would those who lived near the metropolis of Jewish learning.

The Message of Jesus (17).—"The kingdom of heaven" means the rule of Christ in the hearts of men—every unruly passion subdued and reined by this new king, and every faculty of body, soul, and spirit working under his control. When the kingdom has been established in us there will naturally be a kingdom established around us. This is the order of Christ: Men try to compel allegiance to a king by force or other external authority, but Jesus seeks to regenerate the heart first of all, fully assured that the evil institution will pass away. Illustration.—Take away the craving from the heart of the drunkard and your publichouses will die a natural death.

How to Enter the Kingdom.

Repent. It is impossible to forgive one who is not sorry for the wrong he has done, and promises change of life. Christ cannot rule until we offer Him the throne.

The Call for Helpers (18-22).

Simon and Andrew had been followers of Christ more than a year ago (John i. 35), but they had gone back to their ordinary duties again, perhaps Christ was not ready for them as workers until now. The circumstances are related more fully by Luke (v. 1-11). Teacher should read this. James and John sons of Salome, who was a sister of Mary, so that these were cousins of Jesus. James was the first martyr apostle; and John wrote the Gospel, Epistles and Revelation.

Whom Christ Calls.

The busy people—Christ does not want idlers.

Those who are ready to leave all to follow Him.

Those who are willing to help others—to fish for men.

The world is the sea. The Gospel is the line or net. The purpose is to draw them to the shores of eternal life. This demands patience, love, and self-sacrifice. In the after-days of persecution this idea had so permeated the Christian community, that the picture of a fish became a sign for them. To draw a picture on the pavement or to mention the word "fish" in conversation was evidence that the one who did so was a follower of Jesus.

Christ's Mode of Work (23-25).

He was on an evangelistic tour through Galilee, scattering the Seed of the Kingdom—telling of God's fatherly care—drawing men into the new Kingdom. His work in the synagogue would be explaining the Scriptures. His fame soon spread and by means of the traders who went northwards, it overflowed all Syria. Wherever He went they brought out their sick. All the needy came to Him, and none were sent away empty-handed.

Jesus Doing the Same Work To-day.

Preaching, teaching, and healing the sick. All our hospitals are produced and maintained by the Christ spirit. His love brings strength to the weak, hope to the despairing, and home to the lost.

> The healing of his seamless dress
> Is by our beds of pain;
> We touch Him in life's throng and press,
> And we are whole again.

The Evangelistic Field

REV. J. McNEILL IN HAWICK.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

THE evangelist began a twelve days' mission in Hawick, on the evening of Sabbath, December 12. The place, put at his disposal by the committee for night meetings, was the Exchange Hall, in the centre of the town, said to accommodate about 1800, and when packed to contain about 2000. At the first service it was crowded, and many could not get admission. As the mission proceeded the interest grew and spread. In every factory, and throughout the whole town, the meetings became the subject of conversation. The district around was also moved, for men were seen, night after night, from places distant six and even eight miles. Some came from longer distances.

On Sabbath, December 19, two meetings were held, one for women at four in the afternoon, which was densely crowded, and to which many could not get admission. A crowded gathering of men only followed later the same evening. Mr. McNeill's subject this evening was the swimming of the axe head (2 Kings vi. 1-7). His address occupied about an hour and three-quarters in delivery, but the audience listened with rapt attention, and at the close many seemed unwilling to leave. Some of his appeals seemed to fall with overwhelming spiritual power. Christian workers went home thanking God for the message and the audience.

Afternoon meetings were held in the East Bank U.P. Church from Tuesday to Friday, during the second week of the mission, and the lower part of the building was nearly full every day.

Many who came to hear Mr. McNeill at first full of prejudices became intensely interested, and confessed that they received spiritual quickening. The great attraction was the preaching. As his hearers sat before him, night after night, they were thrilled with the thought that the great centre to which they were drawn was the Saviour, and that the preacher's work was to get each of them, there and then, to yield entirely to Him.

The attendance at the evening meetings during the last week was very large. The concluding service was held on the evening of Friday, December 24, when the hall was crowded, notwithstanding other attractions in the town. Before the address, Mr. Stewart, of St. Andrew's Free Church, on behalf of the ministers who took part in the services, expressed great gratitude to Mr. McNeill for the work he had done in Hawick. The audience responded very heartily when it was said that they would be glad to get another visit from the evangelist.

A United Thanksgiving Service was held by the ministers in the Exchange Hall on the following Sabbath evening, when there was a large attendance. Rev. W. A. P. Johnman, of the Free Church, who presided, referred to the Mission, and an address was given by Rev. E. Robson, Glasgow. Other ministers also took part. It was calculated that about 700 people stood up to testify that they had got spiritual good from the Mission. A very considerable number availed themselves of an opportunity given to individuals to testify to blessing received. Some of the testimonies were very interesting. Many engaged in Christ's work are devoutly thankful to God for the impulse given to religious life by Mr. McNeill's visit to Hawick.

In the Hawick News, of December 24, there is a very appreciative reference to Mr. McNeill's Mission. The writer says:—

"It is not too much to say that Mr. McNeill has by the apostolic force and fervour of his addresses, quickened the spiritual life, and deepened the religious convictions of the community. And this he has done, not by means of side issues, but by his powerful expositions of the great central truths of Christianity. Novel and attractive his methods may be, but there is nothing new in the doctrines he teaches, yet few have listened unmoved to his passionate declamations, delivered in a voice of thunder which almost makes the rafters ring. Many will remember to their dying day some of his tremendous bursts, such as that in which he shouted, 'When—I—see—the—blood,' pausing between each word in the most effective manner. No one ever came to Hawick with such a mountain of misrepresentation to remove; but he did it, and now one hears very little about the 'clerical mountebank' and the 'sensation monger,' except among those who have never taken the trouble to go and hear him."

THE WELSH FORWARD MOVEMENT.

A twelve days' mission at East Moors Hall, Cardiff, has lately been held by Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver, who captured the hearts of their hearers right away. Mr. Bewley Weaver's addresses are adapted to all sorts and conditions of men, and his tremendous earnestness sweeps everything before it. Mr. Frank Weaver's singing was much appreciated throughout the mission. The pathetic rendering of his solos made a strong appeal to the hardest heart.

At the close of the first day a number went to the inquiry room under deep conviction, and it was the joy of the workers to see them returning to their homes rejoicing. Although the weather militated greatly against the mission, good congregations came together every night. During the mission over one hundred professed submission to Christ, the greater part being young people connected with the Sunday-school and choir. Thus the teachers have had their cups running over with the joy of harvest.

This was the first visit of these brothers to the halls of the Welsh Forward Movement, but we hope ere long that the other thirty-three centres of the movement may have a visit from them.

JOHN PUGH, General Superintendent.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

December is generally a broken month, and the indifferent weather has not helped the work among the masses of East London. Mr. J. S. HARRISON took the Sundays, and his earnest addresses, full of originality, were attended with encouraging results, many finding their way to the enquiring-room. His morning addresses dealt largely with the life-power and responsibilities of Christians, and believers were quickened and strengthened in the faith.

The week nights were taken for the first fortnight by Mrs. Carrie Smith of Burnley; and the second by Miss Hallie Q. Brown, of Wilberforce College, Ohio, U.S.A. It has been found that at this time of the year many are induced to sign the temperance pledge. Consequently the week nights were used for Gospel temperance, and not a few signatures were recorded in favour of temperance.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Rev. J. BENNETT ANDERSON has finished a seven weeks' mission to railwaymen at Crewe and Derby. Besides preaching every day in the large hall of the Derby Y.M.C.A., he addressed eleven morning breakfast meetings, reaching in this way nearly 6000 Midland railwaymen. Each service at the Locomotive Department was attended by over 400 men, and on the carriage side nearly 700 were crowded in. The interest was very great. The work appeared to be very fruitful among the unsaved during the three weeks' mission in Crewe. A good foundation work has been done in both places, and many believers are praising God that their spiritual life has been deepened.

Mr. NED WRIGHT finished on Thursday a month's work at Kilburn Hall, which has proved a time of deep ploughing. Quite a mixed company have attended, and the numbers have increased meeting by meeting. The presence of God was undoubtedly felt, and some have turned to the Lord.

Mr. W. MONRO COLLINGS has concluded an eight days' mission at Leigh, Tonbridge, and God is praised for heart-searching words given. Confession of Christ was made by some, among whom were two sons of Christian parents.

On Lord's Day evening Mr. T. W. CANNING completed a three weeks' mission at Rothesay, in the Ladeside Mission Hall, connected with the West Free Church. The hall on Sabbath evenings was filled. Throughout the mission, from the very first night, there were rich tokens of blessing, especially amongst the poorer classes. In two or three instances the converts had been much addicted to drink. The workers appreciated very much this visit, and pray that much fruit may yet accrue from the special services. The closing address was given in the West Free Church, when there was a very large attendance. Prayer is requested for a two weeks' mission which Mr. Canning begins at Dawlish, Devonshire, on January 9. H. M.

A mission has been conducted at St. Paul's, Skegness, by Mr. HENRY THORNE. Two impressive meetings were also held for children only, several of whom stood up and confessed a desire to live for Christ. The mission has been much blessed to believers, while sinners have also been converted and a widespread spirit of awakening created. On the closing day a final gathering was held for thanksgiving and experience, when, among others, eight men, one after the other, testified to the power of the salvation of Christ. In the work of the mission Mr. Thorne was assisted by Rev. Geo. and Mrs. Goodchild and an efficient band of workers. G. G.

A mission held at Snodland by Mr. JAMES EYRES has been a most blessed success, and night after night many have pressed their way to the inquiry-room. Many prayers have been answered, and there is great joy in consequence. Most of the cases were young people, and a large number of the elder scholars of the Sunday-school have decided for Christ. Mr. Eyres knows how to deal with men, and through long years of experience understands their difficulties and knows how to meet them. A. W. G.

Much blessing is resting on Mr. MANTON SMITH in America. Many instances of the Holy Spirit's power have been witnessed at the various towns visited. At Camden, New Jersey, the hand of God was marvellously manifested. The like result was also witnessed in Philadelphia at the Y.M.C.A. in Chestnut-street, and Dr. Worden's Teachers' Preparation Class. Mr. Smith also visited the Hon. John Wanamaker's Bible-class at the Bethany Presbyterian Church, where about 4000 persons are gathered weekly.

Very interesting meetings have been held in Hinsdale, N.H., U.S.A., by Rev. E. P. HAMMOND. Much prayer had been offered, and in all the meetings sinners have been converted. Parents have rejoiced in the salvation of their children, and teachers have seen their scholars coming to Christ. God was moving upon the hearts of the people with power. Four services were held on Sunday, at the close of which it was found that many were under deep conviction of sin. These meetings have continued with deep interest and many have been led to rejoice in the love of Jesus. Mr. Hammond was to start at Brooklyn about the 1st of January.

MR. J. J. SIMS, during January, in Bristol.
MRS. E. L. BAEYERTZ, Huddersfield, in January.
GIPSY SMITH, Newcastle, Jan. 8-17; Banbury, 22-31.
MR. E. P. TELFORD, Taunton, to Jan. 13; Beverley, 16-27.
MR. MONRO COLLINGS, the Weald, Sevenoaks. Jan. 8 to 16.
THE WEAVER BROTHERS, Glasgow (Cowcaddens), Jan. 9-28.
MR. F. C. SPURR, Swaffham, to Jan. 9; Bradford, Jan. 15-23.
MR. NED WRIGHT, Stoke (Rochester) to Jan. 8; Faringdon, 10-12.
MR. CHARLES INGLIS, the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, in January.
MR. JOSIAH NIX, North-road, Darlington, Jan. 2-10; Warrington, 16-24.
MR. GEORGE CLARKE, Finsbury Park Congregational Church, Jan. 9; Putney, 16-31.
MR. W. R. LANE, Jan. 3-14; Mission to City men, Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A.; 16-27, the Dome, Brighton.

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.—Amongst many missions commencing next Sunday, the following may be mentioned for prayer: Haverton-hill, A. Clark; Wallis Down, J. Brown; Whitwell, C. Galletly; Burton-on-Trent, J. Harris; Dawlish, T. Canning; Wimbledon, J. Johnson; Kettering, J. Greenwood; Glasgow, C. G. Roger; Leith, Richard Hill; Farnborough, H. Bray.

REV. J. MCNEILL'S LONDON MISSION.—The following are the arrangements for Mr. McNeill's first mission, January 16-28:—Jan. 16, Sunday, 11 a.m., Marylebone Presbyterian Church, W.; Jan. 16, Sunday, 3.30, p.m., St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W.; Jan. 16, Sunday, 6.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Butts, S.E.; Jan. 17-21, Monday to Friday, 12 to 1 p.m., City Temple, Holborn-viaduct, E.C.; Jan. 17-21, Monday to Friday, 7.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle; January 23, Sunday, 11 a.m., City Temple; Jan. 23, Sunday, 3.30 p.m., St. James's Hall, Piccadilly; Jan. 23, Sunday, 6.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle; Jan. 24-28, Monday to Friday, 12 to 1 p.m., City Temple; Jan. 24-28, Monday to Friday, 7.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle. No Saturday meetings. Due notice will be given of subsequent missions.

Jews and Christmas.

All observance or celebration of Christmas by Jews is, of course, strictly forbidden; but, nevertheless, in connection with his good work as superintendent of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, Prediger C. T. Lipshytz has for some years regularly held a special service on Christmas Eve at the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C. On Friday evening week the meeting-room was filled with an audience of Jewish men of all ages. The proceedings were of a bright and cheerful character, and most of those present joined heartily in the singing of seasonable hymns, also following with eager attention the reading of Isaiah xlix. and Luke ii.

Then Mr. Lipshytz spoke for an hour in Judæo-German from the words "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men." In quietly, emphatic, and forceful style he told once again of the birth of Him who came to be a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of his people Israel; and with homely and impressive argument and quotation from Scripture and history he sought to prove that He who thus came as a lowly child was indeed the Messiah who had so long been promised to the sons of Abraham. Mr. Lipshytz magnified the love and mercy of God in thus sending his Son to be the Saviour of the world, and exhorted his hearers to repent and believe the message that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures.

The quietness and grave interest and attention manifested during the discourse were remarkable, and it made one feel thankful indeed to know that all the year round at this and numerous other mission halls the sons of Israel are having the Gospel proclaimed to them with directness and earnestness, in the hope and assurance that the Lord will cause his Word to prosper and bring forth precious fruit. As a frequent visitor at the headquarters of the Barbican Mission, the writer has been struck with a sense of the inadequacy of the accommodation. As the lease of these premises expires in a few months, the committee have felt the desirability of erecting a new and larger building, more favourably situated. This new venture will cost about £3000, of which only £820 has already been received. S.

London City Mission.

The usual New Year's Day muster of the members of the City Mission was held on Saturday at Exeter Hall. Between 400 and 500 of these earnest toilers among the unevangelised masses met under the presidency of Rev. Robert Dawson, one of the secretaries of the Mission. After a season of praise and prayer, a helpful address was given by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of Tollington Park, on "The Compassion of Jesus for the Perishing Multitudes." He emphasised the suitability of Christ's message and work for meeting the needs of all kinds of people, rich and poor alike; and urged the missionaries to manifest a Christlike compassion in their work among the sunken and degraded.

The work of the City Mission, never more needed than now, deserves the hearty support of all who desire the evangelization of our great city. The recent special appeal sent out has produced over £9000, but increased and continued support is needed if the work is to be efficiently pushed forward. A very interesting account appears in the current month's magazine of the Society of its work among employés in West-End hotels.

At the meeting on Saturday, the chairman referred to the approaching mission in London by Rev. John McNeill, and requested the missionaries to invite non-churchgoers to attend the meetings in their neighbourhoods. On behalf of Sir George Williams, a copy of the "Life Story of Richard Weaver" was presented to each member of the Mission.

Belgrave Chapel, Belgrave-square, so long the scene of Rev. Marcus Rainsford's labours, took to itself a new incumbent on Sunday, in the person of Rev. Herbert J. R. Marston, M.A., who till lately was rector of Icomb, Stow-on-the Wold. Mr. Marston is totally blind. He is an excellent scholar, and a devoted Evangelical preacher. Like the famous Dr. Milburn, his memory is remarkable, and his knowledge of Scripture inexhaustible. Needless to say, the congregations on Sunday gave him a very hearty welcome.

The Gospel in the Music Hall.

A crowded pavement, an eager throng, a murmur of anxious voices—these were the indications that "something special" was "on" in Edgware-road on Sunday evening last. Policemen, too, were there, but "Pass in, please!" not "Pass on," was their refrain, and their work was light, for there was no disposition on the part of the crowd to do otherwise.

The occasion was the reopening of the Metropolitan Music Hall for the Gospel services which are held in it on Sunday evenings during the winter months. The old hall, which for more than twenty years was the scene of these gatherings, has recently been replaced by a magnificent modern building providing seats for 2800 persons; and after a temporary sojourn, since October, in the West London Theatre, not far away, the congregation now reassembled in its old, or rather its new, quarters.

The active responsibility of this work has devolved all these years upon Mr. Charles Cook, aided by a vigorous body of helpers. In the summer months their effort is transferred to the still wider area of Hyde Park, where large crowds attend to hear the message of salvation; while the permanent home of the Mission is at Hyde Park Hall, Stourcliffe-street, hard by.

Not many less than 3000 persons, all told, were present at the Metropolitan, and most attentive and orderly they were. A fine choir of some fifty converted members rendered with excellent effect a number of sacred pieces, Madame Lizette Pearce adding three solos—"O rest in the Lord," "There is a green hill" (Gounod), and "We want you over there." But all this was preliminary and subsidiary to the purpose of the evening, which was to declare the good tidings of a Saviour's love. From Ps. xc. 9, Mr. Cook gave a stirring address, urging the solemnity of life and death, and the power of God to regenerate the soul. About a thousand persons remained to the after-meeting, of whom thirty-five rose for prayer.

That the Holy Spirit moved in many hearts there seemed no room to doubt, and this was a meeting typical of many such which in the past have given great cause for thankfulness to God. The fact that in twenty odd years Mr. Cook has written nearly twenty thousand letters to anxious inquirers after the way of life, is sufficient indication that his work has not been fruitless. The secret may be traced to systematic prayer. Every Saturday evening an earnest company of workers meet him to join in petitioning at the throne of grace. "Without such a prayer-meeting," he maintains, "no one could sustain such a work as this."

Many great sinners have from time to time been gathered in from the ranks of betting and racing and drinking men; many a home has been brightened with all the blessings that follow the conversion of its members, and these in turn have become workers, for no drones are allowed in this hive of Christian industry. Friends interested in the movement may find Mr. Cook at 6, Frithville-gardens, Shepherds' Bush, W.

Requests for Prayer.

For a mission by Mr. J. B. Wookey in Belfast, Jan. 4 to 19.

For special services from January 2 to 9, at New Barnet, conducted by Mr. John Elliott.

For blessing on a mission to believers at St. Peter's Church, Derby, by Dr. Morris, Jan. 8 to 16.

For a mission at Spencer-place Chapel by Mr. Charles Lazenby, from Sunday, Jan. 9 to 23, every night.

For a fifteen days' mission to be held at Sundorne Hall, Charlton, S.E., Jan. 2 to 16, by Mr. James Lovell.

For an eight days' mission in Allen-road Hall, Stoke Newington, N., from January 3, conducted by Mr. Gerald R. Coultas.

For blessing on a mission for children and young people, to be conducted by Mr. J. H. Greene at the Temperance Hall, Mint Walk, Croydon, January 9 to 12.

On behalf of the demonstration amongst the men of Paddington, on January 20, against intemperance, gambling, and impurity, at the Paddington Baths Hall, Queen's-road.

Letter to the Editor.

VIVISECTION IN HOSPITALS.

Sir,—At the recent annual meeting of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund, the Lord Mayor ruled out of order an endeavour, in connection with the resolution to "invite the cordial co-operation of all ministers of religion...in the usual way" to call attention to the increasing practice of vivisection in the hospitals as a difficulty in the way of such co-operation. On this ruling, a gentleman who sat beside the suppressed speaker exclaimed, "But that will have to be heard," and I venture to anticipate, through your courtesy, a speedy fulfilment of that prediction.

The "Vivisection Act" of 1876 was passed in pursuance of the recommendation of a Royal Commission which recognised the right of the community to be assured that the claims of the lower animals to be treated with humane consideration should not be forgotten; and it reported in the following remarkable terms: "Where the pursuit of scientific truth and common compassion come into collision, the ends of civilisation no less than of morality require us to be guided by the latter and higher principle."

Yet the legislation based upon this report has only sacrificed the animals and deceived the public. Licences are easily obtained, inspection is nominal, and anæsthetics are little used. The number of licensed vivisectors in England and Scotland was forty-four in 1883; in 1897 there were eighty-seven attached to the London hospitals alone. In the first year under the Act 164 operations were performed without anæsthetics; in 1895 the number of these was 2845. Over 80 per cent. of the vivisections in 1896 were under "exceptional certificates," which remove all restriction upon the tortures inflicted. An additional and closely related horror is the increasing habit of experimenting upon hospital patients, physicians and surgeons who do so being freely and honourably named in medical publications.

And in full view of these things the public is charged in the name of science to be silent. But if this were only a question of science, we should be entitled to refer to the opinions of the leaders in science who have condemned vivisection as worthless and unjustifiable. Sir William Thomson did this as president of the Royal Society. Sir W. Ferguson expressed deep regret that he had ever been a vivisector, and said the practice should be put down by Act of Parliament. Sir Charles Bell said it "had done more to perpetuate error than to enforce the just views taken from anatomy and the natural sciences." This was the opinion of the great French surgeon Nélaton, as it is the opinion of the similarly distinguished British operator, Lawson Tait. Dr. McCormick, Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, believed that "the majority of the highly-educated and deep-thinking members of the profession agreed with him in condemning the practice." These protests by competent authorities might be indefinitely increased, and with the acknowledgments of great vivisectors that no certain results have followed their experiments, should make the awful sacrifice impossible, at least until scientific men were agreed about its necessity or utility.

But on moral grounds we have a right to speak without any deference to physiologists. We maintain that man's authority over creatures as sensitive as himself is limited by one common Creator; that the refusal to recognise this limitation is as immoral as theft; and that the arrogant selfishness which prompts it, while it threatens the poor in our hospitals, is destructive of humanity in the operators themselves. Sir W. Ferguson and others have said that these experiments in the presence of medical students are "calculated to make them young devils." Surely as parents and as citizens we have a right to protect our young men from such an influence as this! Let the churches generally insist (in accordance with the terms of the Royal Commission of 1876) on the maintenance of common compassion as more important to civilisation and morality than even the pursuit of scientific truth, and the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund will be liberated from a debasing connection and will evoke new enthusiasm from all compassionate minds. But if that cannot be secured, let those who fear to be, even by their contributions, "partakers of other men's sins," keep their collections for those hospitals in which vivisection has no place.—Yours truly, J. F. B. Tinling.

From Other Lands

Italian Military Church.

In his new report, Cav. Luigi Capellini writes: "In one of the meetings, amongst the young men attentively listening to the preaching of the Word, I noticed a young corporal of cavalry who made a strong impression upon me by his intelligent air and the attention which he paid to the sermon. My second son Alfred, a student at the University, who goes to the services, and sometimes takes my place when I am absent, went up to him and invited him to come up to the house. Here we found that he is

THE NEPHEW OF THE POPE—COUNT PECCI.

His open countenance, his loyal and frank way of speaking, convinced us that he was really seeking the truth, and I gave him a Bible and some books. His uncle the Pope had made him one of his 'Guardia Nobile'—but he had to serve under the King as an Italian subject. He not only continued to attend the services as long as he was in Rome, but he also brought with him many of the men under him, thus becoming himself a propagator of the truth."

Later on in his report, Signor Capellini says that, in order to stop or neutralise his work, the priests have instituted organisations called Catholic Military Clubs, providing for the soldiers and Catholic books. Among these latter was one called "Errors and Heresies of the Protestants," in which ridicule was cast upon the services of the Military Church. It was important that something should be done to meet this dangerous innovation, so Cav. Capellini opened schools in which the uneducated soldiers might be taught to read and write, and provided rooms with books and writing materials for the use of the better instructed. This provision has been highly appreciated by the men, and the work has gone forward all along the line.

Great Britain and China.

A CORRESPONDENT of The Scotsman, who seems to speak with information and authority, writing on the Chinese crisis gives expression to the following views:—

"The part which is being forced on Britain is really a difficult one, take it how we may. If we stand aside and allow Continental Powers to obtain control in China, it means, as we already see, that all British subjects at present in the employ of the Chinese Government will be dismissed. British trade and enterprise will be hampered in every way, and the country before long closed to us. If we elect to oppose Germany and Russia it may land us in a second edition of the Crimean war, in order to prolong the existence of a Government every bit as hopeless as that of the Sultan. Between Manchu and Turk there is but little to choose. If we join with the rest and accept a share, we lay ourselves open to the condemnation of those who break the Eighth Commandment.

"But would the partition of China by the Powers involve a breach of the Eighth or any other Commandment? If we were to take China—as the phrase has it—what is it that we would take? Certainly not the country, which would belong to the people the same as before, and no one would be deprived of a single acre without full compensation; nor would we take the trade, which would still remain in the people's hands, only vastly increased in volume and value. We would take nothing from any man of the property kind, but simply a certain amount of authority in matters of government. It is really not a question of taking at all, but rather of giving—of giving to a long-suffering and oppressed people peace, justice, and security, protection from famine and other calamities; of giving them the right to develop their own country, to acquire knowledge, to accumulate wealth, and to enjoy without fear the fruits of their labour. But, it may be asked, by what right would we be justified in seizing the government of China? By the same right as justifies the sane man in seizing a lunatic engaged in the destruction of his own property, to the endangering of all his neighbours; or in tearing the reins from the hands of a drunken driver who is impelling the coach to ruin.

"It is asked, 'Where does China come in' in the case of a partition? By the word China is sometimes meant the Chinese Government, and sometimes the people. In the case of the Government it—being weighed in the balance of its own classics—has long been found wanting. Had we not interfered on the wrong side during the Taiping rebellion the Chinese people would have swept it out of existence forty years ago; and they would still see it superseded with the greatest delight.

"Perhaps one of the most hopeful features of our age, and of greatest promise for the progress of the race, is the overrunning of heathen and barbarous lands by civilised and Christian Powers. Only those who have lived under pagan and irresponsible despots can fully appreciate this. The chief danger of the movement, however, is that the various Powers, being moved by envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness, may fall out amongst themselves during the process. This is what has to be mainly guarded against in China. The mandarins are adepts at playing off one Power against another, and will leave no effort unmade to get them embroiled. This is the calamity chiefly to be feared by us."

An Appeal for Madeira.

A RESIDENT in Madeira writes that a medical mission is greatly needed there. He says:—"The way to the people's hearts is soon found in alleviating their sufferings and looking to their pressing needs. The misery is indescribable, and the priests do absolutely nothing for the poor. Here is a typical case: A man beat his wife so terribly that, as a last resort, she fled to her mother's cottage, where, after five weeks' suffering, she died of consumption brought on by her husband's brutal treatment. No doctor went near, and we only heard of the case when earthly help was of little avail. She left a poor baby of ten months, which we wished to bring up, but the relatives will not part with it, as they wish to use it for begging purposes. We have not, however, given up hope of rescuing the little one from its wretched surroundings. The priest who brought the Host to the dying woman wants 10s. for doing so, and he threatens, if this is not paid, to sell the few miserable things in the people's home.

"Open propaganda is forbidden by law, but if a medical mission could be formed in one of the villages a great deal of good might be done, and people might at the same time be taught the right way. They are only too anxious to accept the true light, but there is no one who can go before them. I should wish nothing better to devote all my time trying to help these poor people, but I cannot at present see my way to do so. I have mixed with Portuguese of all stations and ranks, and they are a most willing and grateful people, and ready to accept the true religion, and free themselves from Rome and its knavery."

Lectures on Palestine.

MR. G. H. LORD, of Buckhurst-hill, who has recently returned from the East, has been giving a series of interesting lectures on the Holy Land, Egypt, Syria, etc., at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester. The subject the first night was, "A Journey to Jerusalem and City Life in Palestine," the second night, "Desert Life with the Bedouins." The third night he went to Shawford and gave a lecture, embracing the above subjects, in the Mission Hall there, which is a branch of the Soldiers' Home Mission. The lectures were exceedingly interesting and instructive, especially to Bible students, who were enabled thereby to better understand many references to Eastern customs in Holy Scripture. Living representations were given of a Bedouin chief, dragoman, Arab attendant, Bethlehem and Syrian ladies and children, etc.

The costumes were good, and the scenic effects exceedingly picturesque. Illustrations of buildings, scenery, etc., in Palestine, also maps of the country, enabled the audience to follow the route described by their interesting guide; limelight views were also given and described. The lectures have a special significance at this season, the land being so closely associated with the birth and life of Christ; and the large audiences were both interested and instructed by what they saw and heard. Any friends conducting missions and anxious for their people to understand the Bible more clearly cannot do better than secure the services of Mr. Lord.

Soldiers and Sailors in Egypt.

ONE of the spiritual oases of this land of Egypt is found at Alexandria. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute, founded by Miss Robinson and ably carried on now by Rev. Thomas Ranger Lawrence and Mrs. Lawrence, is like the shelter of a great rock in a weary land.

Not far from the Mehemet Ali Square, and off the Rue Gare de Ramleh, is a handsome stone building some four storeys high, with an annexe with a corrugated galvanised iron roof.

In the large hall, if you look in on a Sunday evening, you will find numbers of redcoats from Ras-el-Tin and Mustapha Barracks, and plenty of bluejackets from the Hawke or the Astræa. After the evangelistic service they gather round a harmonium, and for one hour or more sing vigorously out of "Songs and Solos." There is a refreshment bar, where, on weekdays and Sundays, they can get food and temperance drinks, for some are a good distance from their homes.

This Institute is the rallying-point for all Christian workers in Alexandria. None are more welcome than the missionaries of the North Africa Mission. Once a month a united prayer meeting is held, where Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, Copts, Druses, and Arabs take part.

One remarkable feature of the work of the Institute is the kindness shown to intoxicated sailors. These poor fellows are sometimes drugged and often overcome by the horrible native spirit given them. When found helpless in the street, they are brought into the Institute and put to bed until they are sober.

The debt on the fine building is entirely paid off, but on the current expenditure there is a deficit of about £500. I am sure that the friends of soldiers and sailors will relieve Mr. Lawrence's mind by helping him at this anxious time.

ALEXANDER A. BODDY, English Chaplain.
Soldiers' Institute, Alexandria.

Dr. Hedin, the Swedish traveller, is at work upon a book describing his recent explorations in Central Asia. A geographical authority has called Dr. Hedin's achievement one of the most remarkable journeys since the days of Marco Polo.

South American Evangelical Mission.—In connection with this mission a number of prayer circles have been formed in Liverpool, Aberdeen, and elsewhere. The secretary, Mr. B. W. Ranken, 34, Broadgreen-road, Old Swan, Liverpool, has issued a little pamphlet giving facts as to the great neglected continent, and calling for fresh help and continued prayer.

Missions in China have during recent years received much help from a little-acknowledged source. Of this a correspondent in the field writes: "In China all missionary allowances are paid in silver dollars. In the year 1877 £1000 sent to China was worth 4848 Mexican dollars. In 1887 the same sum was worth 6104 dollars, in 1893 it was worth 7958 dollars, and in October, 1897, 10,590 dollars. That is to say, for each thousand pounds the Societies sent out, they received in China 4486 dollars more than they did ten years ago, and no less than 5752 dollars more than twenty years ago. In other words, every thousand pounds given now supports more than double the number of missionaries it did twenty years ago. Exchange is the little-acknowledged contributor who has brought this about." Our correspondent adds that this benefit may well be put over against the difficulties that are experienced elsewhere, owing to the fall in silver.

National Ladies' Equipment Association.—It is matter of common knowledge that young ladies of the upper and middle classes, with excellent education, brought up in comfort and refinement, are often thrown upon the world by the unexpected death of a father or by other circumstances, with no means of livelihood whatever, and without technical training, or judicious friends to counsel and direct. Frequently these are reduced to great privation, and in many cases have a widowed mother to care for. It may be doubted whether any circumstances more urgently appeal, because of the silent heroism with which the heaviest suffering and misery are borne than do the conditions of such widowed mothers and friendless daughters. It is proposed to form an association for the purpose of meeting such need, not so much by temporary pecuniary assistance, as by education, technical training, and general equipment for remunerative employment, and also as far as possible by the introduction to, and if need be the creation of such employment. Address for information, Mr. R. D. B. MacQueen, 20, Upper Addison-gardens, W.

Reforms in British Prisons.

By CHAS. COOK.

IN the progress of civilisation few institutions have been so completely transformed as the prison. It was wont to be an instrument of vengeance; we now desire it to be an instrument of mercy. In mediæval times men were immured in a fortress out of which they could not possibly escape, and in which conical cells were built below the level of the ground, wherein the victims would be suffocated in a given number of days. Now the utmost care is taken to ensure perfect ventilation, whilst the rules of sanitation are strictly adhered to.

Yet it has been acknowledged by those who know best that our English prison system is not calculated to reform criminals, much less convert them. There has been lacking in the general system a want of sympathy which would win an entrance into many a hard heart issuing in reformation, and often lead to conversion. Above all there has been lacking the bringing to bear upon the mind and heart of the prisoner the Gospel of the grace of God.

But we note that there are signs that the authorities are beginning to see that spiritual power through the Gospel can be utilised upon our prisoners. I have been permitted to tell out the Gospel in an English prison to a number of men, and only recently had the pleasure of holding special services in a Scotch gaol, where a large number of prisoners (many of whom were first offenders) accepted and confessed Christ. Now in two London prisons special services have been held, "a ten days' mission" having recently been conducted by a Church Army agent in Pentonville, and a similar mission at Wandsworth. This is a remarkable and one for which we should all feel profoundly thankful.

In many cases there is a prejudice against the chaplain, by reason, no doubt, of his office, rather than himself personally, as many such gentlemen have lived devoted lives amongst depraved men in order to win them to Christ, but when an honorary and unofficial person may speak to them—one who is wisely and well adapted for such work—the prisoners are amenable to advice, and apparently open to receive the gracious message of the Gospel. Here are some heart experiences that have become known to me quite recently, in which love, sorrow, and pathos are blended.

A chaplain of one of our convict prisons in England sometimes spent an hour a day with the convicts whilst they were exercising. Dropping his official position in a brotherly way, he talked of matters concerning the home and early life of the man with whom he was walking, leaving spiritual matters for official hours. By these means the chaplain gained the respect and admiration of many a felon; and when, one Sunday, there came a rousing sermon, hearts erstwhile hardened opened to the words of love and wisdom spoken by their brother man.

A well-known ex-convict, since converted, and now engaged in Christian work, does not speak so highly of the chaplains which it was his lot to meet, but gives a splendid tribute of praise to some of the warders. He is a Scotchman, and he says:—

"The preaching of many chaplains is superficial; I don't recollect a single earnest word coming home to my heart or conscience. Many of us from the hell of thievery, but I have never known of an 'old lag' being reformed, and the extraordinary rarity of such cases is enough to condemn our prisons as reforming institutions. What wonders could be wrought by a large-hearted, loving preacher, whose soul was set on fire by the love of God.

"During the whole 18 years of my prison life such a man never crossed my path, and the only approach to such a glow of soul as would set the souls of others on fire, and consume the bonds of criminal tendency, came from Mr. W——, a Perth warder, who in his own time would come and sit with me in my solitary cell—come down on a level with me, and even speak to me as a father of the love of Christ. In his presence all that was best in me seemed to rise, and I seemed strong enough to break the bonds of an evil past."

The singular inaptitude of a young chaplain was seen when a prisoner of some notoriety was evidently awakened by the death of a fellow-prisoner. He sought the advice of the gentleman, who, knowing his past career, told him: "God will have nothing to do with such a character as you; you are past redemption." This happened at Wormwood Scrubbs. Terrified and disconsolate, the man went back to his cell, and, his eye falling on his Bible, he took it down, and opening at Isa. i. 18, he read, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." To these words the once hard, now repentant criminal clung, and when, some weeks later, he was transferred to another prison, preparatory to his being discharged, he experienced a surprise, as did also another person. Seated in his cell, with hopes of a speedy deliverance, the door opened, and in came the same chaplain. The prisoner leaped to his feet and, clasping his Bible, exclaimed, "Aye, you're the mon that tell't me God wad ha'e naething a dae wi' me: but what dae ye mak' o' this text—they shall be as white as snow'?" The poor chaplain flew out of the door, verily believing the prisoner to be mad. But I know the man to be alive, and in his right mind.

'THOUGH THY SINS BE AS SCARLET

The above will show how careful the authorities should be in choosing men for such important posts, and how even criminals may be helped and reformed by the Gospel being preached by men who are gifted and qualified for the work. The American system is too loose and lax, but yet they are far ahead of us in permitting the Gospel to be freely preached to criminals. We hope the experiments now being permitted by the English autborities will prove successful.

Letters just to hand from Hull prison speak of a splendid work being done there by the chaplain, and of the special interest he is taking in the Swedish prisoners to bring them to Christ. He is supplying them with the "Pilgrim's Progress" and other good books in their own language; and having a knowledge of Swedish, he is peculiarly fitted to help them. Will the readers of The Christian pray for this work?

I am still hearing of good results from foreign prisons, and of reforms being carried out, and still desire to supply other countries with New Testaments. "Eat the fat, drink the sweet, and send portions to them for whom nothing is prepared."

The Y.M.C.A.

Mr. W. Ross, of Aberdeen, has been appointed secretary of the Derby Y.M.C.A., in place of Mr. A. K. Yapp, who has accepted the position of National Council Secretary for Lancashire.

The Gloucester Association has concluded, with great enthusiasm, "A Month's Membership Campaign." A friendly competition has gone on between "Whites" and "Reds," the result being "Whites" 175, "Reds" 125; or a total of 280 new members.

Band of Hope Union.—On Saturday night, at Exeter Hall, a New Year's gathering was held in connection with the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union. There was a large attendance, and many of those present came from distant parts of the country. Mr. Frederic Smith, chairman of the Union, who presided, said they had now 24,000 lodges, with 3,300,000 members. The celebration of the jubilee of the movement in the past year was in every way successful, though they could not as yet accurately gauge the results. It was hoped that, when the returns were made up, it would be found that the design of adding a million adherents to the cause had been accomplished. Addresses were delivered by Rev. B. J. Gibbon and Canon Wilberforce.

The Habits of Longfellow were, says Miss Longfellow, greatly influenced by his children. His study, which might be invaded by them at any time, had treasures of toys and things for their delight. The summers were always passed at the seaside, mainly for their sakes. And yet we are told that he was very reserved with them. His method—surely an eminently wise one—was to instil certain fundamental principles by habit and his own example, and then leave them free to shape their own course. He believed entirely in self-reliance, and in any uncertainty always said, "You must decide for yourself." With the youngest he made friends at once. He would allow no sarcastic word to a child, especially from a teacher, considering it blighting and dangerous to any originality or imagination, as it certainly is. He was particularly reserved with growing youths and girls. The time when individuality comes into play is a time for "extreme delicacy of reserve."

Obituary.

MR. THOMAS CLARK.

This earnest labourer, associated with the work at Hyde Park Hall, W., for the past twenty-five years, has been called home. He had laboured in the villages of England for many years with wondrous success, but for the past twelve years has been assisting Miss Bell in her spiritual and philanthropic work at Tooting. A most consistent Christian, a devout Bible reader, and a man who spent hours in prayer, he will be missed by a large circle of friends and hundreds of those to whom God has used him as the means of their conversion. He was one of the most useful and valued members of the Open Air Mission.

MR. D. M. DRYSDALE.

With sorrow we record the decease at Mentone, on Christmas Eve, of Mr. D. M. Drysdale, of Liverpool, a well-known business man and Christian worker in that city. He was an occasional contributor to our columns. Many readers will recollect his sketches of "Aggressive Work," in which he detailed his personal experiences of spiritual dealing with those whom he met in his journeys. His motto was "instant in season and out of season." His Gospel services carried on freely for a considerable time in Hengler's Circus to large congregations will be remembered by Liverpool friends. Mr. Drysdale was a man of strong individuality, of very decided convictions, and of unquenchable zeal; he can ill be spared at such a time as this when the love of many waxes cold.

REV. JOHN BURTON, HEADINGLEY.

The "father" of the Wesleyan Conference passed away on December 29, at the ripe age of ninety-two. Rev. John Burton, of Headingley, Leeds, entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1825, and was sent as a missionary to the West Indies. Owing to failure in health he returned to England, and on recovery took a foremost position as a preacher, "travelling" in such centres as Sheffield, Birmingham, Leeds, Cheltenham, Edinburgh, and Perth. His cultured ministry attracted large numbers who were not connected with Methodism, whilst his published sermons on "Christian Life and Truth" had an extensive circulation among the Free Churches. The last twenty years of his life have been spent in comparative retirement in Leeds. When the Wesleyan Conference met in that city last summer a special resolution of respect was adopted and forwarded to the aged minister.

MRS. PYE-SMITH.

With much regret we announce the death of Mrs. Pye-Smith, of Sevenoaks, at the age of eighty-five. She was a woman of wide sympathies and sound judgment, while her gentle Christian character made her beloved by a large circle of friends beyond her own immediate family. Deeply interested in education, she joined the committee of the British and Foreign School Society before her marriage, and with a brief interval remained an active and useful member for more than fifty years. Her energies were, however, chiefly devoted, after her own family, to the Home for Missionaries' Daughters, for which she acted as honorary secretary for about forty-five years, giving constant thought and care to its interests up to the very close of her life. She married, in 1835, Ebenezer, the elder son of Dr. John Pye-Smith, F.R.S.

REV. T. E. CLARK, M.D., CLIFTON.

This well-known and much-respected Evangelical clergyman, formerly a leading physician in the West of England, passed away at Clifton on Christmas Eve. He had not been in robust health for some few weeks, but the end was very sudden. Since the resignation of Clifton Church by Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, Dr. Clark had rendered valuable assistance in the parish and services, and at the time of his decease was completing arrangements to be instituted in the vicarage of Staverton, near Trowbridge, to which he had been recently appointed. He resigned a lucrative medical practice in 1885, and was ordained by the Bishop of Sodor and Man. After serving the curacy of St. German, in the Isle of Man, he was preferred to the vicarage of Pott-Shrigley, near Macclesfield, which, however, he resigned in 1890, when he returned to Clifton, and worked for some time in the parish of St. Peter. He was a man of singularly kindly disposition, and his practical knowledge of medicine gave him special access among the humbler classes, whom he delighted to visit in his pastoral capacity.

The Book of the World

M. Coillard and Africa.

THE curse of Ham will not for ever lie upon poor Africa; surely, though slowly, Gospel light and liberty are penetrating the Dark Continent. If the Day of Grace has been long delayed, it will certainly dawn; the millions of the interior will yet hear the Gospel which in the early centuries of our era spread so marvellously along the northern shores. From every point the mysterious land has been entered by her great water-ways, and adventurous travellers have at length pushed across the Continent from north to south, from east to west. The strongest motive of exploration has been found in the evangelistic spirit, with which David Livingstone was richly endowed, and which has since impelled F. S. Arnot and F. Coillard to continue his work, with results important beyond human estimation.

The writings associated with the first two of these Christian travellers have taken a high place in a literature which touches various interests, religious, philanthropic, and scientific. Now the contribution of the third is made available to English readers in a substantial volume. M. Coillard and his work are more or less familiar to our readers, his story having been outlined in our pages, from his earlier connection with the remarkably interesting Basuto Mission of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions to his more recent identification with pioneer endeavours on the Upper Zambesi.

Those who have been privileged to read the monthly Journal des Missions Evangéliques have been charmed by M. Coillard's comprehensive and graphic descriptions of journeyings and mission experiences during the past twenty years of his life, while promoting and establishing his mission among the Barotsi of the Upper Zambesi. These letters, so rich and full, as translated and edited by his niece, Catherine Winkworth Mackintosh, have been collected in a goodly volume, with the title, On the Threshold of Central Africa (15s. Hodder & Stoughton). There is a portrait of M. Coillard, also of his lamented wife, who for thirty years shared his missionary activity, and now sleeps at Sefula. There are also (with a map of the country) forty-four illustrations from photographs by the author.

The book unfolds a truly noble story. As we read it, we are on the track of Livingstone and Moffatt; on the one hand we meet with the barbaric and cruel Lobengula, on the other with the intelligent and merciful Khama. For years the missionary and his devoted wife braved famine and flood, wild beasts and wild men; they were plundered and threatened, but they were actuated by a loving purpose and a forgiving spirit, and God delivered them from all their enemies. These pages tell of marvellous devotion on the part of native converts; but at other times disappointment seems to have been the portion of the saddened workers. M. Coillard had the sorrow of losing valued helpers by death; but he was, on the other hand, permitted to gain favour in the sight of the king and his people, and settle missionaries in various centres of the Barotsi country. He enjoyed the position of teacher, "father of the nation"—guide, philosopher and friend of all in power and authority. King Lewanika, in many respects a veritable baby, was in some matters sufficiently shrewd. "To-morrow" was always on his lips; but when at length he made a concession to the British South Africa Company, many of his people were sorry that he should have belied his procrastinating reputation.

M. Coillard has travelled much in Africa, but he never came across blacks so apt as the Barotsi in industrial occupations. Another distinction of the people is their utter disregard of honesty; thieving is a veritable accomplishment with them, and until quite recently the idea of punishing the thief was laughed to scorn. That conscience is now awakening is clear from a proposal made by Lewanika to build a prison of three large wards, for the summary incarceration of drunkards, adulterers, and witch-finders!

Some striking testimonies of converts, at the beginning and end of their course, are given. We must be content to make a brief extract from an address by a native youth:

When I took service with the missionary, a gun was the object of all my desires. I often asked myself when my time would be up, and I should possess it. When I had got it, I thought myself the happiest man in the world. A gun! My gun! It was never out of my thoughts. I used to get up in the night to make sure I really possessed it. I was always admiring it. But now that I know the Lord Jesus, it is He who has taken possession of all my thoughts and all my love, and I almost forget that I have a gun.

It does not require a very intimate acquaintance with native sentiment to realise the depth of the experience which these simple words outline.

M. Coillard's keen sense of humour finds good play in his book. While absent from his station on one occasion, a storm came on, and other troubles were experienced. The incident is thus described:—

In ten days the grass, and even the brushwood, had reasserted their rights, as if in revenge; and when we penetrated to the tents the smell of mouldiness choked us. The whole place was a mass of mud, alive with frogs and millipedes. A hurricane had upset everything and broken my crockery. That good fellow Paulus [a native evangelist] had pushed his scrupulous fidelity to the point of even keeping the fragments of my cups and plates! It was too much of a good thing. I fled from the ruins, and installed myself in one of my huts, which is scarcely any better. The termites, centipedes, seruyi, warrior-ants, had taken possession of everything before my arrival; but it was the frogs more specially that had made it their rendezvous. They were everywhere—on the ground, on the walls, in the roof. They fall on one's head in bed, into the dishes on the table; they are not afraid of a bath in a cup of coffee, and have the impudence to croak in my face from the edge of my inkstand now whilst I am writing. This is a prelude to the nocturnal concert which awaits me. It is quite regal. Lewanika has drums, and I have frogs; both are noises, and one gets equally used to either!

On one of his cross-country journeys he met with a little boy of thirteen, who had been in the mission school at Lealuyi, and had declared himself for the Lord. Returned to his native village, the child taught the women and young people to sing Gospel hymns, one of them having the refrain:

Sweetest Name on mortal tongue,
Sweetest carol ever sung;
Jesus! blessed Jesus!

We do not pretend in a brief notice to do justice to a book so full of information and interest as this. We bespeak for it the special attention of all friends of foreign missions. We rejoice to note that, in evangelistic and educational work, a good foundation has been laid, and that when, about two years ago, M. Coillard returned to Europe in broken health, he was able to review with great thankfulness to God his many years of travel and toil; his losses and disappointments were as dust in the balance compared with God's mercies and blessings upon his labour:—

After a career of forty years, so chequered and so full of adventures, dangers, and trials, but also of deliverances and blessings, brought back so recently from the brink of the grave, escaped from the ravages of the rinderpest and the massacres of the Matabele, rescued as it were by shipwreck [every berth having been taken on the ill-fated Drummond Castle when a friend went to arrange a place for him], and given back as by a miracle to the health which I no longer even hoped for, I ask myself if it be not that my Master still has something for me to do, whether in Europe or in Africa.

A memoir of the late Duchess of Teck is to be written by Mr. C. Kinloch Cooke.

Miss James, secretary of the National Union of Women Workers, is to edit a completely remodelled edition of the "Englishwoman's Year Book."

Choosing as a motto for 1898 the words of Heb. i. 2, "They shall perish, but thou remainest," the Bishop of Ripon has written a striking poem. Copies may be had, neatly printed on card, from Mr. Arthur Hill, Ripon (3½d., or on folding card, 6½d.)

Nye's Illustrated Church Annual for 1898 makes its appearance with the new year. It may be regarded as a popular book of reference as regards the work and progress of the Church of England. Among the special articles are the "London Hospital Fund, Analysis for 1897," and "The Contributions for Foreign Missions," compiled by Canon Murray, of Chislehurst. (1s. Bemrose.)

Scottish Notes.

The Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland continues to do excellent service in the production and circulation of Christian literature, and in encouraging the work of colporteurs.

Considerable interest was awakened in Inverness in connection with a recent visit of Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh. He preached the opening sermon at a new Free Church Hall erected in the upper part of the town, and also preached in two Free Churches on the same day.

The customary reunion and watch-night service was held at Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, some 1500 persons being present. Addresses were given by Professor A. R. Simpson, Dr. John Smith, Mr. J. Guthrie, and others, while an encouraging report of the work of the Mission was given. The social gathering of workers on New Year's night was also a very successful occasion.

Dr. Ross Taylor, the Convener of the Sustentation Fund of the Free Church, has an article in the Free Church of Scotland Monthly, in which he says:—"The outlook, to my mind, is exceedingly serious; so much so, that I cannot take the responsibility of being silent. If at next assembly I shall have to report, as seems probable, that the last vestige of surplus has disappeared, and that the Church must even go back from its dividend of £160, I wish to be also in a position to say that I followed up repeated warnings by an explicit indication of the danger ahead."

Personalia.

Mr. John Shrimpton, of the Homes for Working Girls in London, has been ill at Torquay. He returned to town on Thursday, and has been confined to his room ever since.

Rev. James R. Farrar, of the First Reformed Church of Brooklyn, announced to his congregation last week that he intends to resign his pastorate, with its salary of 6000 dollars a year, and devote the remainder of his life to the preaching of the Gospel without pay.

Mr. and Mrs. George Soltau sailed, after three years' labour in New Zealand, for London from Melbourne on December 7. They had a good farewell at Auckland Y.M.C.A. Mrs. Soltau is coming home to take charge of the China Inland Mission Training Home.

The Archbishop of Rupertsland is lying seriously ill in London. "Few persons," says The English Churchman, "are aware what the Protestant and Evangelical cause in North-West Canada owes to the ability and self-denial of Dr. Mackray, who succeeded Bishop Anderson in 1865; but all well-wishers of the truth will pray that he may be restored to health, if the Lord will."

Rev. Alfred Rowland, who entered on New Year's Day upon his duties as chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, is "a son of the manse." His father, Rev. James Rowland, was for many years minister at Henley-on-Thames. Mr. Rowland preached his first sermon in a village chapel which scarcely seats a hundred persons, but for years he has ministered in one of the largest church buildings in the north of London, about 1050 names being inscribed on its roll of membership.

Dr. Baedeker, who has been travelling in Austria-Hungary, is proceeding to St. Petersburg, and thence to Central and South Russia. Letters will reach him if sent to Mrs. Baedeker, Wart-Eck, Weston-super-Mare. In a recent letter, he says:—"My ten days' visit to Stockholm and three days at Copenhagen have been greatly blessed and owned of God. The intercourse and fellowship with God's beloved and honoured servants is always helpful and encouraging. Sweden and also Finland have sent many missionaries into far-off lands."

Where'er the pathway lead, God gives to thee no helpless broken reed;
But his own Hand, sufficient for thy need.
So where He leads thee thou canst safely go;
And in the blest hereafter thou shalt know
Why, in his wisdom, He hath led thee so.

Baptist Missionary Society.—According to custom, a special New Year's meeting was held at the Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn, on Saturday. Rev. George Kerry (for forty years the Indian secretary of the society) presided, and delivered a brief devotional address. Several representatives from the various missionary societies also took part. Urgent appeals were made for financial help, as the Society requires some £10,000 extra annually to meet the necessary expenditure

Among the Churches

Church of England.

It is stated that Rev. S. Hutchinson, vicar of Christ Church, Penge, is seriously ill.

Rev. Archibald Ewart Clark-Kennedy, vicar of Savernake, Wilts, has been appointed rector of Ewhurst, Surrey.

The Archbishops of Canterbury and York have prepared a form of prayer to be used in all Established Churches for industrial peace.

Rev. Thomas Loxham, rector of Great Lever, Bolton, has given £12,000 to provide a church and school in a populous part of the parish.

Rev. Charles St. Barbe Sydenham last week completed his fiftieth year as curate and rector of the parish of Brushford, Somerset.

The Church Association recommends the setting apart of January 24 as a day of humiliation and prayer for a forward movement in the interests of Protestantism and Church Reform.

The usual Children's Service at Westminster Abbey on Innocent's Day took place on Tuesday week. Dean Bradley talked to the young people on the happiness of true love, taking for his text 1 John iii. 18.

To a large congregation in Westminster Abbey on Saturday afternoon, Canon Wilberforce preached a very inspiring and comforting New Year's discourse from the words in Job xxxiv., "When He giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?"

Many will hear with regret of the death of Rev. R. W. Kennion, who was from 1858 to 1894 rector of Acle, Norwich. He was universally honoured in his own neighbourhood, and was widely known as a sincere and cultivated exponent of Evangelical Churchmanship.

Congregational.

Dr. Guinness Rogers has entered his 76th year.

The Centenary Fund of the London Missionary Society has now reached £108,451.

Lancaster-road Chapel, Preston, has opened an institute for its P.S.A. brotherhood.

The corner-stone of a new Congregational House has been laid at Boston by the Governor of Massachusetts.

An alarming fire broke out in Blackheath Church on Christmas morning. Happily mastery was soon gained over it.

Medland Hall, Ratcliff, "The Home of the Homeless," is about to be enlarged so as to accommodate 450 men nightly, instead of, as at present, 300.

Rev. Robert Mackay has returned from Canada, where he has spent three months in the interest of the churches of the Dominion, and also of the Self-Help Emigration Society.

In his New Year's address to his congregation at Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead, Dr. Horton referred to the great waste of time on the part of Christians in the excessive reading of newspapers, magazines, and novels. The motto for the year he gave was "Jesus only."

Manor Park Church held its seventh Christmas morning toy service. The East London Cripple choir attended, and the superintendent gave an account of the Ragged School Union work on behalf of the poor crippled children of London. The toys and offerings were given in aid of the work.

The twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. W. Glover has been celebrated at Horsley-on-Tyne. The Ilyton Record says that Mr. Glover's mother was the great-granddaughter of Rev. Samuel Shaw, of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, one of the ministers ejected in 1662. "Readers of 'Foxe's Book of Martyrs' will recall the Glovers, one of whom, Robert, was burned at the stake in Coventry. Our neighbour is a direct descendant of these worthies."

Calls.—Rev. S. Clay, to Kensington Chapel (assistant); Mr. E. J. Thompson, to Ashurst-road, East Grinstead; Rev. F. Page, of Birmingham, to Cannock; Rev. J. C. Maclachlan, of Lanark, to Stirling; Rev. J. B. Davies, of Briton Ferry, to Trealaw.

Resignations.—Rev. S. G. Matthews, of Salem, Bradford; Rev. S. B. Dixon, of Horncastle; Rev. G. Luckett, of Rothbury.

Baptist.

Twelve young believers were baptized on Sunday week at Victoria Chapel, Wandsworth-road.

Mr. Charles Fairclough has been ordained for mission work in China at Moss Side Chapel, Manchester.

Rev. James Mursell, late of Derby, will commence his ministry at Downs Chapel, Clapton, on the second Sunday in February.

Rev. Robert Montgomery, late pastor at Uley, Glos., is now fully restored to health and vigour, and hopes soon to be actively engaged in Christian work. His address is, Stoneleigh House, Dursley, Gloucestershire.

Dr. Green will commence this month the second series of lectures of the "Angus Lectureship," which originated in a testimonial fund raised in commemoration of thirty years' work by Dr. Angus in the College. Dr. Angus himself gave the first series of lectures two years ago.

Calls.—Mr. W. R. Chesterton, of the Pastors' College, to East Parade, Horsham; Rev. A. Corbet, of Greenock, to Borough-road, Southwark; Rev. F. E. Blackaby, of Stowon-the-Wold, to Chatham; Rev. Edward Jones, of Lanelly, at Pwllheli; Rev. John Maclean, of Govanhill, Glasgow, to Great Victoria-street, Belfast.

Resignation.—Dr. Gritton, of Trinity Chapel, Hackney.

Methodist.

At Albaston, Devon, a fruitful mission has been held, with many conversions.

Successful missions have been held in Week St. Mary, Bridgton (Chesley Bay), and Watton.

A new Wesleyan chapel is to be built at Muswell-hill, close to the Alexandra Palace grounds.

Rev. E. T. Westerdale has raised £2500 towards the endowment of Wesley's house, City-road.

Rev. C. H. Goodman has arrived safely at Sierra Leone, on his way to his inland station at Tikondo.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller has given 1000 dols. to aid the Methodist Episcopal churches on the Mesaba Range, Minn.

Dr. A. Carman, superintendent of the Methodist Church of Canada, intends in the spring to visit the missions of that Church in Japan.

It is announced that the way is now open to proceed with the extension of the Central Mission premises at St. John's Chapel, Clerkenwell. Want of proper accommodation has hitherto greatly hindered the work there.

The President's "Pastoral" to Wesleyans emphasises the importance of high character. There is much talk about the true Church, but the one indisputable sign of that Church is holiness. The best evidence of their genuineness, of the validily of their orders, and everything else, is that they share the beauty of the Lord, and walk in white as He did. It requires much ingenuity to discern the signs of the true churches as they are ecclesiastically determined, but a congregation of conscientious, unselfish, godly men carry with them a witness known and read of all men. The Pastoral goes on to point out that the measure of purity is also the measure of power and influence.

Presbyterian.

Dr. McGaw, although somewhat better, is still forbidden to resume work.

Rev. John Oliver has entered upon his duties as minister of Sychnant, Mont.

The new work at Cricklewood, under the care of Rev. J. W. Pearson, is reported as progressing well.

It is anticipated that the Kensington congregation will give a call to Rev. J. M. Witherow, of Berwick.

Rev. Andrew Black, of Egremont, having been called to Kilcreggan and Belfast, he has decided that Egremont still needs him, and he must decline both.

The London Presbytery North will hold this month a conference on "Territorial Evangelisation in London, with special reference to the changing conditions and social needs of populous neighbourhoods."

Calls.—Rev. D. M. Ross, of Dundee, to Westbourne, Glasgow; Rev. Gordon Molyneux, formerly of Sydney, to Vauxhall-road, Liverpool; Mr. Emrys Davies, to Coedway, Mont.; Rev. T. C. Williams, to Menai Bridge; Rev. Alexander Lowe, of Glasgow, to Newcastleton; Rev. E. J. Maclauchlan, of Glasgow, to North Free Church, Leith (assistant); Rev. William Taylor, Dumbarton, to Wellpark Church, Glasgow; Rev. William Henry, to Strathkinnes Free Church (assistant).

The Salvation Army.

Arrangements are under way for opening several additional shelters and institutions for women in this country immediately the necessary means are forthcoming.

The work of the enlarged Investigation Department at headquarters continues to extend. No less than 1241 lost and missing people were found by its agency during the past year.

The President of the United States has written to Commissioner Booth-Tucker, in connection with the anniversary of the Army in the States, assuring him that the progress of the work is one of which he has a right to be proud, and expressing much sympathy with the operations generally. Ex-President General Harrison has also warmly received the Army leaders, and intimated his deep interest in the movement.

The year has seen considerable advance in the women's rescue work. Progress has been made by the homes towards self-support. The earnings of the girls were never so high, and the work has been enlarged in several directions. It is hoped that January or February will see rescue work commenced in Manchester, and another night shelter for women for South London, with possibly shelters likewise for Dundee and Gateshead-on-Tyne.

Fallen Asleep.

At the Rectory, Princes Risborough, Rev. Reginald Robertson Bardolph, aged forty-five, formerly vicar of Christ Church, Liverpool.—At Bryn Eirias, Colwyn Bay, Mr. Thomas Barlow, J.P., of Torkington Lodge, near Stockport, aged seventy-two.—At Denbigh, on 27th ult., Mr. Robert Parry, aged seventy-nine, well-known for many years as an earnest worker in Liverpool, Bodlary, and Denbigh.—At Combe Town, near Bath, Rev. W. Mills Robinson, at the age of seventy-seven, who had been in the ministry forty-six years, most of which was spent in rural districts.—At Boxton Park, Bedford, Mr. William King, aged seventy-seven, a faithful helper.—At Colchester, Mr. Joseph Ritson, aged sixty-eight, a prominent worker, and a leader in Christian S.S. and temperance effort.—At Rothersthorpe, Northamptonshire, Mr. R. C. Westley, aged seventy-three, an earnest follower of Christ.—At Brent Knoll, on 24th ult., Rev. A. O. Fitzgerald, Archdeacon of Wells.—At Norwich, Alderman W. Hunter, J.P., a useful Christian citizen.—At Leicester, Rev. W. Turner, for many years a faithful Baptist minister.—At Semley, Mr. Alvah Fowler, for many years a worker and S.S. superintendent.—At Norwich, Mr. W. Turner, aged seventy-six, business manager of Messrs. Jarrold's publishing firm.—At Chapel-en-Frith, Mr. Thomas Mosscrop, aged eighty-five, a leading Methodist, three of whose sons are in the ministry.—At Walham-grove, S.W., Mr. W. New, in his ninety-first year, the father of the late Revs. William and Charles New, whose names, in connection with foreign mission work, are household words in Free Methodism.—At Leamington, on 25th ult., Rev. W. C. Bishop, an earnest worker on behalf of missions.—At Southborough, on Christmas morning, Rev. R. W. Kennion, late rector of Acle, Norfolk, who was for many years a standard bearer of Evangelical truth. He was in his eighty-second year, was M.A. of St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1837. He did much quiet, useful work, winning the respect and esteem of all who knew him. Failing powers compelled him to retire in 1894.—At Lewisham, Mr. Henry Hall, for nearly thirty years connected with the Sunday-school Union, first as trade manager, then publication superintendent and editor of the Sunday School Teacher and other periodicals.—At Honiton, on December 26, Mr. John E. Paull, a prominent member of the Baptist church, superintendent of Sunday-school, and leader of Band of Hope, while he took an active and leading part in every religious and social movement.—At Cullingworth, on 1st inst., Rev. William Russell, minister of the Cullingworth Wesleyan circuit, in his fifty-sixth year.

East Plumstead Mission reports that much blessing has resulted from the labours of the missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Richardson. Work is carried on in a skittle saloon at the back of the "Prince of Orange." This has been secured for services on Sundays, and one service during the week. This work, being unsectarian, is entirely dependent upon voluntary help. In this part of Plumstead there are over 12,000 souls; among this large working-class population (principally employed in Woolwich Arsenal) the need of a hall in which to carry out this work is now pressingly felt. The cost of the building is estimated at £500. A site has been offered. It is earnestly desired that friends will visit the locality and make enquiry as to the need. Address, G. Richardson, Missionary, 99, Brewery-road, Plumstead.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, January 3, 1898.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

THE observance of the Week of Universal Prayer, arranged by the Evangelical Alliance, makes emphatic again how "the whole round world is bound by golden chains about the feet of God." This concert of prayer is a beautiful testimony to the oneness of the spiritual Church of Jesus Christ. God is not a Divine patron of one denomination or another—one sect or another; but the Sovereign Lord and Father of the multitudes of men. Distant from any who love Him He can never be: as near to our brethren in the Antipodes as to the devout company of believers who assembled day by day in St. Martin's Hall and elsewhere in this vast London. Surely the world will be the purer and the Christian Church the holier for this united world-wide praise and prayer!

We give this week the first of a series of addresses by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan on "God's Methods with Man." As our readers will observe, Mr. Campbell Morgan begins with a succinct outline of the period from Creation to Christ. As the tendency to-day seems largely to be to disregard a wide and systematic survey in favour of fitful and intermittent study, we trust our readers will give careful attention to this series of papers, which aim at giving a telescopic view, and bringing out some of the great things of God.

Some interesting letters on private Bible-reading will be found on p. 23. A good illustration of devotional Bible-reading is given in this month's White Ribbon :—

Yesterday morning I received a letter from one to whom I had given my heart and devoted my life. I freely confess to you that I have read that letter five times, not because I did not understand it, not because I expected to commend myself to the author by frequent reading of his epistle. It was not with me a question of duty, but simply one of pleasure. I read it because I am devoted to the one who wrote it. To read the Bible with the same motive is to read it devotionally, and to one who reads it in that spirit it is indeed a love letter.

The New Year address of the Archbishop of York has some wise and stimulating remarks on pastoral visitation. He admits that it requires great devotion and great courage to go from house to house, not in a mere official way to satisfy our own consciences, but "with the special aim of drawing individual souls into closer contact with God." It requires a very loving heart and one in unbroken communion with God to deal with individuals. Then again the Archbishop points out that such work is more familiar to ministers in connection with the poorer members of their flocks, who are also easier of access.

But those who are well-to-do in the world, those who are prospering in their business or living at ease, are equally the members of our flock, and we are equally responsible for them, yet they are often passed over in our pastoral ministrations, and only addressed from the pulpit when they come within the walls of the church.

The only power that can enable a man to do this difficult work is the love of Christ, which regards all alike, and yearns over all alike. Nothing is so fearless and tactful as love.

All friends of true religion, whatever their denominational colour may be, must sincerely regret the continued hostilities between the Bishop of St. Asaph and his clergy. This "washing of dirty linen" in public is always unfortunate, but when it is practised by the leaders of a professing Christian church, it is deplorable beyond expression. Whatever the issue may be, not merely the particular section concerned but the cause of truth generally suffers. Nonconformists will probably say that it is all due to the connection of Church and State, but a little reflection will remind them that such selfish bickerings are not altogether unknown in other churches. No; it arises from the selfishness of the human heart, and reveals the need for a large outpouring of that Christian charity that "seeketh not her own."

While we thoroughly believe in all legitimate efforts to make Christianity appear to the world the bright and sunny thing it really is, we must condemn the conduct of a clergyman who has written a pantomime, in the performance of which the members of his congregation and young people took part, while he himself sustained a character in it. Can the influence of such amusements associated with a Christian Church be other than hindering to the best religious life? Too soon the love of dramatic representations casts a glamour over all classes. To foster it under religious auspices must be reprehensible. It is such entertainments as this that create a love of that unhealthy excitement and display which lead so many into the vortex of worldliness wherein they are lost to the Church of Christ.

The Church Review finds in "the outlook" for this year a good deal to be thankful for; e.g., there is probably no district in the whole country which does not contain at least one "priest" in the Church of England "who teaches by word and ceremonial act the faith of the Church in the Holy Eucharist as a sacrifice." Still it is not content, and never will be, until "the Church" is a home in which all the people shall find spiritual sustenance at the altar. The pardoning power of absolution in the sacrament of penance, the companionship of saints on earth, and the intercession of saints in heaven.

Our contemporary wants "the Catholic party"—it hates the expression, but can find no substitute for it—to carry the whole of the Church of England, and then for "the Catholic movement" to progress until it embraces the majority of Englishmen. There is, then, some limit to the wishes of the perverters of the faith—they want only a majority of the nation. How would it fare, then, with the minority? The Catholic party has never been over-tolerant.

The true spirit towards the living who choose to follow the Word of God and the guidance of the light within is evidenced by the way in which a correspondent speaks of Bunyan, one of "the mighty dead." He was a man of genius and "a good man" (according to his lights), but his whole theology was anti-sacramental. Bluntly we are told "Bunyan was a heretic." Of course, he got what he deserved, and what we suppose the minority of the nation must look for when (if ever) the majority becomes Catholic.

The American Episcopal leaders have been speaking strongly against any organic union with the Anglican Church as a result of the Pan-Anglican Conference, on the ground of the Union of Church and State in this country. The Church in America, they affirm, is as free as the early Christian churches were before the usurpation by Constantine of ecclesiastical authority. The Bishop of Springfield, in his annual address to his Synod, says :—

We are sure in the light of history shining brightly on our path, that centralisation in Church and State is a dangerous condition, and possibly more dangerous in the sphere of spiritual administration than in that of politics. We in our country have happily guarded securely against such perils by the provisions of our constitutions.

It is a significant fact that there is a growing feeling within the Episcopal Church in all parts of the world, that the domination of the State over religion is hurtful to both, as the history of the Papacy in days gone by has proved the reverse to be true. "Unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's"; "unto God the things that are God's."

It is also significant to find the conviction growing stronger that Ritualism is hopelessly inconsistent with the teachings of the New Testament. Rev. J. A. Meeson, in the current Contemporary, describes the Anglican declension from evangelical simplicity as "an apostasy from Christ to Moses." High Churchmen have, for a long time, in their writings and preaching shown a curious weakness for the ceremonial detail of Tabernacle and Temple, which is a sign pointing in the same direction. The New Testament, on the other hand, is unmistakable as to the temporary character of the Mosaic ceremonial. "The Law was a schoolmaster to bring men to Christ," who made the spiritual life absolutely free of external bonds. Ritualism once more entangles men in the old régime, and imprisons the spirit in the things of flesh. It is therefore a retrograde movement. It is the first duty of believers to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free.

The controversy between Anglicans and Romanists, regarding the "validity of orders" among the former, still goes on, the latest phase being a rejoinder by Cardinal Vaughan and the Bishops of his province to the reply of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York to the Papal Bull. In view of the attack of the latter on the Pope's Encyclical, denying the validity of the Anglican priesthood, the Cardinal rightly says that the question was raised in response to appeals from inside the English Church. It is pretty clear to the real friends of the English Church that the leaders in this dispute have only themselves to thank for this rebuff. As a mere matter of controversy the Romanists have scored heavily. Lord Halifax and his friends representing "a numerous section" of the members of the Anglican Church, placed themselves in the humiliating position of beating at the doors of the Vatican for "recognition," thus tacitly acknowledging the supreme authority of the Pope—a fact of which Cardinal Vaughan, with his usual astuteness, does not fail to make the most. From a wider point of view, however, the controversy will not be without its uses. It has served to throw fresh light on the uncompromising claims of the Papacy and its rigid adherence to its so-called "rights," and to check the Romanising tendencies of the High Ritualists, who can in future "go over" only by confessing that their former orders are "invalid" and useless. This will be a great strain on ecclesiastical pride.

Lady Henry Somerset has resigned the presidency of the British Women's Temperance Association by the advice of her physicians. Everyone will regret to hear that she is still unwell, and obliged to rest from public work. But her resignation will cause great relief to a large number of "British Women" who have all along been opposed to her compromising action on the Indian cantonment rules. Ever since last April some opponents of her proposals have taken every opportunity of protesting against her being the head of their Association. Growing dissatisfaction, by no means silent or concealed, has characterised some of the branches. Toward the close of the year a movement was started to send out a letter urging the members not to re-elect Lady Henry as president next May. "A Call to Duty," as the letter was styled, had been in circulation for signatures for a fortnight before Lady Henry's resignation took place. The Times says, "It is dated January 8, the very day on which Lady Henry's resignation was made known"; but it was issued and in the hands of many readers before the latter was announced. The coincidence is remarkable, but not in The Times' sense.

The "Call to Duty," which is signed by some thirty women, has helped to relieve a very painful situation, and to vindicate the Association by standing in evidence that not only was the Association as a body opposed to State regulation of vice, but that the inconsistency of having a president who held opposite views was felt by some, at least, to be intolerable. Let the Association elect a president next time who will be a reconciling centre, and give itself with renewed zeal to its proper work of promoting temperance and purity.

A writer in The Westminster Gazette makes merry over the inscription on the cover of the last report of the United Kingdom Alliance, because the Alliance exists to and yet has been in existence for forty-four years, and the traffic flourishes as much as ever. He forgets, if he ever knew, that the motto of the Abolitionists in the United States was "the immediate and unconditional emancipation of all slaves," and that for five-and-thirty years this "immediate" thing was not done. Nevertheless, the band of true men and women held to their word, for it was the word which quickened the conscience, and called to instant action and imperative duty. Until that word was used there was disunion and apathy. We are not saying that in the case of drink we would refuse any instalment of the ultimate good. Shorter hours, Sunday closing, stricter control, etc., we would take them each and all.

That total abstinence is a prominent factor in promoting longevity is clear from the following figures published by one of our leading insurance societies that groups its members into two classes, abstainers and non-abstainers. During the last thirteen years the actual deaths of abstainers amounted to only 58·06 per cent. of the expected number, while those of non-abstainers reached 80·84 per cent. of the estimate. On the other hand there are thirty-two companies demand an extra premium of £1 per cent. from publicans, and other companies demand still more, while there are eight who altogether refuse to insure anyone belonging to this business. Mr. William Bingham commenting on this fact in the Times a little while ago, says :—

Remembering that the publican is usually comfortably housed, clothed, fed, and not subjected to severe exposure, the terms which the various offices for protective purposes have found it requisite to impose afford strong evidence of the dangerous character of the article he dispenses, and indicate that, injurious as it may be, and is, to the community, it is no less destructive to the vendor.

As men advance in life, they often have to become very careful of their health, and not a few are anxious to find out some nostrum that shall apply to all circumstances. Suppose they were to try keeping the Sabbath Day holy. Mrs. Drew (Mr. Gladstone's daughter) testifies that to him

Physically, intellectually, and spiritually, his Sunday has been a priceless blessing. From Saturday night to Monday morning he puts away all business of a secular nature, keeps to his special Sunday books and thoughts, and never dines out that day, unless to cheer a sick or sorrowful friend; nor will he ever travel on Sundays.

Moral law upholds all other laws; even the physical universe stands on the truth of God. He who would see length of days will find that obedience to the commandments is inclusive of all wise ways of living.

Mr. Gladstone has written a remarkable tribute to the character of Arthur Hallam in the Daily Telegraph of last week. The impression of spiritual nobility left on the minds of his contemporaries by this unique young man, who died before he had written or done anything memorable, is probably unparalleled in history. He was a fountain of influence to two great men who have done more than any other two to mould the thought and action of the last and present generations. To the death of Arthur Hallam we owe "In Memoriam," a poem which, despite its vague doctrinal position, has done inestimable service in comforting the sorrowful, and in helping the sceptical to the beginnings of faith in God.

Two illustrations in a recent issue of the Westminster Gazette indicate what is being done in the little mining village of Lower Hartshay, in Derbyshire. "From Pig-stye to Reading-room," gathers into a sentence how the better sort of miners are seeking to improve themselves. The illustrations give the pig-stye as it was, and as it is after the transformation.

The pig-stye was only six feet square with the usual small door, to pass through which one had to bend double. It boasted of no windows, so candles were necessarily kept alight day and night....Until a year ago the original building remained undisturbed, but the increased membership necessitated alterations and enlargements. The adjoining pig-stye was added, a window placed in the roof and a full-sized entrance and door made. This work was carried out by the members themselves in their spare time, for their funds would not admit of the employment of masons and joiners.

May this thirst for general knowledge soon lead to the "hunger and thirst after righteousness" which Christ promises shall not go unappeased!

In discussing, in The Century Magazine, the methods by which poverty may be abated, Mr. Francis A. Walker is not thorough enough even when he says :

We must strain out of the blood of the race more of the taint inherited from a bad and vicious past before we can eliminate poverty, much more pauperism, from our social life.

A new heart and a right spirit can alone purify the blood, whether a man has or has not in him the taint of poverty. But it is curious to see how science is laying the stress, as has religion all along, upon the inner condition of men, whilst, no doubt, environment plays its part. The indwelling of Christ makes the inside as well as the outside new. Quite familiar among Christian workers are cases in which, with the influences of heredity and environment against them, men and women have conquered by the higher power of Christ within, vicious tendencies having been counteracted by Him who is the Stronger than the strong.

A book, noticed some time ago in these columns, on "The Superiority of the Anglo-Saxons," written by a Frenchman for Frenchmen, has made a profound impression on the thinkers of that country, and they have been giving their own version of the reasons why the Gallic nation is lagging behind us in the essentials of character. Some of these reasons are odd and fantastic; but there is one which amounts to a remarkable admission, seeing it comes from l'Association Catholique. It is that "the prosperity of the Protestant peoples is explained by the fact that they have better kept the faith, and more consistently practised the Decalogue than the decatholicised Catholic nations." There is one superfluous word in this sentence; "decatholicised" might be omitted, and the statement would be equally true.

Once again lovers of art are invited to inspect a new conception of that awe-inspiring scene in which the haughty Roman displays to the Jewish rabble the humble yet commanding figure of Christ. The painter of this fresh "Ecce Homo!" is the great Hungarian, Munkacsy, and it is his last unfinished masterpiece, for its author is prostrated without hopes of working again. It is on exhibition in the Dowdeswell Gallery, Bond-street. But it is not only as a work of art, or even on account of the pathetic interest attached to its execution that such a picture commands attention. The treatment may be inconsistent, the conception and execution inadequate, but the fact remains, that after nearly nineteen centuries, whenever a painter has the necessary confidence in his ability, he more often turns for the subject of his masterpiece to that one abundantly painted figure than to any other in the range of history. The greater the mind the more is perceived in that Divine humanity.

But to be a great painter of Christ, by brush, pen, or word, one must be among the lowliest of those who follow Him, and this is where so many who attempt it fail. So it has been with Munkacsy. In the words of a competent critic :

This figure, even though it falls far short of the immeasurable tragedy presented, has, undoubtedly, force and significance of a kind. It is marked by a certain strength and fortitude; but this is rather the Roman fortitudo, the power to do as well as to bear, than the true expression of the Divine acquiescence dominating physical agony. Too conscious of the pitying gaze of others are the upturned, appealing eyes of the Divine figure.

Yes, "immeasurable"; that is the word. "But what to those who find? Ah, this no tongue or pen can show;" yet, through all ages, all divisions of the Church, there has been no change and no division in the adoration of that figure, whether limned in art or literature; and the greatest effect has always been produced on the world when the life of Christ has been most closely studied.

"The Last Judgment."

II THE CHARACTER OF THE JUDGMENT

By Rev W. D. RUSSELL CALEY, M.A.
Vicar of Watton, Norfolk.

"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of his glory."—Matt. xxv. 31.

WE have considered the character of the Judge, let us now think of the nature of the judgment. No earthly judgment can be compared to it, for—

I. It is glorious. All its accessories will be splendid, awe-inspiring, magnificent, grand. Everything that can add to the dignity of the occasion will be brought to bear upon it. There shall be a "great white throne" (Rev. xx. 11) significant of power and purity. Its occupier shall have every attribute of splendour (Dan. vii. 9, 10). Nothing shall be wanting to impress the beholder with reverence and fear (2 Thess. i. 8; 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10).

II. It will be inevitable. Everyone must be there. There will be no fear of missing this grand spectacle, like many an earthly display, but "we must all appear" (Rom. xiv. 10, 11; 2 Cor. v. 10). There will be no "absentees," no delinquents, no "alibis."

III. It shall be universal. What a marvellous thought is this; no local assize, but a world-wide call to judgment. No person, or nation will be excluded. God will "be the judge of all the earth" (Gen. xviii. 25). He shall "judge the ends of the earth" (1 Sam. ii. 10). No remote island, no obscure tribe inhabiting forests, rocks, or deserts, shall escape the summons. The Pigmies of Central Africa, the Llamas of fast closed Tibet, the lonely explorer of the icy North, shall all be there.

IV. This Judgment will be Righteous. It will be an absolutely holy judgment, without the faintest admixture of injustice. "He will judge the world in righteousness" (Acts xvii. 31, Ps. xix. 9, cp. Job. viii. 3). There shall not be the smallest complaint against the justice and adequacy of its decrees (Job xxxiv. 18, 19).

V. This Judgment is Final and Irrevocable. It is the Last Judgment. It takes place at "the last day" (John xii. 48). There shall be no further assize. No case will be remitted to a future time, or postponed to a more convenient season, everything will be settled then finally and for ever. No one will be able to cling to any hope of a commutation of sentence at a future tribunal or reprieve from another jurisdiction. "Where the tree falleth, there it shall be" (Eccles. xi. 3).

But what will this Judgment do? What are its main characteristics judicially? They are threefold.

(a) It will reveal. "God will judge the secrets of men" (Rom. ii. 16). "He will bring to light the hidden things of darkness" (1 Cor. iv. 5).

Amidst all the splendours of Divine power, the profoundest secrets of our hearts and lives will be made manifest to angels and to men. The most perfect human legislation, the most complete police organisation the world knows of, leaves a large amount of undiscovered crime. Here there will be none. No sin overlooked, no deed of darkness unrevealed.

(b) It will separate—the good and the bad (Matt. xxv. 32, 46). The tares and the wheat, the gold and the dross, will be for ever separated the one from the other. The Lord Himself shall sit in all his majesty as refiner and purifier (Mal. iii. 2-3).

(c) It shall be a time of reward—every man shall receive according to his works (Matt. xvi. 27); each shall receive his own reward (1 Cor. iii. 8), even as his work deserves (Rev. xxii. 12).

What encouragement. None passed by; no service, however small, ignored, but each and all duly recompensed.

The Minister, "Limited."

By Rev. ALEXANDER McKENZIE, D.D.,
Cambridge, Mass.

THE title is taken from an expression common in England, and coming into use in this country, to denote the restricted responsibility of certain corporations. It has occurred to me that it might well be applied to the ministry. This is the only calling which has been expanded in recent years. Every other profession has been divided and has taken up special lines of work. There is a physician for each part of the body, and a lawyer for each variety of the cause. But the minister has come to regard himself as a teacher in science, an authority in finance, a master in social philosophy, a leader in politics. Each of these departments is honourable, but it is evident that no single mind can compass them all, and that he who would be proficient in either of them must devote himself to that. The present method in many instances leads to crude opinions, unwarranted judgments, intemperate harangues, and this degrades the minister's proper work. For strong as the minister is, he can not do many things well.

It was not strange when an eminent man of science, who was a devout Christian, complained that it was sometimes hard to go to church. He was in danger of hearing it proved that it was not impossible for a man in his calling to be a Christian, and of having thrust upon him the reconciliation of religion and science by a youth who may have known something of one, but certainly knew very little of the other.

It seems to be time to recall the minister to his work. What is he to do? What is he for? What is his specialty? He stands in the world in Christ's name, to proclaim his Gospel, and to call men to its grace. He is to call men to the Christian life, and to help them to live it in honesty and usefulness. This is enough for him. In this will be found the principles of true living which he is constantly to teach, while he lets men apply them in the light of their own intelligence, and in loyalty to their own conscience.

If there were nothing else to be said in favour of this limitation, it is to be observed that these times are in especial need of seeing Christ Himself, of hearing his voice, of confessing his authority. "Lo here!" and "Lo there!" are burdening the air. What is most needed is one who will call men to Christ and bid them rest there. This is directly and confessedly the work of the Christian minister. It is sublime and sufficient. It will engage all his power and employ all his time. It will give light and life steadily and efficiently.

Some are looking to men, believing that in men and in society are to be found all the forces which are needed to make the world right. Others search the remote heavens, to find God, and if possible to bring Him down. The truth is that the regenerating power of God is here already. It is in Jesus Christ, and in the Spirit which He promised to the world: the Holy Spirit also glorifies Him and guides men into his truth. He that hath seen the Son of God hath seen the Father. It is in Him that God comes to us, redeems us, inspires us, and gives "the power of an endless life." The Good Shepherd of the New Testament is the Shepherd of the twenty-third Psalm, to which He adds one line, "The Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." He calls men to Himself. "Come unto Me" is his constant summons. When a man dying at his side, bewildered by the pains of crucifixion, turned to Him for help, He let him rest there with this assurance: I shall be in Paradise to-day, and you shall be with Me.

In the prison of Phillipi St. Paul directed the jailer to another by whom he should be saved. Christ would not have done that, but would have held the penitent in his own compassion and saved him there. Is not this plain? This is the Gospel. This is the minister's message to the world. Let him declare it, clearly, steadily, constantly; for herein is to be found and felt the wisdom of God and the power of God.

I cannot speak lightly of any man's religion, nor of any man's attempt to help the needy world. But it is a pitiful thing to pass by the very present help of God, which among men is named Christ, that the needed free grace may be found beyond Him. I do not know what God will do for those who see Christ, and with admiration turn away from Him to save the world in some other way. The uncovenanted mercies of God we are not called upon to define. If God uses them to bless the world, let it be so. But for Christ's minister the way is plain. He is to preach Christ, the fulness of Divine grace, the treasure-house of Divine help, and let nothing separate him or his message "from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." He will be the minister limited; but he will have room enough in "the love of Christ which passeth knowledge."

Memories.

Silently the rosy shadows
Sink to slumber in the west,
Slowly memories of the day-time
Waken in the lonely breast.

Faces forming in the smoke-wreaths
Smile with pity half divine;
Through the silence and the darkness
Shadow-hands are clasped in mine.

Joys that lit the dying embers
Of the fitful fires of youth,
Flicker, crackle in the firelight—
Live more truly than the truth.

Times now passed and gone for ever,
Clouds that rolled across the sky,
Waken through the night of dreaming
Like a startled infant's cry.

Voices death has hushed for ever
Greet my wandering soul again,
And the sweetness of communion
Banishes the thought of pain.

Coughing in Church.—We might, with much show of reason, regard this as a device of the evil one to prevent the good seed of the Kingdom from taking root, and as such it should be most carefully guarded against and, where possible, repressed. It is sometimes assumed as an axiom that a cough is a tyrant whom it is vain to resist and hopeless to conciliate, but this is by no means universally the case. Much may be done by thoughtful determination and judicious management to mitigate, if not to wholly overcome, this serious hindrance to reverent worship. A supply of lozenges will do much to subdue the irritation, and the use of a handkerchief will very largely deaden the sound when an outburst becomes inevitable. — "News Sheet" of Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead.

The Testimony of Jesus
Concerning Himself.

By Rev. DR. JAMES CULROSS.

HIDING AND REVEALING.

(Concluded.)

THE next great thought is that God's highest revelation of Himself is made through Jesus Christ; "the light of the glory of God" shines in the face of Jesus Christ; "the only-begotten Son, He hath declared Him."

Observe how this thought is put: "All things (that is, all things in question now—the things hidden from the wise and prudent, and made known to babes)—all these things are delivered unto Me of my Father" (Matt. xi. 27). Elsewhere He says: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth"; "The Father hath committed all judgment to the Son"; "The Son hath authority on earth to forgive sins"; "He has power over all flesh to give eternal life," and so on. But in this particular connection the "all things" delivered to Jesus are the things hidden from the wise and prudent and revealed unto babes. The prophets of old had only some things delivered to them; only parts of the truth and counsel of God—only glimpses, wonderful indeed, but broken and partial. Moses knew some things, and David and Isaiah and others in like manner; but "all things" are delivered unto Jesus, the Son of Man. He is in full possession of the knowledge of God, and whatsoever we need to know as creatures and as sinners is to be found in Him. Such is the immense claim not merely for Jesus but by Him. "All things are delivered to Him"—the full truth respecting the character and counsel of God.

He goes on: "And no man knoweth the Son but the Father." These words must have been startling to the hearers, No man knows Me but God. Recollect, the Speaker was one whom they knew familiarly—a young man only thirty years of age, a young man in humble life, not a student, not a recluse, not one who (like John the Baptist) had spent years in lonely thought, or lived in converse with the mighty dead, but what is called a working man, a carpenter, brought up among Galilean villagers, to work with axe and hammer and saw.

Observe what claims he makes: No man knows Me but the Eternal Father. There is a striking expression in one of the Psalms, applying to all the inhabiters of the world: "He fashioneth their hearts alike." There are great differences among men, springing from original constitution, education, circumstances, and so forth; but deep down, among the elementary principles of our nature, we are very much the same; our hearts are fashioned alike; and so, in knowing ourselves, we know other men. But here is One who says, No one knows Me but God the Father. No mere man is entitled to speak in this style. And, as a matter of fact, the loftiest and noblest in history—the great thinkers, the leaders in the van of progress, the men like Socrates or Newton—do not speak in this style, but, on the contrary, are marked out by their modesty, and by disclaiming such pre-eminence as is here involved. Evidently, in speaking as He does, Jesus claims some unique and mysterious dignity of nature as well as some unparalleled intimacy with God. I do not know any way of allowing full value to his words, except by quoting what John says: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; and the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." If for any reason this is not allowed, then I must hold Him to be a presumptuous blasphemer.

But even this is not the whole claim, for He adds, "Neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him." In so saying, He claims what we may call a monopoly of Divine knowledge. It is not merely that He has risen to a point of grander outlook than that of ordinary men—not merely that He has attained fuller knowledge of God than they—but all knowledge of God that men have flows from Him. The whole of mankind are ranged together on one side, and Jesus stands alone on the other, absolutely by Himself, solitary and unsupported, and the whole world is declared to be dependent on Him for knowing God. And, as a matter of fact, we know nothing of God beyond what Jesus Christ has shown us. Subtract the words of Jesus from the sum of our knowledge, and nothing is left.

Facing the whole world and all the ages of time, Jesus issues this call, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." I do not attempt to indicate the full breadth of application of these words. To do so, it would be necessary to bring into view what is the chief producer of unrest—the very root of all human fear and misery and blindness, namely, Sin—and to show how Jesus delivers from that, speaking peace by the blood of his cross, and bringing light to the darkened mind, and bringing the whole inner being into joyful reconcilement with God.

But we must first take the words in their original application to inward rest (rest and assurance of heart with regard to the knowledge of God). A strong probability will not do. There are questions that press both on the conscience and heart, but which baffle the intellect. An unknown God must be an object of disquietude to men; they cannot tell whether to flee from Him in terror, or run to Him for shelter. To men with no assurance, life must be a dark and terrible enigma.

To whom shall we turn, in what school shall we enrol ourselves, to get our perplexities and dread removed, and the questions of conscience and heart answered? The scribe, the rabbi, the sage, the man of learning, the intuitionalist, the philosopher, all offer to teach us; but what wearisome labour they impose upon us, on what a painful and toilsome quest they send us! And after all they leave us unsatisfied—with spirits weary and burdened, hopelessly wondering if certitude be possible! Is there no other way? If there is none, what sorrow for those whose life is ebbing out, for the toilworn masses, for the little children, for the vast multitude who have neither the time nor the mental fitness to master the teaching of the philosophers!

But here is One who says, Come unto Me, all ye who labour and are heavy-laden, having wearied yourselves in a bootless quest. Come unto Me, past rabbi and philosopher; learn of Me; become my disciples; sit quietly and meekly down at the feet of the meek and lowly one, and I will give you rest—rest of mind, rest of heart, rest of conscience, rest from your hitherto eager and fruitless research. Take my yoke upon you, and my burden; submit to my teaching, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light.

Ask your great question at Jesus' feet, and you will find the answer not merely from his lips, but in his person and life. The grace and truth, the meekness and majesty, the compassion and love that you see in Jesus exhibit to us what God is. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."

A Churchman's Notes.

THE Archbishop of York's proposal to create a new Bishopric for South Yorkshire does not seem to elicit much practical interest in Sheffield, the centre of the suggested diocese. That city is overwhelmingly Evangelical and Protestant, and they are evidently chary of founding anything of whose spiritual character they cannot be certain.

Rev. H. J. R. Marston commenced his ministry at Belgrave Chapel last week with a very characteristic sermon on "Imputed Righteousness." The teaching is evidently to be on lines that were dear to Mr. Marcus Rainsford's heart and ministry. It is very touching to note that though blind Mr. Marston administered the Lord's Supper without any clerical assistance at all.

Mr. Athelstan Riley has recently been calling attention to the Greek Church as the probable quarter whence re-union will come, and he speaks of that Church as the truest representative of the primitive and historic church. But it all depends what is meant by "primitive." The primitive church proper is found depicted in the New Testament, and by this test the Greek Church is scarcely more "primitive" than the Roman. But the sole supremacy of Scripture is hardly an article of faith with Mr. Riley.

The Church Times in noticing the little book for mourners lately published in German, and understood to be by Princess Henry of Battenberg, hopes that some of its teaching about the dead may lead further in the direction of what it calls Christian (but is really Romish) doctrine. This view is not warranted by facts, and everyone who values New Testament truth will rejoice that one so near the throne holds the faith of Christ in its purity and simplicity.

How significant and sad it is to read in a Church paper these words by the manager of a London theatre. "Your paper widely circulates among those who are regular patrons of the pantomime." And the Editor's rejoinder: "Between the Church and the legitimate drama there is no dispute. The stage when properly managed can bear a useful part in improving manners and producing good moral impressions." But somehow it never does.

The Archbishops of Canterbury and York have issued a letter calling attention to the bicentenary of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. Its work for literature, for missions, for our colonies and for emigrants is simply invaluable and indispensable. Unfortunately, it is now very largely in High Church hands, and certainly its books cannot be trusted by Evangelicals without careful scrutiny. But for this, our appreciation of its work would be unqualified.

The Greater Britain Messenger, the organ of the Colonial and Continental Church Society, has a letter from Rev. H. A. Naylor, who writes of Klondyke and of future prospects of Gospel work among the miners.

The work at St. Thomas's Episcopal Church, Edinburgh, is one which deserves the sympathy and support of all who value Gospel truth. It is a harbour of refuge for Evangelical Episcopalians in Edinburgh who object to the Ritualism of the Scottish Episcopal Church. The present incumbent, Rev. H. J. Colclough, is holding the fort bravely, and his recent report shows much encouraging work for home and foreign missions.

The Bishop of Newcastle in the two years of his office has visited almost every parish in his diocese, and his remarks on the work are most interesting and characteristic of his untiring energy. His constant emphasis on foreign missionary work is a matter of much thankfulness.

We are sorry to read of anxiety about the funds of the Irish Church Missions, and sincerely trust the fears may be soon relieved by God's stewards. Never was the work more promising or more definitely useful than to-day. F. C.

The Hebrew Christian Union exists for the purpose of uniting Jewish Christians in bonds of sympathy and prayer, and the strengthening of their testimony and work. A gathering of members was held at Mildmay a few days ago, at which encouraging addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Rosedale, F. L. Denman, I. Levinsohn, A. Bernstein, M. M. Ben-Oliel, G. Robinson Lees, A. Sternberg, M. Nachim, E. Abrahamson, and others.

From Other Lands

The Slovaks of Hungary.

AMONGST the various nationalities of Hungary are the Slovaks, a branch of the Slavonic people. In the northern part of Hungary they are much neglected, and would be utterly forgotten were it not for two dear sisters, Marie and Christine Roy in O'Tura, who labour amongst their own people in the Gospel. They began with a Sunday-school in their own town, and after very tenacious perseverance, in spite of opposition by the clergy and on the part of their own family, they have been successful, and the Lord has enlarged their borders. Some converts of theirs are now labouring in the Gospel with great acceptance. One is working all but single-handed among Croats in the far south of Hungary.

The Slovaks are jealous to retain their own language, but they have no religious literature except the Bible. The Sisters Roy desire to obtain some good tracts for the people; those that are in print are not understood by them, the language being defectively rendered. Also, they are anxious to have a harmonium for their Sunday-school and religious meetings. I have known the Misses Roy for several years, and am convinced that any expression of sympathy shown them is not misplaced. There are other parts of the Austro-Hungarian Empire which are sadly neglected, and have strong claims on the prayerful sympathy of Christians in England and Germany.

The Slavonic nations are wonderfully accessible to the Gospel. Dr. Clark in Prague has for the last twenty-five years laboured amongst the Bohemians with great success. Under his wise superintendence thousands have been rescued from the stupefying errors of Rome, and there are now in Bohemia many flourishing and promising assemblies of believers connected with the Free Church. The name of Huss the Martyr is highly honoured in the land, but Rome's emissaries have turned its fame to mere national heroism. Huss's birthplace (Hussinec) has been turned into a museum by the Romanists, but a beloved brother secured a barn which lies behind Huss's house and turned it into a Gospel hall, in which the Reformer's Bible is honoured and explained. This draws the people in spite of the rage of the Roman priests, and many converts are the result.

There is room for the glowing zeal of many evangelists throughout the empire of Austria and its various dependencies—Hungaria, Bosnia, Croatia, Bohemia, Transylvania, Galicia, Moravia, and Bukovina. In all these lands the Jews form a prominent portion of the population. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers." "Lord send me."

Dr. Comandi's Work in Florence.

Mrs. Leigh Bayly, writing from Park House, Farnborough, Hants, with reference to the remarkable work of Dr. Comandi in Florence, says:—"A pressing claim of £300 must be paid during the current month. The debt would never have been contracted had certain friends been able to fulfil their promises of pecuniary assistance; but, owing to deaths and the bank failures in Italy, this expected help did not come. Many may not know how heavily this burden presses upon Dr. Comandi. One who has been a benefactress to many has recently sent £50, feeling how valuable his orphanage is; but £250 still remains to be raised, and as the time of payment is drawing so near, I earnestly trust that some may be found able and willing to relieve God's faithful and tried servant from this heavy burden."

Burmah.—The members of the A.B.M.U. native Church at Tavoy, Burmah, recently passed a resolution in reference to extending their evangelistic work, and agreed to deny themselves food and clothing if necessary, in order to provide the needed funds. Every teacher in the school gave a month's wages towards the purpose—some even more—and several touching gifts were made, showing noble self-denial.

English Women in Paris.

I ARRIVED in Paris on Christmas Day, in the midst of a severe frost. I found my way to the Orphanage, 35, Boulevard Bineau, in time to see the children march into the dining-hall singing, to partake of their Christmas dinner. Their bright and happy appearance reflected great credit on Miss Lawler, the lady superintendent. The children thoroughly enjoyed themselves. An adjournment was afterwards made to Christ Church, where the chaplain, Rev. Dr. Adams, had arranged a little service on behalf of the Orphanage.

In the evening, at the Mission Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, considerably over one hundred young ladies were gathered for their annual Christmas dinner and soirée, which was declared to be one of the most enjoyable ever spent at the Home. Dr. Adams and myself spoke to those assembled of the love of God in the gift of his Son to a lost world. The absence of my sister, Mrs. Travers Lewis, was much regretted on this, the twenty-fifth anniversary, but her New Year's letter, written from Canada, was circulated, and she was remembered at the Throne of Grace.

On the last Sunday of the year I had the privilege of taking the Bible-class at Washington House, 18, Rue de Milan, where Lord Radstock had for several Sundays been giving Bible readings. Miss Ayerst is still at her post exercising a Christlike influence on all the young ladies in the Home. Twenty-six governesses and artists were present, and we had a profitable time. In the evening, at 77, Avenue Wagram, I spoke to Miss Carmichael's men's Bible-class in the Mission Hall.

The early part of the following week was occupied with Christmas gatherings for various classes of people—the children connected with the Sunday-school, the kindergarten, the mothers' meeting, and the men who attend the soup kitchen, comprising coach and stable men, clerks, interpreters, waiters, and others out of employment, and more or less in a destitute condition.

The watch-night service, which it has been my privilege to take for so many years, was held as usual at the Mission Hall, Avenue Wagram. Miss Scofield, of the Pentecostal League, gave a very helpful address, and I gave the closing word just before entering on the New Year.

It is pleasing to see the devotion of the workers, who continue their self-denying efforts amidst great difficulties. Miss Mitchell, who has laboured unceasingly for the last sixteen years, reports splendid work constantly going on at the Bureau in Avenue Wagram, and the utility of the work in its varied branches is manifest on every side. It is impossible to give details, but these can be found in Echoes from Paris or the annual report. The least we can do is to assist in a practical way.

A pleasing feature, since my last visit, has been the help given in Paris to the Orphanage. Much, however, remains to be done, as many subscribers have passed away, and their places are not being filled by others, while the lapsing of the Galignani legacy of £300 per annum has been severely felt.

Our honorary treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C., will gladly receive help towards this work; or it may be given to Miss Rhoda Mouncey, 22a, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

Thos. A. Leigh.

Wisconsin.—Mr. P. A. Seguin, an ex-priest, after seventeen years of faithful service as a Protestant, has located at Pepin, Wisconsin, where he is seeking to build a home for ex-priests on a tract of land given to him for that purpose by a citizen of that town. Like others who have been rescued from the tyranny and superstition of Roman Catholicism, Mr. Seguin is zealous in trying to rescue others, and with a view of promoting this work, he is about to establish a home of refuge for those whom he and others may succeed in winning from Rome.

Western France.—A tour of visitation was recently made in Western France by Mr. J. G. Alexander and Mr. C. D. Terrell, chiefly in connection with the stations of the McAll Mission. These two brethren report not a few encouraging features in relation to the progress of Protestant effort, while, of course, there are many difficulties from the superstitions of the people and the opposition of the Romish priests. The evils of intemperance are very manifest among the French people. There is need for greater zeal and unity on the part of Protestant Christians in seeking the evangelisation of France.

Melbourne Mems.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

THE National Scripture Education League of Victoria, a league established for the purpose of restoring Scripture lessons to the State schools of this Australian colony, had a great campaign prior to the recent general elections. A newspaper entitled The Truth was issued weekly for thirteen weeks, and meetings were held throughout the country. Rev. F. F. Goe, Anglican Bishop of Melbourne, President of the League, took considerable interest in the work, and spoke at several of the meetings. The Wesleyan Church, judging by the speeches of its leaders, was as one man in the cause, while the Presbyterians were the backbone of the movement, Professors Rentoul and Harper doing the bulk of the public speaking. The colony was roused in regard to the question, and as the elections were politically colourless, it held a prominent place in public gatherings of candidates and supporters. Amongst those returned to Parliament the League reckons fifty-one out of the ninety-five members in the Assembly to be favourable to Scripture-reading as part of the State school curriculum.

Professor Harper left the Colony immediately after the elections for a six months' trip to the old country. He not only worked hard in connection with the League before the elections, but has all along been one of the moving spirits in the cause. He deserves a well-earned holiday. During the special mission of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria in August he was one of the most successful missioners. His deep piety, his broad evangel, and his impressive earnestness, added to his great Scriptural knowledge, constituted him a powerful preacher, young men specially being won by his efforts.

The Victorian Sunday School Union is worked by energetic, enthusiastic leaders, and has accomplished great things. It publishes its own Sunday-school leaflets, and supplies a large amount of useful and Scriptural literature, not only to Victoria but to the other Australian colonies as well. It aims at having a van filled with Bibles, good books, and magazines sent through the outlying districts of the Colony in a short time. Already its Bush Mission Agency has established a number of Sunday-schools in outlying places where denominationalism has given way to a harmonious working for the Master.

During November the Colony passed through trying times. On the 19th a storm of unusual severity visited it, which in some places came with the force of a cyclone, doing a large amount of damage all over the country and devastating a Western town named Nhill. In a number of towns the churches were wrecked, and in some places almost entirely destroyed. On the morning of Sunday, the 21st, the greatest fire known in any Australian city occurred, and in five hours a large portion of one of the most important business blocks in Melbourne was reduced to a mass of ruins.

During November the annual meetings of the Presbyterian General Assembly and the Baptist Union were held. In the former, debates on the Union question showed great disunion, many advocating federation of the Colonial Churches in preference to union. One of the most definite works of this large body is the rescue of neglected children, Miss Stewart, the agent of the society, having proved herself a most suitable worker in the cause.

Literature for Missionaries.—Rev. F. B Meyer presided at a conference held to consider the projected association to supply missionaries of all denominations with literature. The conference took place in Hawkestone Hall, adjoining Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. Mr. W. R. Dover (the originator of the scheme) informed the conference as to what had been done. It appears that in 1893 the idea was conceived to supply missionaries with useful periodicals, and in co-operation with a few Christian sympathisers, some 33,700 periodicals per annum had been provided. It was unanimously decided at the conference that an association should be formed, entitled "The Missionary Literature Association," to supply Evangelical and undenominational missionaries with useful literature. Rev. F. B. Meyer accepted the office of president for the first year, and a committee was formed. Mr. W. R. Dover, of Ash Lea, Elmsdale-road, Palmer's Green, N., was appointed hon. secretary, to whom communications may be addressed.

Revival in Peru.

By Rev. T. B. Wood, D.D.

THE port of Callao, in Peru, has been visited with a religious revival on a scale never before known in its history. The English community has been convulsed, and the movement has affected the other foreign communities and been felt among the native masses. The singular importance of this movement is best seen by looking first at the circumstances under which it took place.

SPIRITUAL CONDITION OF FOREIGN PROTESTANTS.

In the Republic of Peru there are restrictions on religious liberty which perpetuate the spirit of the Spanish Inquisition. Protestants settled in the country fall under the spell of that spirit, and get into the way of keeping their religion a secret. Even Britons and North Americans, with all their characteristic boldness, cannot escape the spell, and as a rule keep at a minimum the open testimony of their faith. The Protestant churches built by the English-speaking communities of Callao and Lima, are constructed in such a way that no one can discover from the outside that they are churches. The one in Callao has been kept closed most of the time for years; and whenever it is opened great anxiety is shown lest something should occur that might displease the native archbishop or the Papal delegate in Lima. The young people of the English-speaking community grow up in a suffocating atmosphere, and, as a result, their spiritual natures are sadly atrophied. An evangelistic revival in such surroundings, counting among its trophies a large proportion of young people, deserves to be considered a spiritual miracle of a high order.

PREPARATIONS FOR REVIVAL.

Such a miracle has come to pass. The preparations for it began in 1891, when some North American Methodist missionaries settled in Callao to carry on the work among the natives begun by Rev. Francisco Pinzotti, embracing the whole coast from Chili to Panama, and in places penetrating the interior. These operations, though designed for the masses of the people, have reacted on the foreign communities, especially in Callao, the headquarters, where the mission force has grown to three men with families and three single ladies, all from the United States. Their efforts among the English-speaking people were aided in 1894 by the co-operation of three men from the East London Mission Institute, sent out to work in different parts of Peru, under the name of "The Peruvian Mission." One of these, Mr. A. R. Stark, has resided in Callao lately, and rendered occasional assistance in the English work.

These operations have gradually affected the English-speaking people in wider and wider circles. Many hearts have been awakened, some have been converted, and the mission workers have been praying and longing for a powerful religious revival.

DR. HARRY GUINNESS IN CALLAO.

The outburst came in connection with a visit of Dr. Harry Guinness, of the East London Institute. He arrived on Monday, September 20. On Wednesday evening he spoke in a prayer meeting sustained in English by the American Methodists, not in the church belonging to the English-speaking community, which is never opened for prayer-meetings, but in the native mission chapel. Dr. Guinness gained at once the sympathy of the mission circle, and undertook a series of meetings, beginning on Sept. 25 with a lecture on his travels in the Congo regions, illustrated with stereopticon views, the proceedings being made to illustrate in a thrilling way the needs of unregenerate humanity and the power of the Gospel to meet them.

Three meetings were held daily—for prayer in the morning, Scripture exposition in the afternoon, and preaching in the evening, with after-meetings for seekers after salvation. These came forward night after night—old, middle-aged, and young—notably the youth of both sexes belonging to a high school conducted by the American missionaries. In that institution a majority of the students professed conversion under Dr. Guinness's appeals, and all were favourably affected. At a closing service, testimonies were given by many who had been blessed during the revival.

Dr. Guinness spent another Sunday in Callao (October 24), between his return from the interior and his departure for the regions further south. Several places of worship were thrown open to him, and he spoke six times on the day named, closing with a sermon through an interpreter to the native Methodist congregation. Thus abundant in labours, and full of spiritual and physical strength, he mightily convinced both Peruvians and foreigners of the truths concerning salvation.

He had for co-labourers the American Methodist missionaries, under the leadership of Rev. J. M. Spangler; the members of the Peruvian Mission of the East London Institute; a representative of the Christian Alliance of New York, recently sent out for work in Peru, and others, all labouring together in delightful harmony. One of the most precious of the meetings was a communion service on the second Sunday, wherein lovers of Christ, new and old, members of various denominations, united in the memorial ordinance.

ENCOURAGING RESULTS.

These lines are written, not in the heat of the intense interest that accompanied the revival, but after lapse of time sufficient to measure coolly the permanent results, and view them in their far-reaching relations. The like was never before known in Peru. The effects are already widespread, and are extending more and more. The converts are remaining firm, and developing zeal for Bible study and for activity in Christian service. No backsets have occurred. No defections have appeared. The powers of darkness indeed are raging, but that is a good sign.

All the converts are bilingual, some of them trilingual, and are destined to exert influence through Spanish as well as English and German. Experience in other parts of South America has shown that such converts become the most efficient agents of evangelism in these countries. In the present case the circles of young people connected with the mission schools form a centre of influence whose importance is incalculable.

Judah Homeward Turns.

(Vide Zionist Movement.)

Hark! hark! a moan of pain
Is in the Eastern gale;
It floats across the main
Where sons of Judah sail
Toward the Holy Land afar,
Bright homeland of the Morning Star.

O Christian, hearest thou?
And, hearing, heedest not?
Awake to pity now,
Lest mercy be forgot.
O heed a nation's cry of pain,
And speed it to its home again.

O purse-proud Jew, be wise!
Curst is thy love of gold;
Thy sin-deluded eyes,
Blind to the truth, retold
From age to age for centuries past:
To heavenly Light, O turn at last!

Think not the western lands
Will ever welcome thee;
The spoiler's bloody hands,
Made fierce by jealousy,
In chastisement God still will use,
If His salvation ye refuse.

Meek sons of Judah, know,
Thro' Wisdom's light of love,
Why age on age of woe
Sin's curse can ne'er remove.
Messiah's death upon the tree,
Alone from guilt can set us free.

Come, come, Lord Jesus, come!
King David's throne ascend!
Not Israel gathered home
Will Jacob's trouble end:
Fierce warfare at Jerusalem
Awaits rebellious sons of Shem.

When, man from wife apart,
The tribes their crime shall own,
As stricken to the heart
The Son of God they mourn,
Within the Homeland God will pour
His Spirit on our race once more.

Then to old Salem go,
"Tribes of the wand'ring feet,"
Where, as thy tears shall flow
Before the mercy seat,
The Lamb of God once slain for sin,
As King of Glory will come in.

The Beatitudes.—Matt. v. 1-12.

Golden Text:—Ye are the light of the world.—Matt. v. 14.

THE BEATITUDES form the text of the Sermon on the Mount—the seed out of which that tree grew. Christ spoke on the mountain-side so as to be seen and heard of all. "Sat" (custom of Jewish doctors) in token of his authority (1).

Blessed.—Happiness arising from an inward peace.

Illustration.—Elixir of immortality, which old alchemists sought, was to give eternal blessedness to anyone who drank it.

Take Beatitudes in order.

1. Poor in Spirit.

This is not poverty in worldly goods. It is the opposite of pride and self-righteousness. Those who feel their own worthlessness rely on the wealth of God and are satisfied. (See Matt. xviii. 3.) "Suffer little children to come unto Me, etc." The child-like humble spirit inherits heaven. Theirs is the spirit which creates heaven. Heaven is where God is.

2. They that Mourn—over their own sins or the sins of others—grieve over the many disappointments and failures of life. These shall be comforted—strengthened. It is not that the tears are wiped away altogether, but are transmuted into pearls.

Illustration.—Men who have striven against big storms are best swimmers. Stones that have been dashed about in the wildest waves are the smoothest and shiniest.

3. The Meek.

This means submission to God's will—not a colourless character: lionlike in fearlessness before men, submissive before God. Such people get the best out of the world. Money, lands, honour, troubles, friends—all these have a tendency to become our masters. The man who, like Christ, says, "Thy will be done," makes them his servants. "All things are yours," in this sense.

4. The Hungry and Thirsty.

Those who are very anxious to do what is right. If they go on striving after righteousness they will attain it—in Christ. Practice makes perfect in all departments of life; "seek and ye shall find." "Discontent with what we have done, is the nerve of progress." "They shall be filled."

5. The Merciful.

Pity is compassion for anyone. Mercy is compassion for one who has done you a wrong. No end to this virtue. We are to be merciful to the same person a thousand times. The merciful obtain mercy from God and man. We are paid back in our own coin. We reap the same kind of fruit as we sow.

6. The Pure in Heart.

Clean in imagination, unselfish in purpose. The clever can see (appreciate and enjoy) clever people and things. The miser can see gold. The worldly can see pleasure. The good can see God. Our disposition is a coloured glass through which we look upon persons and things outside ourselves.

7. The Peacemakers.

Those who try to reconcile man to man, man to his circumstances, man to God. This must be done in God's way, not by lying or hiding the truth. No real peace until Jesus rules. We travel sometimes through strife to peace. The peacemakers are like God; doing his work, therefore, they are sons of God.

Illustration.—The joy of one who puts a discordant instrument in tune.

The Beatitudes which follow were pronounced on those who suffer for having any of the above virtues.

The Persecuted (10, 11).

But only certain classes of the persecuted, viz. (1) for righteousness' sake; (2) those who are reproached for Christ's sake, enduring the Cross and despising the shame: these will enter into their Master's joy (Heb. xii.). Those persecuted falsely belong to the class of the great prophets, and this means that they will receive the reward of the class to which they belong.

OUR DAILY HOMILY

SUNDAY, January 16.

"The Lord thy God is in the midst of thee, a mighty one who will save, etc."—Zeph. iii. 17, R.V.

IF this announcement is compared with the foregoing verse, it becomes apparent that only those may take its blessed comfort who have made the Lord their King. It is when the Lord, the King of Israel, is in the midst that we cease to fear the incursion of evil. Entire surrender and consecration must precede that deliverance from the power of evil which we all desire in our holiest hours. When we yield ourselves entirely to God, He who is in the midst of us asserts Himself as a mighty one, who both can and will save.

O tempted one, who fearest every hour because of the fury of thy foe, who seems only waiting to destroy, look no longer upon him, but behold thy glorious Lord. "He will save." Dare to repeat those words again and again, as a sweet refrain. Dare to believe that the battle is not yours, but his. Fear not, nor let thine hands be slack.

But God will do more than save the yielded trusting soul. He will rejoice over the soul that finds its all in Himself. It is much to hear a nightingale sing; more to hear an angel; more to hear some child of Adam redeemed from sin, sing the new song; but most to hear the great God break out into song. So a mother sings over her babe. O my God, may my life give Thee joy not grief, not tears but a song.

But He does not always express Himself thus. He is sometimes "silent in his love." He does not speak or sing, but broods over the soul that has dared to trust Him. "He will rest in his love." In the times when the heart is too full of blessedness to speak, it is permitted to enter into this deep, deep silence of God. An ocean too full to permit of waves!

MONDAY, January 17.

"He that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes."—Hag. i. 6.

How true a description of many in the present day! They work hard, but derive little comfort from their toils. Their homes are bare, their children unkempt, their circumstances meagre. They are always in anxiety. Gambling, drinking, loose and evil company are indeed bags with holes. But there are other analogies. We sometimes find our days slipping away without accomplishing anything worth mentioning. We have nothing to show for them — nothing accomplished, nothing done. Or we expend time and thought on plans that are apparently well and carefully devised, but they prove abortive and disappointing. All this is like a labourer putting his wages into a bag with holes, and when he reaches home he has nothing to show for his labour.

There is a reason for this loss and failure. What applied to the Jews on their return from captivity, applies still. Have we been working from the wrong base of operations? Have we failed to make first things first? If so, we need not be surprised when He calls for a drought upon the land. Let us consider our ways, and amend them. The time spent before God in searching out his will is never wasted or lost. Though we build his house at much cost to ourselves, our own circumstances will begin to prosper as never before. "All these things shall be added." Compare Luke xii. 33.

TUESDAY, January 18.

"The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts. The latter glory of this house shall be greater than the former."—Hag. ii. 8, 9.

The new temple was deficient in the splendid adornment which Solomon had lavished on the first. Neither gold, nor silver, nor precious stones garnished its bare walls. But Haggai says that this lack was not due to any failure in the resources of Israel's God. The silver and the gold were his, and if He had chosen He could have poured them without stint into the lap of his people. But He purposely withheld them, that their attention might not be distracted from the spiritual glory which was to make the second temple more famous than the lavished gold of Parvaim. The latter glory of this house, or the glory of this latter house, shall be greater, saith the Lord of Hosts; and then, as though to indicate that the glory was to be moral and spiritual, the Divine voice adds, "And in this place will I give peace."

Dear child of God, it has pleased thy Heavenly Father to withhold from thee both gold and silver. Thou hast just enough to live on, but that is all. With the Apostle thou sayest, "Silver and gold have I none." God could have done otherwise for thee, for the silver and gold are his. But He purposely abstained lest thy head should be lifted up, lest thy attention should be so absorbed by these things as to neglect the sure riches; lest the radiance of thy faith, which is more precious than gold tried in the fire, or the beauty of thy meek and quiet spirit, should be obscured by the tawdry sheen of earth's metals.

But peace, and righteousness, and meek humility are of everlasting worth. Cultivate these; let thy life be a temple whose glory is the indwelling of God; expect that the Desire of all nations should make thee his home, and shine through thee in the world.

WEDNESDAY, January 19.

"Behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom."—Zech. i. 8.

The myrtle in a lowland vale is a beautiful emblem of the people of God. They do not aspire to be forest trees, but are content to fill a little space, if He be glorified. As the myrtle seeks its home in shady and moist lands, so the believer needs shadow and moisture. The myrtle is a lowly plant, fragrant in scent, and graceful in its appearance. Herein is God's ideal for his children.

But, however lowly and humble the myrtle might be, the Angel of Jehovah, who could have been none other but the Lord Jesus Himself, was there. At dead of night, the prophet beheld him sitting on a red horse, and attended by a retinue of horsemen, who had come back to him after walking to and fro in all the earth. The Lord has his throne in the midst of his people, and his servants post over sea and land to do his bidding on their behalf.

And thus the prophet overheard the colloquy. The Lord's inquiry and the Angel's answer were clearly distinguished. He also heard the appeal made by the Redeemer of Israel to the Eternal, as He pleaded that God would avenge his people's cause, and was answered with good and comforting words.

So are we the objects of divine solicitude. Jesus with his bright angels is on our side. Not more really was He with the disciples of old, who were but as myrtles, than He is with us. He is still displeased with those who invade our lives with their cruelties. He is jealous for his people with a great jealousy. He will yet comfort Zion, and choose Jerusalem. However dark your night, dare to believe that the Lord of the Angels has stooped to your myrtle-tree life to help and bless.

THURSDAY, January 20.

"I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and I will be the glory in the midst of her."—Zech. ii. 5.

Jerusalem was to be rebuilt, but it would soon outgrow the narrow boundaries of the walls which Nehemiah and Ezra had reared with so much care. The multitude of men and cattle would pour over the ramparts as villages spread themselves out over the open country. What then, would there be no wall to arrest the foe and preserve the inhabitants from attack? Yes; there would be one, because the presence of God would be as a wall of fire round about. Nor would this be all, because He would be the glory in the midst. The glory and defence of Isaiah iv. 5 would be literally enjoyed.

How busy some of us are in building walls to our lives—the walls of property, of family alliances, of preparation against all kinds of ill. But the utmost we can do is not enough to defend us against the inevitable perils and dangers of our mortal life. Better far is it to hide within the enfolding, encouraging presence of the Eternal God, which is as a rampart of fire. Can plague or pestilence pass through fire? Certainly not. And if a soul abide in Christ, it will find immunity from the temptation of the evil one. Travellers light a cordon of fires to surround them with their protection from tigers and wolves; so the soul hides in God.

But we need not defence only, but illumination; not the fire around alone, but within; not deliverance, but salvation. Where can this be obtained, save in the indwelling of the Son of God, making our hearts so full of his burning purity that sin might be abashed and no sacrilegious foot intrude?

FRIDAY, January 21.

"A brand plucked out of the fire." — Zech. iii. 2.

Such is the divine economy that God makes much of brands, fragments, castaways. What others regard as unworthy of their heed is dear and priceless to the great Lover of souls. The smoking flax, the bruised reed, the woman that was a sinner, the dying thief, the brand plucked from the fire, charred and blackened and almost useless—those whom man despises as worthless—the base things of the world, and the things that are despised; these are chosen to bring to nought the things that are, so that no flesh should glory in his presence.

Hear the enemy and the Son of Man speaking concerning that smoking brand. The enemy says: It is so worthless and useless, so nearly eaten through with fire, so black and charred—cast it back again into the flame, and take some other. But Jesus says: Because it is so nearly worthless, because no one else would find any use for it, because all others would fling it back to be consumed—there is the more reason why I should take it in hand: nothing less than Divine skill or patience will avail. I will yet make it a pillar in my temple, to go no more out. I who made order from chaos will yet transform waste into use.

And see what He will do for that charred ember. He will take away the filthy garments, clothe with change of raiment, and set the fair mitre of priesthood on his head. From the verge of the pit to the margin of the throne. O my soul, there is hope for thee!

SATURDAY, January 22.

"Two golden spouts."—Zech. iv. 12.

On either side of the lampstand stood an olive tree, "a son of oil." Perhaps these represent the royal and priestly characters of our Lord. But between each olive tree and the bowl or cistern of the lamp there was a golden spout, through which the oil poured to nourish the wicks of the seven lamps.

What a sermon there is in a wick. Sit beside it, and ask how it dares hope being able to supply light for hours and hours to come. "Will you not soon burn to an end, you wick of lamp?" "No, I do not fear it, because the light does not burn me, but it burns on me. I only bear to it the oil which saturates my substance. I am but the ladder up which it climbs. It is not I, but the oil that is in me, that causes light."

Yes, that is it, and when we anticipate the future, our hearts might well misgive us if we were counting on meeting its demands from our only slender resources. But this is not necessary; we do not give light to the world; we only receive the oil from the Holy Spirit and the spark of his fire; and so burn steadily through the long, dark hours, translating into living beauty those supplies of grace which we receive in fellowship with Jesus.

But how necessary it is that nothing interrupt the flow of oil; that there be no uncleanliness permitted to clog and obstruct the narrow bore of the golden spout of faith. Let us daily see to this; let us watch and pray that there may be no hindrance or impediment; let us draw from our King-Priest more and more of his grace, to enable us to persevere.

God's Methods with Man:
Past, Present, and Future.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

I.—FROM CREATION TO CHRIST.

MAN lives, mentally and spiritually, too much in the present; hence there has long prevailed a misleading idea that in the history of the race, God has been making experiments with men, and that when one plan has failed, He has adopted another. The corrective is found in studying human history from the Divine standpoint. Nothing yields a more chaotic, uncertain and unsatisfactory result than a view merely from the human side; while, on the contrary, order, beauty, and progress are seen in earthly history only as we take the divine outlook.

[A chart* of the stream of time from its commencement to its close, shows time taking its rise in the eternal past of which we know very little. Then follows the state of earthly perfection in Eden, the period of human history to the Flood, the calling of Abraham, the sending of Moses, and the reign of law unto the coming of Christ. From the point where human sin begins, the line of blood is above the world—the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. At the end of the period of law the Cross is uplifted; while a line ascending from the stream of time marks the return of Jesus to the heavens. So far as humanity is concerned, a black line announces the very culmination of sin; and, in contrast, we have the gold which tells of heavenly glory accomplished by that Cross of Jesus Christ. A circle coloured red indicates the sphere of the Holy Spirit's dispensation, because the whole earth to-day, as viewed from the Divine standpoint, is under the blood of Christ's Cross. God is dealing with man, entirely and everywhere, under the shelter and shadow of the Cross and the blood. A thin green line marks the fact that throughout all human history God has never left the earth without witnesses who have been loyal to Him; and that distinct line becomes, in the period of the Spirit's work, a golden one.

The operations of the Spirit in this dispensation are not confined to the calling out of the Church, but the whole earth is under his impressive influence. A line, half golden, half purple, indicates the priestly work of Jesus Christ in the heavens, during the whole period of the Spirit's dispensation. The device of a tongue of fire represents the Spirit as a connection between the exalted Christ and the earth on which we live. This dispensation ends with the coming of Christ and the ascent of the Church to meet Him. Then sets in a period of tribulation which increases upon the earth for a short time; at the end of which, Christ and his Church come to the mid-heavens, He Himself descends to the earth, and we have the Millennium, with the star of gold showing that, while an earthly glory is set up, the Kingdom of Heaven will be realized under the direct rule of Christ and his people. The red line of blood is taken up and continued on our chart immediately upon the end of this dispensation. At the end of the Millennium there will be a short period of further trouble upon the earth; and then will the great eternities set in.]

It is well to approach the subject reverently, humbly, and apart from controversy. We must neither fix dates nor attempt to read a great story into narrow formulæ; and on the other hand, the spirit of patient love may lead to the discovery of some measure of truth among those who seem to differ from us. The Bible we shall treat throughout these addresses as the authoritative revelation of God concerning his dealings with men; and, for the time being, we are not dealing with apologetics. We must, however, recognise

CERTAIN GREAT FACTS.

First, the one abiding, eternal, unchanging fact—GOD IS. For our structure, we begin on the bedrock. Then, as another great principle of interpretation and instruction, we recognise the Divine sovereignty—that God has never really relinquished the reins of universal government. Our third point is, that God's rule must continue unto the end; and, lastly, his will must finally prevail in the stream of time. In the light of these preliminary words, it is our purpose to discover our present place and responsibility.

Leaving, for a time, the shifting scenes around us, we enter in thought the dread silence of eternity past; and when the voices of earth perpetually ringing in our ears are hushed, we can but say that here God is love. Every movement of creation began in his love. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." "The beginning" bears us behind all dates. As far as man and time are concerned, the first thing is that God created—when no man can tell; how far back is beyond all computation. Behind the beginning of material things—God. We care not how far science goes back, so long as we remember that "in the beginning God created." Amid an earth waste and void the Spirit of God moved upon the face of waters shrouded in darkness. The

CHAOTIC EARTH WAS NOT GOD-FORSAKEN.

"And God said"—what is that? The Word of God, the Logos. Come to John's Gospel, for a single moment, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." "And God said"—the Logos comes to the earth, to bring order out of disorder, to bring forth beauty out of the darkness. We have, then, the creation of the earth, as we know it, but in perfect beauty, order, and delight. By whom? By Jesus Christ. Read, in this connection, Prov. viii., where the Word of God is spoken of as Wisdom, and is declared to be with God in all his creative acts. Man is placed upon the earth, and time begins.

Accepting absolutely the Bible story, which fits in with reason, experience, and hope, we find men created in the image of God and placed amid perfect environment. Man here lives in the Divine favour, holding unbroken communion with God, and dwelling in the realm of loyalty to Him. Some say man was a non-moral being until he fell; but we contend that the moment he stood in the Garden of Eden, with its testing-point in that tree and the Divine denial of its fruit upon his soul, he knew that the realms of right and of wrong were bounded by obedience or disobedience. God did not tempt, but tested man—an absolute necessity in the nature of the case, for man is a being with a will. Tennyson says:—

> Our wills are ours, we know not how;
> Our wills are ours to make them thine.

But man chose to make his will his own, in contradiction to the Divine will. He is, therefore, driven outside the garden, as a sinner, the reign of conscience sets in, and straightway the blood line is over the earth, pointing to the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. There could be no coats of skin to clothe naked sinners but for the shedding of blood; and so the sacrifices of old, beginning here, ever point to Christ's Cross. As man leaves the garden, he sees the evidence of sacrifice, and has his eye directed to the time when the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. God sends new ministries of sorrow and toil, that man may, by the consciousness of loss, be drawn back to the Divine heart.

From Eden, the descent through Cain tends to corruption and degradation; but the line from Adam through Seth culminates, at the seventh generation, in Enoch, who walked with God, and was not, for God took him. Eventually, even the latter strain became corrupt until, with the exception of an elect company, God ends the whole race by the flood, bridging the stream of time with these few souls for a new era.

Beyond the flood, God deals with man in a new way. Sacrifice is still needed, but mutual self-government is imposed—see Gen. ix. 5, 6. Every man is to exercise care for his brother; and under this arrangement God safeguards the life of each and every man. It is a new start, with all corruption and evil put away by the flood. But very soon after the deluge the tower of Babel arises. To-day, we hear some assert that its object was security against the effects of any future flood. Gen. xi. 4 shows, however, that the builders sought to make themselves a name, lest they should be scattered. We hear a great deal about the "solidarity of humanity"; and the endeavour to secure it by is a very old piece of history. Apart from Him, the only really cohesive force for humanity is absent, and confusion must be the result.

Here there comes into human history, for the first time, the element of nationality. Though I may startle you, I venture to say that "patriotism" is but another name for selfishness. The Divine ideal is, "He hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth"; and until that is realised, "brotherhood" on the lips of men outside the Christian Church is an anomaly and foolishness.

The call of Abraham exemplifies faith as the principle of man's return in submission to God; and it shows that God will reach the nations which have forgotten Him by creating a nation that knows and obeys Him. In this we see that, as at the first God's Spirit brooded over chaos, so the unwearied love of God never ceases toward man. Israel was created to influence other nations for God, itself being within his kingdom; but through unbelief and sin, the nation falls into Egyptian slavery. This is no defeat of God, only a stage in his preparatory work.

With the deliverance from captivity, a period of law sets in, and there is instituted the world has ever seen. But there was too much of the heavens in that theocracy for it to last amid nations who denied God's rule. When the people came into the promised land, degeneracy set in, and they demanded a monarchy. Through earthly kingship they passed into corruption and renewed captivity, until God's kingly rule departed from them altogether, although there was ever among them some few souls true to Him.

Now comes the last message, that of John, followed by the appearing of the King Himself with the same message, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand," declaring its laws and giving evidences of its benefactions as He healed men, drove out devils, and applied heaven's solace to earth's sorrows. How did it end? "He came to his own and his own received Him not," but gave Him the death of the Cross.

The evident lessons of our study are two—first, Human Failure; second, Divine Progress. Look where you will in human history, you find failure—the fall and the flood, corruption and the Cross. Has God failed? Not once; everything has been preparatory and progressive. The Cross and all that it means was prepared for throughout Judaic history. This one nation of Israel learned through battle and smoke, murmuring and forgiveness, captivity and deliverance, the great truth that there is but one God. When that truth was enshrined for the world in the chosen nation, then the one God became flesh. Sin worked itself out to the utmost height of corruption far beyond what the world has ever seen, when the men of old held intercourse with evil and lost spirits; and God swept sin away by the flood, that men might have behind them that terrific history of what the evil thing really is. Thus, we have sin manifested and the one God seen; while the Incarnate Word takes that sin upon Himself, that the world may ever know, from that point onward, the meaning of sin as well as the meaning of God and his Divine government.

The Late Rev.

Robert Aitken, of Pendeen.

THIS much-esteemed clergyman, father of Rev. W. Hay Aitken, and worthy of being regarded as the father of parochial missions in the Church of England, was born at the little village of Crailing, near Jedburgh, and received his early education in the grand old abbey of that town, part of which was utilised in those days as a sort of "grammar school." He subsequently studied at Edinburgh University, but found himself repelled from entering the Presbyterian ministry by his dislike of the strongly Calvinistic preaching, which at that time was much more rigorously maintained throughout Scotland than it is to-day.

His elder brother, who had started a private school at the village of Whitburn, near Sunderland, invited Robert's assistance. Here Mr. Aitken married his first wife, Miss Eyres, daughter of Colonel Eyres, and was ordained to the curacy of the parish church. His brother had by this time retired from the school in his favour, and the institution was in a very flourishing condition when the ill-health of his wife caused him to give up everything and settle in the Isle of Man.

About this time a great spiritual change passed over Mr. Aitken, and he felt he could no longer content himself with the ordinary pursuits of a country gentleman. A necessity was indeed laid upon him, and a voice within seemed to cry, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the Gospel." As soon as he had tasted the joy of winning souls, he felt that this must become the work of his life. Unhappily at that time the Episcopal Communion was spiritually in a very different condition from that with which we are familiar in these more favoured days. In the Isle of Man there were only two churches in which his ministrations were welcomed, and even in these nothing could be tolerated that had the appearance of irregularity. A modern after-meeting would have been regarded as a monstrous and outrageous innovation, and anything in the nature of a mission would have been denounced as the wildest extravagance. He lived to see all that changed, and took a leading part in bringing the change about, but slow years were needed to induce so considerable a revolution.

Meanwhile there was one body that welcomed his efforts with open arms. The Wesleyans were not slow to detect and appreciate the revivalistic gifts of the church parson, and soon a most remarkable work of God's grace broke out in the little island. From one end of it to the other the preaching of "the passon" produced the most profound impression; and hundreds, perhaps thousands, of sinners were won for Christ. The fame of the great spiritual movement spread to the "adjacent island of Great Britain." When Mr. Aitken began to preach at Liverpool the people were already eager to hear him, and crowds flocked to attend the services. Starting here, he preached all over England, at first almost entirely in Methodist chapels, but subsequently in buildings that he had himself erected in several of the large towns as centres for evangelising work.

This was his work during the earlier "thirties," but about the year 1836 he settled down in London, where he had two chapels under his charge—one in White's Row, Spitalfields, and the other in Waterloo-road. Here he laboured with extraordinary success for some three or four years. They were, perhaps, the greatest harvest years of his life. It was one continual mission; night by night the anxious might be numbered by scores, and on Sundays by hundreds. They came from all parts of London, and belonged to all classes of society and to every ecclesiastical name. Towards the end of this period Mr. Aitken's first wife died, and in the year 1839 he was married to Miss W. D. Macdowall-Grant, of Arndilly, sister of the well-known lay preacher of that name, who became so prominent a figure in the religious world a quarter of a century later.

It was about this time that Mr. Aitken began to feel dissatisfied with his ecclesiastical position, which was one of peculiar and painful isolation. This is not the place to discuss the modifications of view which affected him, nor the circumstances to which these were, at any rate, in part attributable. Suffice it to say that he offered to return to the full communion of the Church of England and to bring his two chapels and their congregations with him. It must be admitted that the Bishops of the period blundered sadly over the matter, with the result that these grand congregations in London were practically disbanded, and Mr. Aitken recommenced his ministry in Hope Hall, Liverpool, which was at that time his property, and was licensed as St. John's Church. The arrangement was not an altogether happy one. After passing through some very broken waters, he felt that a little quiet and retirement had become a necessity. Accordingly he gave up his charge, sold his church, and disappeared for a season in the seclusion of a Cornish village not far from Penzance (Perran Uthnoe), where, however, his acceptance of the sole charge of the parish was followed by the occurrence of a remarkable revival of religion that created a great sensation in those parts, and was one link in the chain of circumstances that led to his spending the last years of his eventful life in that county.

After a brief sojourn there he was offered and accepted the incumbency of St. James's, Leeds, where he laboured with much success during the next four years, when sickness in his family and the precarious health of a dearly loved child led him to resign his charge, and to return for a short season to the Isle of Man. While resting here under the shadow of a great sorrow (for his loved daughter had faded like a leaf and passed away), he was offered the incumbency of a church in Coatbridge, Scotland, whither he proceeded, and soon was doing a very remarkable work there. On the first Sunday of his incumbency he gave the choir that mustered in force to greet their new minister to understand plainly that he did not believe in having God's praises led by those who had never yielded their own hearts to Him. This gave great umbrage, and the next Sunday the organist and choir were on full strike. Nothing daunted, Mr. Aitken installed his second son, a boy of twelve years old, as organist, and his eldest daughter as principal singer, and the service went on as usual. The third Sunday, so it is said, the choir were all back in their places again, but all "converted."

Once again the ill-health of his children, one of whom died of consumption at Coatbridge, was the immediate occasion of another change. Mrs. Aitken's daughter seemed threatened with lung trouble, and she and her two children and a friend were despatched to Cornwall in the hope that the little girl's native air might set her up. This it certainly did, but the anxious mother, dreading a return to the very severe and insalubrious climate of Coatbridge, ventured on a bold step. On her own responsibility she wrote to ask the Bishop of Exeter whether he had any post in his gift that he could offer to her husband, of whose remarkable career he knew something. The answer was that he had nothing but the Peel district of Pendeen, a wild out-of-the-way district, where there was neither church, house, nor school, and where the miners were supposed to be particularly rude and uncivilised. Mr. Aitken visited the desolate moor on which a site had been reserved for the future church, but not even his strong courage was equal to facing such a task, and he felt that it was not a position that he could accept. However, the parishioners got wind of the matter. They had heard of what he had done at Perran Uthnoe, and they presented a memorial signed by nearly all the adult males in the parish, imploring the Bishop to lay his pastoral commands on Mr. Aitken, and to insist on his undertaking the work. The Bishop forwarded the document to Mr. Aitken, with the remark that he would surely come under a grave responsibility in declining such a call. This led to a reconsideration of the matter, and at length Mr. Aitken became the incumbent, and subsequently the first vicar of Pendeen.

Here he spent the last twenty-four years of his life, and from this ultima thule he sallied forth from time to time to conduct what were practically "missions," although they were not called so, long years before the first great London Mission was ever thought of. He seemed to gather strength in the seclusion of his remote parish for these special efforts, and used to prepare himself for them by day after day of wrestling prayer. The beautiful little church at Pendeen which he had erected, himself alike architect and builder, was his oratory where he would lie before God by the hour together pleading for the souls of men.

In his home in the far west, wave lift

wave of revival swept over the parish and neighbourhood, and his church was soon the home of a grand army of living aggressive Christian men, whose life and influence told on all the neighbourhood. Here for nearly a quarter of a century this remarkable man lived and preached, and worked and wrote, and, above everything else, prayed. He often deplored his seclusion from the busy centres of theological thought and work, yet perhaps it may be questioned whether that very seclusion did not to some extent enhance his influence. At any rate there are probably few men of our time who have left a more distinct mark on the religious development of their day. It was something never to be forgotten when, at the close of the great St. Pancras Mission of 1872, in the final meeting of clergy, the veteran evangelist rose, and, as it were, pronounced his Nunc Dimittis!

I have been fighting for this very thing for forty years, and insisting on its necessity, and now when I see it being taken up by those that represent authority in the Church of England and by the Church of Christ at large, I assure you that it is almost more than I can bear. I feel to-day that my life's work has not been thrown away.

And it was his "Nunc Dimittis." Less than a year was left to him for service. He was persuaded to accompany his daughter and her husband on a tour to the Continent. He preached his last sermon at Pendeen on the words, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with your spirits." So he finished his life's service and said his "Grace." Only once more did he open his mouth in public for his Master, and that was at Ems. It is worthy of notice that his very last sermon was on the words, "And they crucified Him." He ended his ministry at the Cross. On his return he dropped dead in Paddington station, just as he was about to step into the train for Penzance.

Of tall stature and commanding presence, with an eye that could flash fire, and perhaps the most marvellous voice that ever man had; possessed of a ready flow of forceful language, and above all a heart that vibrated with the tenderest sympathy, strong and fearless, yet tender as a woman, sanguine to a fault, and yet balanced by a melancholic tendency—a man of love and yet a fiery prophet, a man of tears and prayers, and yet a man of action; such was Robert Aitken. None that knew him well would hesitate to apply to him the words:

> He was a man, take him for all in all,
> We shall not see his like again!

Sailors' Welcome Home.—"In thy name shall they rejoice all the day" (Ps. lxxxix. 16). The chosen text for this month in connection with the Christian Lifeboat Crew, was a happy and blessed keynote at the New Year's Muster. The addresses by Miss Child, Colonel Macgregor, Count Bentinck, Mr. William Luff, and others, will not easily be forgotten by those present who crowded the room. Very cheering accounts were given of the work and its branches.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—The New Year's reception took place at this society's headquarters in St. George-street, London Docks, on Tuesday last week, and the place was crowded with seamen of many nationalities. After tea a temperance limelight story was given by Rev. G. J. Hill; this was followed by Gospel addresses from the chairman, Sir C. R. Lighton, Bart., and Messrs. H. W. Maynard and G. Lampard, whilst other friends spoke in German and Swedish for the benefit of the foreigners. Brief testimonies were given by nearly a dozen officers and seamen, who heartily commended to their brethren the acceptance of the Saviour and the rejection of intoxicating drinks. More than one hundred men remained to the inquiry meeting held by Mr. W. H. Seagram at the close of the general meeting, and with these the workers were engaged till a late hour. Before quitting the building they had the joy of knowing that very many had "passed from death unto life."

Salvation Army Social Work.

SOME very striking figures were given by General Booth, last week, in the Albert Hall, with regard to the operations of the Social Scheme.

"What," he exclaimed, "has come out of the Darkest England scheme? Not so much, perhaps, as could have been desired. Wait a bit; this is only the beginning, and any way we have got a great machinery created, with abundance of imitations. Here are figures to ponder. Ten thousand of the wretchedest men and women are sheltered every night, 11,000,000 from the beginning; 17,800 starving men and women and children are fed every day, 23,000,000 from the beginning; 2005 are employed in the factories and workshops and similar institutions; 400 criminals are always in our homes, and having another chance. Of these it is calculated 50 per cent. have been rescued. Three thousand and ninety forsaken women pass through our homes per annum, 26,000 from the beginning."

These figures are expounded in the latest Report of the S.A. social work, and illustrated by many strange stories, such as the following:—

THE OLD APPLE-WOMAN'S STORY.

She is nearing the eighties, if not already there. She gets her living by selling fruit: apples, oranges, nuts—whatever is in season. She hails from the slums.

"Yis," she said, laying down her basket of fruit, "I ran away from home when a young gal and tramped to London. Of course, I thought there were some mills there, like the country I'd left behind, but I foun' out my mistake very soon, and I had to make a living by selling Queen's caps; when this failed, matches. Then I took to the drink.

"I've bin to prison close on a hundred times. I remember the fust time I went I got seven days, and made up my mind I'd never go agin—in fact, I did that near every time, but I only came out ten times worse than I went. Many's the time 'ave I stood selling matches in front of a public-'ouse, and as fast as I took the money, so fast I'd drop in and 'ave a drink. Fight! I would fight man or woman—I didn't care. I could get no lower. I was one of the worst characters in Whitechapel; the police knew me well.

"At the time o' my conversion I wuz as bad as could be—drunk every time I got a chance, I 'ardly knew what I was doin' of that day, and, passin' down Hangel Alley, I 'eard some singin'. It was the Army's mothers' meetin'. I went in, but as soon as I got inside the door, some of the women called out: 'Oh, Capten, don't you let 'er in; she'll like's not bit you afore she goes out.'

"'Ah, but,' sez the Capten, 'she 'ave got a soul to save as well as we.'

"That day the cravin' for drink went out o' my soul, and salvation come in. It wor all over Whitechapel the same day. At fust they laughed and said, 'Wait till she passed the "Frying Pan" agin, she won't keep it 'arf an 'our'. When they saw as 'ow I meant it, they tried a jeerin', but 'twere no use; for eight years now I've kep' it. The police they sez:

"'Hullo, we 'aint a seen you lately.'

"'No,' sez I, 'and ye won't neither.'"

The work which can show such genuine results—and many of the kind are given in the Salvation Army Social Report—cannot but commend itself to the sympathies of those who have it in their power to give. The need for help is at the present time very urgent.

In connection with the departure of General Booth for Canada and the United States, a farewell demonstration was held on Wednesday week in the Royal Albert Hall. Vast as the building is it was crowded. The scene was remarkable in many respects; but a mere description of the spectacle would serve little purpose. Suffice it that after much hearty singing and many earnest prayers, a loyal address was presented to the General, who, in his reply, said that he was going across the Atlantic to assist in the formation of new plans and the furtherance of the work for the helping of the suffering poor and outcast classes. "There are people there, alas, bound in fetters of vice, who we believe it is possible to relieve and rescue. Both countries have people in them crying for work, and both countries have millions of acres of land crying out for workers. It may be that I can do something further to bring the work and the workers together.

"The Salvation Army on both sides of the water are one in mutual confidence and affection, and in the desire for the prosperity and happiness of these great peoples, nay, all peoples, and in the willingness to work and sacrifice for the realisation of that desire to increase this spirit of affection and unity, and turn it to more practical account, is one of the purposes of my visit. It is that for which I live. The Salvation Army is built up on the foundation of love. Comrades, pray for my success. I am going to preach the salvation of Jesus as far as I have the opportunity to whoever will listen to me."

At the close of the General's address the arena was cleared, and a holiness meeting was held, and at its conclusion the junior soldiers sang a special song of God-speed to the General.

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

THE annual praise and prayer meetings in connection with this mission were held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, on Monday, January 3. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided in the morning, when Rev. John Wilkinson gave a striking interpretation of the Second Psalm, and Rev. D. B. Hankin delivered an interesting address. Mr. Wilkinson gave also a summary of the work done amongst the Jews at home and abroad during the past year.

Colonel Morton presided at the evening meeting, when, after several friends had engaged in thanksgiving and prayer, Dr. John Dixon delivered a short address. In the course of his remarks he gave the following statistics of the past year's medical mission work amongst the Jews of Whitechapel:—Visits of new patients to dispensary, 5840; visits of old and new, 17,324; surgical dressings by nurses, 5772; doctors' visits to patients at their own homes, 2299. Mr. Samuel Wilkinson followed with an account of his recent visit to Russia, and of the work in that country amongst the Jews. He showed how doors were widely opening for the entrance of the Gospel.

The annual teas for Jewish children and adults, at the Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., were attended this year by about 300 adults and 320 children. The grown-ups gathered on Tuesday, January 4, when, after tea and singing, earnest Gospel addresses were given in English and German by Mr. Wilkinson and Mr. Simpson respectively.

The children's meeting on the following day was regarded as still more interesting and encouraging. About half the number present belong to the night school of the Mission. What remarkable memories these Jewish children possess; and it is delightful to listen while they repeat whole chapters from the Word of God. Miss Maddicks, Miss Cornwall, and the other teachers have much reason to go forward into the New Year with the assurance that their diligent sowing of the precious seed in "the honest and good ground" of these dear young hearts will bear, in the near future, a blessed and abundant harvest to the glory of God.

Consider One Another.

Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works.—Heb. x. 24.

HOW often does the *in*consideration of one provoke the unloving spirit that brings forth bad works. Some people, both old and young, are very easily provoked to wrath. Mary is asked to do a little service, and she says, "No, I shan't." Then one of her brothers or sisters says, "Next time Mary wants us to play shops we won't."

Once a little girl had some friends and visitors to come and spend the afternoon with her and play. Presently Nellie came to her mother with a very cross voice and said, "They are all so selfish; they won't play croquet with me." Her mother, on inquiry, found that Nellie had made herself so disagreeable over one game, that the others thought it best to change the game and play at something fresh.

Fred begins to tease or aggravate his little sister and calls her "a kid"; his little sister says with indignation, "Then kids don't play trains with rude boys any more." All the joy is over, and tears of sorrow soon flow.

It is not fair for the girls to expect the boys, though they are small, always to play at school and dolls, nor should the boys always drive when they play horses with the girls.

This inconsiderateness is like rust in a lock or bolt, it can't work easily. Considering another is like a drop of oil; the key, once so stiff and hard, begins at last to move smoothly. Instead of provoking one another to anger and selfishness, by being considerate to each other we should provoke unto love and good works. If evil examples are infectious good conduct is contagious, and always exercises an influence for usefulness, and cannot be in vain.

Once upon a time three boys set out on a walking tour; each one had a knapsack that he carried on his back, but beside this there was a handbag that often held provisions, the maps and guide book, a drinking horn, and other things of common property to the tourists. The bag was first a joke with the party, for each one was to take their turn to carry it. By-and-by this bag became a nuisance, no one liked to have it; each one who took it did his best to put it on the other two, until it became a subject of constant dispute, and once or twice it seemed almost likely to be left behind; at last it got to such a pass that it never appeared anyone's proper turn to take it, and the black bag threatened to kill all the travellers' joy, that had it not been for the consideration of one, the little party might have been broken up by the black bag. One of the three said, "Here, you two, shut up about the bag—give it me"; and he took it, and carried it mile after mile and hour after hour. When they had stopped to rest, he resumed the burden without a word, until at last one said, "Now, old man, you have taken that bag long enough; I'm sure it's Tom's turn now."

"Yes," said Tom, "you have had more than your share; I wonder Harry is not ashamed of himself. If he doesn't volunteer to take it from you, I'll take it all day to-morrow; you really shall not have it at all." And before the journey was done the black bag became a blessing, and the lesson it taught was remembered by all three. A FRIEND.

What the Grate Said.

TOUCH me! I am cold, very cold, and I cannot warm myself. In this I am just like girls and boys in the house whose hearts are cold in sin. Sin makes cold by keeping you from God, who makes hearts warm with love to Jesus and love to others. You all like people who are kind and affectionate. You call them "warm-hearted." God is warm-hearted, and his love sends you every good thing you enjoy. And He is very happy, and wishes to make you all happy. He wants you to be warm-hearted like Himself, and to be lovers of all that is good and pure.

When people call at our house they speak of many pretty things they see, but never give one word of praise to me. And yet there are times when they would not care to enter the room but for me. When my heart has been warmed, and glows with a bright fire, everybody seems to love to sit and look at me. When Jesus was on earth He looked just like other men, but his warm and loving heart drew men and women, boys and girls after Him. They were so glad to get a smile and a blessing from Him. When you have the fire of God's love and Holy Spirit lighted within you, you will be like Jesus, and may do much good in the world, and you will have a joy you never knew before.

I make the room cheerful as the fire burns in me; and you, my young friends, may help to make the world cheerful by shining for Jesus.

Shining! shining! shining in the darkness;
You in your small corner and I in mine.

When Jesus shines into the dark world of your heart, He will make you shine by a life of good deeds and kind words. What happiness you may bring to men by shining for Him!

The fire in me does not shine with yesterday's coal; I need to be fed daily. And so do you. Your bodies must be fed to-day as well as yesterday. So must your souls with heavenly food. You can only keep on shining as you speak to Jesus and get his brightness in your hearts. God will supply every need of those who belong to his dear Son.

The fire within makes me hot all over. Touch any part of me and you will feel my heat. When people are true Christians, not only their hearts but their bodies are made warm with the love of Christ. The body is his as well as the soul. As Miss Havergal's hymn has it:—

Take my hands, and let them move
At the impulse of thy love;
Take my feet, and let them be Swift and beautiful from Thee.

Take my voice, and let me sing
Always, only, for my King;
Take my lips, and let them be Filled with messages from Thee.

People cannot see your souls, and, therefore, cannot tell what you are. But they can see your bodies, and can tell whether you are doing what is good or what is evil.

I am not there for my own sake, but for the sake of men. Those people who live for God and for others live a noble life; and a noble life must be a happy one, and will, by the grace of God, end in eternal happiness. Those who only live for themselves can never know real happiness, and need never expect to enter the land of eternal light and love. JOHN MITCHELL.

A Parable.

A CERTAIN prince went out into his vineyard to examine it. He came to the peach tree, and he said, "What are you doing for me?"

The tree said, "In the spring I give my blossoms and fill the air with fragrance, and on my boughs hang the fruit which presently men will gather and carry into the palace for you."

And the prince said, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

And he came to the maple, and said, "What are you doing?"

The maple said, "I am making nests for the birds and shelter for the cattle with my leaves and spreading branches."

And the prince said, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

He went down into the meadows and said to the waving grass, "What are you doing?"

And the grass said, "We are giving up our lives for lives of others—for sheep and cattle, that they may be nourished."

And the prince said, "Well done, good and faithful servants, that give up your lives for others."

Then he came to a little daisy that was growing in the hedge-row, and he said, "What are you doing?"

And the daisy said, "Nothing! nothing! I cannot make nesting places for the birds, and I cannot give shelter to the cattle, and I cannot send fruit into the palace. I cannot even furnish food for the sheep and cows; they do not want me in the meadow. All I can do is to be the best little daisy I can be."

And the prince bent down, kissed the daisy, and said, "There is none better than you."

Personal.

Many thanks to a little niece for a box of pin-cushions for the soldiers. I am sure they will appreciate them very much. JESSIE ALEN.—I could not give your name in the list of those eligible for the Competition as your paper did not reach me in time. To some I sent postcards, but you gave no address. KENNETH VINING.—Very glad you are joining. You misunderstood Question 1. I only wanted the chapter and verse of the texts given. WALTER PERRYMAN.—Your friend's paper came, and his name is in the correct list. OWEN MORICE.—Will you kindly write your answers in ink and on a larger sheet of paper, as there is a difficulty in reading your paper. HERBERT HARRISON.—You did not do the answers for Question 2. Be very careful to understand what is asked.—EVA FIELDER.—Do not write the questions; and when I spoke of "references" in Question 1 I wanted you to find just the chapter and verses of the texts given. EDITH BENSTED.—All over 13 years do all the questions given. RUTH DAWSON.—The next Competition will be in 11 weeks' time, and to be eligible you must get nine papers correct out of the 12 Searchers. This week you did not answer No. 2 fully.

A Call to the Children.

DEAR children, come to Jesus—
To his own blessed home.
He welcomes all the little ones,
Sweetly He bids them come.
Oh! could you see Him waiting,
With longing, outstretched arms,
To fold you round and shield you
From life's and death's alarms.

Dear children, come to Jesus;
You sometimes hear it told,
How many lambs are gathered now
Within his sacred fold:
They love their gentle Shepherd,
They hear and know his voice—
Come with them, flock around Him;
Come, and with them rejoice.

Come, tell Him He has promised—
He who can never lie—
That those who early seek Him
Shall surely find Him nigh.
Come, tell Him, when He was on earth,
How loving and how mild
He was to all the children—
And you, too, are a child.

Dear children, come to Jesus,
A year has passed away;
You know not what may be before Another New Year's Day.
But if you trust in Jesus,
And have Him for your friend,
He'll guide and keep you all the days,
Safe to your journey's end.

UNCLE TOM.

The Week of Prayer.

FOLLOWING up the notes given in our last issue we append brief reports of some of the later meetings of the Week of Universal and United Prayer, as observed in London. We have chosen those held at Exeter Hall and St. Martin's Town Hall as illustrative of many others.

At Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, the address was given by Prof. Radford Thomson, who at short notice took the place of Rev. B. J. Gibbon, whom illness prevented from fulfilling his engagement. The special subject for the day was The Church: its nature, its claims, and the promotion of its essential unity. The Professor said:—

"From the beginning Christianity has been a social religion; a power binding men not only to God but to one another; a spiritual power passing from heart to heart, from society to society, and leavening the whole lump. What is the Church? I need not warn you against the confusion, which, however, is not uncommon, between certain organised brotherhoods of Christians on the one hand, and the spiritual universal Church on the other. There are a great many people included in what we call the Church who, there is great reason to fear, are not members of the spiritual Church, the mystical Body of the Lord Jesus Christ. And there are those who are members of the spiritual Church who are not found associated at present, it may be, with any organised community of professing Christians. We lay aside for the moment these several systems and forms of church government, which to some people are very precious, and to others are of comparative indifference, and rise into the ATMOSPHERE OF SPIRITUAL COMMUNION.

"It is a good thing, no doubt, that there should be organised brotherhoods of Christians stationed here and there throughout the world, and doing work; some specially adapted, it may be, by their church government and forms of worship to one state of society; and others adapted to another state of society and conviction. But we think to-day rather of that great communion comprehending all Christ's people throughout the world. You cannot draw a line round it and say that those within the line are in the Church and those outside are not. But God can draw such a line, though we cannot; and He does. I take it that the Church is composed of those who, having faith in Christ, experience in their nature the quickening power of the Holy Spirit—that power which is able to grapple with the worst of errors and vilest of sins; that power which can make man a new creation in Christ Jesus. It is not ceremonial but spiritual. It goes to the roots of the man's nature. If we are joined to Christ as the body is to the head, we are justified in considering ourselves, by his infinite grace and through no merit of our own, members of the spiritual Body, moving in subjection to the Head, and co-operating one with another in seeking those ends which are dear to Him."

The speaker then referred specially to the need of prayer on behalf of those who are in a special sense ministers to the Church of Christ, among whom he included students at our colleges who have been consecrated to the work of the ministry. He also briefly expounded the great function of the Church as one of witness, of work, and of warfare.

WEDNESDAY.

The meetings in St. Martin's Town Hall continued during the week with small but steady audiences. On Wednesday the subject was—

Nations and their Rulers.—That all in authority may recognise their responsibility to God the King, and may do all as to the Lord, and not to men; that the Lord's Day may be reverenced; that injustice, intemperance, and oppression may cease; and that forbearance, peace, and brotherhood may be cultivated by all people.

Sir William Willis, who presided, read 1 Tim. ii. 1-6, and briefly glanced at the topics suggested, dwelling specially on the prevalent disregard of the Lord's Day, and the increasing tendency to look on it simply as a day of amusement.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, speaking in place of Rev. W. L. Watkinson, called unexpectedly to Wolverhampton, spoke on the theme of the day. The keynote of the passage just read he found in the words "that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty"—a charming ideal to which few seem to attain. A life of quietness, but not therefore of idleness. A life of wholesome activity and noble ambitions. A life of freedom from sin's unrest. What would multitudes give for such a life? Think of the lands desolated by war [illegible] out by anxiety and domestic broils. Think of the millions tossed and torn by the fever of passion, of greed, of jealousy, and of hot haste to be rich, and consider what to such "a quiet and peaceable life" would really mean.

From this opening the speaker went on to show that it is the sober, self-contained minority who sway the majority. The minority give the keynote and the majority fill in the chords. The quiet, sober, godly men influence the destinies of the nation to a much greater degree than usually supposed. If the people at large are to have peace, happiness, and prosperity it will be through the prayers and influence of those among them who know the true secret of all happiness and blessing. So in praying for those in authority we must remember that we are responsible to use aright our influence as Christian citizens. Our lives, as well as our petitions,

TELL FOR GOOD OR ILL.

Ungodly, irreligious leadership—which phrase includes authors, journalists, and such leaders of thought, as well as statesmen and rulers—is disastrous to the best interests of the nation, while, on the other hand, wise and God-fearing leadership tends to righteousness which exalteth a nation.

At Exeter Hall, Mr. H. Conder presided, and several friends engaged in prayer. The address was delivered by Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, who spoke of the relation of the Christian to rulers, in the light of Rom. xiii. 1-6. In view of the fact that "the powers that be are ordained of God," we obey those in authority, not only from a sense of fear, but also for conscience' sake. The ruler is "the minister of God for good"—whether an absolute or a limited monarchy, or whatever other form his authority may assume; he is responsible to God for the manner in which he exercises the power in his hands. As the spirit of Jesus Christ permeates a nation, despotism becomes impossible; and when praying for foreign rulers we should not overlook our own. If there is oppression abroad, there is destruction of the poor at home. We need to pray for a conviction that this distressful condition of want and helplessness is an evil for which a remedy should be sought. Mr. Wilson spoke of the part wrought by drink in the demoralisation of the people; and, referring to the great cleavage between the rich and the poor, said that selfishness on the part of the former drives many of the latter to anarchy and despair. In conclusion, he held that the nation whose ruler regards himself as "the minister of God for good" will assuredly reap prosperity.

THURSDAY.

The topic assigned for Thursday's consideration and prayer was:—

Families and Schools.—That in Christian households family prayer may be maintained and conversions sought; that home-life may be pure and loving; that the training in schools, colleges, and universities may be in the knowledge of Holy Scripture, and with a view to the consecrated life of unselfish benevolence and usefulness.

Prayer for children and schools was led by Dr. Gritton, Col. Douglas Jones, and Mr. James E. Mathieson, while the chairman, Mr. Donald Matheson, read a portion of Col. iii.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown said, in the course of his address:—We are asked to pray that in Christian households family prayer may be maintained and conversions sought. I do not know how it may strike others, but to me there is a strange and sad significance about the request. Surely it is one of the signs of the times, and a very solemn sign. Can we imagine anything more humiliating than that a number of God's children should actually be asked to pray God that family worship might not die out? Those who drew up that request know pretty well how things are going on. They know that family worship is not being maintained. Were it that "family worship might be maintained in all households" we could understand the need for such a request; but that "family worship might be maintained in Christian households" is sadly significant. How can it be a Christian household if family worship be not maintained? Yet, unhappily, we know perfectly well that there is need for such a prayer as this. The fact is, there are two things slowly passing away—the old Sabbath and the old home. There is a close link between the two. The English Sabbath, once the glory and strength of our land, is disappearing; side by side with this, a sad change is coming over the old home-life; and both of these departures may be traced in some measure to the forsaking of the family altar. Is there a sight more lovely than the gathering of a family for prayer? Do not memories of such scenes in bygone days linger with the most of us? I tell you we hear of altars in England with blazoned cross and blazing candles; but what are these to the family altar? It may be around the breakfast table with the plates pushed aside and the family Bible placed at the head—but for a few minutes father, mother, children, and servants forget the haste and hurry of life, forget rank and distinction. The master, as he kneels, is not master; the girl, as she kneels, is not servant—all are one in Christ. Therefore, I ask seriously, can it be regarded as a Christian household, where family prayers are not maintained? Christians there may certainly be in the family; but is the household itself worthy to be called Christian, where family prayer is neglected? When we pass Windsor Castle and see the royal ensign we know that her Majesty is at home, so family prayer seems to be the signal that the family is in truth a Christian household, and that God dwells in the home.

Consider, again, what a blessing comes from it. The old Londoners were wont to go out once a year on the first of May to wash their faces with the dew, and thus make them pretty the whole year round. That is a curious old notion, but I am sure that when a family wash their faces, so to speak, at the family altar it beautifies the home life. How family jars and bickerings are stilled by a few moments at the altar. The baptism of communion with God means the death of snapping and snarling in the dining-room, and of grumbling and backbiting in the kitchen. Remember, too, that your children will soon be grown up: is it likely they will erect a family altar if they have never known it in father's home? For the children's sake, and for the servants' sake, let family prayer be maintained. We have been reminded that infidelity, unbelief, and worldliness are advancing with rapid strides. One of the strongest defences against these enemies is family prayer. I implore you, for the sake of our boys and girls,

LET THE FAMILY ALTAR BE MAINTAINED.

At Exeter Hall the chair was occupied by Mr. F. A. Graham, and an address was given by Rev. E. W. Moore, not specifically on the subject of the day, but on an Apostolic injunction having relation to the entire Christian life and bearing. "Be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v. 18) was presented as an exhortation involving a duty, and as describing a condition, some marks of which were briefly indicated. The filling of the Spirit was spoken of as necessitating an emptying of sin and self; a man will more successfully avoid evil by being preoccupied with good than by merely regarding a prohibitory command. If we would not get on a downward path, we should take two steps upward. One mark of the fulness of the Spirit is gladness—"singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord"; and another is submission—"submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God" (Eph. v. 19, 21). On the former mark it was pointed out that God is the fountain of pleasure as well as of life; on the second, it was observed that there is perhaps no greater proof of grace than in patiently yielding to others. The Epistle to the Ephesians, it has been said, begins in the heavenlies and ends in the kitchen; it touches every stage and relation of life. Nothing so clearly shows the Spirit's fulness in possession as a humble, peaceful, prayerful, and consistent life in the family and the home.

FRIDAY.

Friday was devoted to the missionary cause, the subject being—

Foreign Missions.—Praise: For the growth and development of the missionary spirit during this century. Prayer: That consecrated and faithful missionaries may be raised up in all Christian Communities; that converts may be established in the faith; that the number of native agents may be multiplied, and their efficiency increased; that the obstacles in Roman Catholic, Heathen, and Mohammedan lands, arising from ignorance, prejudice, and error, may disappear before the Gospel.

Rev. Dr. W. H. Barlow read Eph. iii. 1-12 and said:—I ask you to trace the thought which runs through the whole section. It is this, that the Gentiles now—that is, since the day of Christ's ascension, since the giving of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost—are upon an equal footing with the Jews; that all God's promises of love and mercy are open to every member of the human family, without distinction of race, colour, nationality, or condition. Now the declaration of this fact is called here "the mystery." You are familiar with the meaning of the word in the New Testament—not something hidden or secret, but something man could never have discovered for himself, something which required Almighty wisdom to disclose, which, being disclosed, has become the inheritance of all who choose to accept it. It was a secret until God chose to make it plain; it is no longer a secret because God has made it plain. What is this mystery to which Paul refers? Simply a new development in God's plan of dealing with man. Up to the time of Abraham, there had been individual men of piety, but Abraham was specially chosen as the founder of a family in whom, in a peculiar sense, all blessings were to be centred. As we trace the history of that family through all the changes from Egyptian slavery to the glory of later times, we see in all the tabernacle and temple ceremonials and symbols a preparation and a prefigurement of Christ. But observe that all along the people who had these great privileges were apt to consider themselves as vastly better than others, and to regard these advantages as belonging to them and their descendants for all time. The idea that Divine favour was a prerogative of the Hebrew race became fixed in their mind.

But now a new epoch has begun, a new vista has opened out. No longer are these privileges and blessings for one family only—they are for the world. But the early Christians (converted Jews, chiefly) could not understand this. They had been accustomed to admit proselytes to the Jewish faith, and supposed those Gentiles who accepted Christ must come in in the same way. This notion was strenuously resisted by those who argued for Christian liberty, and the first Council of the Christian church (Acts xv.) was called to settle this question. The decision was emphatic, that the Gospel of Jesus Christ did not demand circumcision or any such rite—that in Christ Jew and Gentile were equal. So, again, the apostle Paul maintains with force and logic in his epistles to the saints in Galatia and Ephesus, that the Gospel was for all men; that the Jew had no advantage over the Gentile. The apostle's business was to proclaim this Gospel of salvation free to all who feel their need and are willing to come to Him.

Well, now, if the barrier has been swept away, if the Christ is for all, those who thus pray for missions should ask, to make this known? If the door of salvation is open to every human being, I must never rest till the Gospel is preached to every man in his own tongue. I do not say all will flock to Him, but our business is to see that every one is given the opportunity. As we look back on the past year, we may ask, Have we spent money, time, talents that men may know Christ? Have missions occupied their true place in my mind and life? The spread of the Gospel took the foremost place in the mind of the Apostle Paul—we may seriously inquire if it takes any such place in our lives.

WHAT AM I DOING

Then, again, do we fully recognise that in preaching the Gospel we are conferring the greatest possible benefit upon men? Paul calls it "the unsearchable riches of Christ," because it makes men rich. A very remarkable paper appeared in The Spectator last autumn, in which Mr. Hutton asserted that the proper conception of the Gospel is that it confers riches and lasting blessing upon men. This is a remarkable conception, coming from such a source, but it is the truth.

Then, lastly, remember that while the Gentiles have been admitted to the privileges of grace the Jews have not been excluded, and while we preach the Gospel to the heathen in every clime we must not forget God's ancient and scattered people.

At Exeter Hall, Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM presided over a larger attendance than gathered on previous days. The speaker was Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, who took for his text Matt. ix. 38, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into his harvest." He dwelt upon the place of prayer in missionary enterprise. Christ's three words on the subject are: Pray, give, go; and as the Church maintains prayer in its primal place, so will she show a deepened fellowship with the Lord in the evangelisation of the world. One reason why prayer has this pre-eminent place in connection with missionary work was found in the fact that it keeps Christian people in mind of the true character of the enterprise—that God originated it, and is its permanent director. A second reason is that prayer supplies the means by which the work is carried on—alike as to men and money. The Lord thrusts forth labourers in answer to prayer; the silver and the gold are the Lord's, and He knows how to take it from the pockets of his people.

Hence, the missionary prayer meeting is of far greater importance than the missionary public meeting. In answer to believing prayer the right men and women are sent forth by God, and kept from discouragement while in the field. Again, in answer to prayer, mission boards are sustained and shielded from going wrong in the discharge of their important duties. Finally, prayer should be intelligent, alike as to the Scriptural principles of missions, and as to the facts of their progress throughout the world. The missionary magazine should be in every household, and should be read at least as diligently as the daily newspaper. Of course prayer for missions, like all prayer, should be intense and earnest.

SATURDAY.

"Home Missions and the Jews" was the subject for prayer in St. Martin's Hall on Saturday morning, under a threefold division:

That Christian people may make greater efforts for the spiritual welfare of neighbours and fellow countrymen; that blessing may accompany inner missions and labours among special classes; that God's ancient people may be brought into the fold of Christ.

Mr. JOHN PATON presided, reading Acts i. 1-8 and Rev. vii. 4-12, as bearing upon the topics for the day. Much time was spent in fervent supplication at intervals, and, in the course of a brief address, Rev. PREBENDARY KITTO deduced practical lessons for God's people from a survey of Israel's chequered history. When the time of the fulness of the Gentiles comes in, they will, by God's grace, see the spiritual accomplishment of his purposes, and will pay back the spiritual debt which they owe to the Jew, by becoming channels for a general and widespread Jewish reception of Christ's Gospel. Working and waiting for this blessed end must go hand in hand with prayer. Prayer, apart from work and patient waiting, may be the expression of a sentiment, but is not the thing which moves the hand Divine. We Christians may each do much in the direction of Israel's ingathering unto Christ, even though we never come into contact with a single Jew, by being filled with our Lord's spirit, letting Him reign in us, living his life and doing his work. Let us also remember for our encouragement that diligent work for God among our own kindred is a sure means of bringing about the time when the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in; and only when that is accomplished is it possible for God's purpose to be fulfilled in the salvation of all Israel, ushering in the blessed time when there shall be no differences of Jew and Gentile, bond and free, but all believing souls shall be embraced in God's great family.

The week of prayer was also specially observed at Aldersgate-street. Mr. W. R. Lane, who is at present conducting a mission to City young men, at this centre, gave an address daily at the noon prayer meeting, on themes stimulative of united prayer for church and nation.

Open-Air Mission for Ireland.

THE year 1897 has been the most encouraging which this society has had since it began operations in this country. Though not much older than the nineties of the century, the work is now widely extended, and covers a considerable area of the island, and the simple story of the Gospel is regularly told to crowds of people, on fair days, market days, and Sundays, in the south, east, west, and centre of Ireland, at the most important centres of its population.

In and around Dublin alone as many as thirty-six Gospel services were held weekly through the summer months, in the most public thoroughfares, and without any particular opposition. Thousands of people heard the Word of Life who could never have heard it in any other way. In addition to these, the Gospel is now preached in the following places through the country—viz., Waterford, Cork, Bandon, Galway, Sligo, Athlone, Tullamore, Portarlington, Mountmellick, Maryboro', Monasterevan, Enniscorthy, Arklow, and Carlow.

Many other doors are open and thousands of hungry souls are waiting for the Gospel message. We praise God that we know of many who have been led to the Saviour through the preaching of the Word. We have heard of triumphant deathbeds, where the Word of Life penetrated dark hearts, even in the last hours, speaking peace where before there was nothing but despair and gloom. The society is undenominational, and its object is to preach the simple Gospel to the masses who cannot be reached in any other way. Communications may be addressed to the treasurer, Captain R. W. Thompson, J.P., Clonskeagh Castle, Dublin. T. A. C.

Obituary.

REV. CHARLES JAMES.

This earnest young minister, formerly pastor of Ryde Congregational Church, Isle of Wight, has been called home. Mr. James, who has been in ill-health for the last three years, resigned his church at Ryde in order to take a sea voyage, but after visiting South Africa and South Australia, his health was unimproved, and on Monday morning he died at Stroud Green, at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Masters, at whose hands he has for the last three months been nursed with tender solicitude. Mr. James, who was trained at Hackney College, held a three years' pastorate at Wycliffe Chapel, Stepney, and two years at Ryde. By his death a career of promise and usefulness has closed at the early age of thirty.

MR. G. L. PILKINGTON, B.A., UGANDA.

Intelligence received from Zanzibar on Monday states that this devoted young C.M.S. missionary has been killed while acting as interpreter to a force despatched from Mengo to the Nile to quell the revolt of the Soudanese. Mr. Pilkington was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge. While at the University a visit by Mr. Douglas Hooper was the means of arousing him (with Messrs. Baskerville and Cotter) to a sense of the peculiar claims of the Dark Continent, and the three offered themselves and were accepted. After a series of stirring meetings at home the party sailed for East Africa on January 23, 1890, reaching Uganda some time after the death of the devoted Alexander Mackay. Since then, save for a visit home in 1896, Mr. Pilkington has laboured with steady devotion in the extension of the Gospel and Christian education of the Baganda.

MR. EDWARD DAVIES, J.P.

This well-known philanthropist and upholder of every good cause in the Principality of Wales passed away at Plasdinam, Montgomeryshire, on New Year's Day, at the early age of forty-five years. He was a man of great abilities and sterling integrity, conscientious in all his dealings. Great wealth did not corrupt him, neither was his heart hardened by prosperity. He inherited the great Ocean collieries of the Rhondda, the Ogmore, and the Garu Valleys, as well as the lion's share of the great Barry Dock and Railway, on the death of his respected father, Mr. David Davies, ex-M.P. for Cardigan; yet he was a most humble Christian, a lifelong abstainer, an elder of the Welsh Presbyterian Church, and general treasurer of the Welsh Forward Movement. He will be greatly missed by the 10,000 workmen in his employ, by the tenant-farmers to whom he was so generous, and by the educationalists of Wales; but more than all by the Forward Movement, of which he was not only treasurer, but chief supporter. May God bless his dear wife and children, and raise up others to fill the gaps made by his departure. J. P.

MRS. W. W. PERKS.

The dearly-loved wife of Mr. W. W. Perks, of The Friary, Winchester, and mother of the Misses Perks, of the Soldiers' Home, passed into the glory early in the morning of the last day of the old year. She was in her eighty-fourth year, and has left a life-long testimony to the saving and keeping power of the Lord Jesus, whom she loved so well, and longed to see. Mrs. Perks was converted in early childhood. Her spiritual life developed into a vigorous Christianity, ripened into precious fruit, and is now perfected in the glory. She was a true friend to all real Christian work, and will be missed by many. The well-known mission, carried on so many years by two of her daughters at the Soldiers' Home, at all times had her warmest interest and sympathy; and by her expressed desire, Mr. Charles Edwards conducted her funeral service, which was deeply impressive and solemn in its beautiful simplicity, but bright and full of comfort and hope. A band of Christian men, members of the Soldiers' Home Mission, carried her remains to their last resting place, where many friends had gathered to manifest their esteem for the aged saint and their sympathy with the bereaved family Pastors' College.—The free evening classes for Christian workers will be resumed on Tuesday, January 18. The subjects will embrace theology, physiology, logic, Greek, Latin, shorthand, etc. For full particulars enclose a stamped envelope to the secretary, Mr. G. Hall, Pastors' College, Temple-street, Newington, S.E.

Home Missions

The London Mission.

WE are now on the eve of this special and extended Gospel campaign by Rev. John McNeill. The first public gathering in connection with it was a meeting for united prayer, held on Sunday evening last at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The preacher at the regular evening service was Pastor Archibald G. Brown, of West Norwood. During his discourse he made hearty reference to the coming mission, and he led the proceedings at the prayer meeting subsequently held.

As soon as Rev. F. B. Meyer arrived from Christ Church he took the presidency of the meeting, and gave a short address bearing on Mr. McNeill's campaign. Earnest prayer followed from various brethren belonging to different denominations in South London; all the petitions were expressive of strong desire and expectation that the coming effort would be productive of a great spiritual awakening and reviving throughout the Metropolis. There were between 2000 and 3000 persons present at this meeting—a good indication of the widespread interest that has been awakened. Much prayer is being made also at a large number of churches in different parts of London.

We append the programme, as arranged, of the second fortnight's work, extending from Jan. 30 to Feb. 11:—

Jan. 30, Sunday, 11 a.m., Marylebone Presbyterian Church, W.
Jan. 30, Sunday, 3.30 p.m., St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W.
Jan. 30, Sunday, 7 p.m., Westminster Chapel, James-street, S.W.
Jan. 31, Monday, 3.30 p.m., St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W.
Feb. 1, Tuesday, 3.30 p.m., St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W.
Jan. 31 to Feb. 4, 7.30 p.m., Westminster Chapel, James-street, S.W.
Feb. 2, Wednesday, 3.30 p.m., Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.
Feb. 3, Thursday, 3.30 p.m., Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.
Feb. 4, Friday, 3.30 p.m., Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.
Feb. 6, Sunday, 11 a.m., Eccleston-square Congregational Church, S.W.
Feb. 6, Sunday, 3.30 p.m., St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W.
Feb. 6, Sunday, 7 p.m., Westminster Chapel, James-street, S.W.
Feb. 8-11, Tuesday to Friday, 1 to 2 p.m., Pillar Room, Cannon-street Hotel, E.C.
Feb. 7-11, Monday to Friday, 7.30 p.m., Westminster Chapel James-street, S.W.

The Methodist Times of last week has the following:—"At the suggestion of Mr. Price Hughes and the Executive Committee of the West London Mission, Mr. McNeill will probably take the afternoon service at St. James's Hall on most of the Sundays of the next three months. The usual 'Conference' will be most gladly put on one side, and all the machinery and agencies of the West London Mission will be employed to give Mr. McNeill the full advantage of the unique opportunities presented by St. James's Hall on Sunday afternoon."

In our next issue we hope to report the welcome meeting in Exeter Hall to-morrow (Friday) evening, and the opening services of Sunday and Monday next.

The South Metropolitan B.W.T.A. Union, composed of about twenty-six branches, has for some months employed missionaries (women) to watch over the interests of women and girls who appear at Lambeth, Southwark, and Greenwich Police Courts. Hundreds of pledges have been taken, and, followed up by systematic visitation at the homes, have been in very many cases stepping stones to reform. More than fifty girls have been delivered from evil and placed in safe surroundings; more than one hundred women have been sent to rescue or inebriate homes, or restored to their friends; clothing and nourishment have been, after strict investigation, given to the deserving poor, who have also received medical attention. The very success attending this work has led to a difficulty—we have no intermediate home for the women and girls (committed to our care by the magistrate) while we find them a permanent situation or home. If we refuse to take charge of them, there is only prison life and afterwards its stigma for them, and their salvation is further off. A six or seven roomed house in the vicinity of the Old or New Kent-road would answer the purpose admirably. We earnestly appeal for help in this matter. R. Kemp, Hon. Sec.

Waifs and Strays in East London.

THE Edinburgh Castle still continues to hold its reputation as the East-End Mansion House. Without it, the quarter of London of which it is the centre would miss a far-reaching moral and spiritual influence; and who could say what would happen if its generous and discriminating hospitality should come to an end?

At this season its resources are highly taxed to provide for its numerous guests, and last Wednesday evening was the occasion of the first joyous event of the year. It was attended by two thousand boys and girls. That the little folk were carefully selected is a matter of course; it is due to Dr. Barnardo, the master of the feast, to say that the experience of a quarter of a century was exercised in bringing them together. And what a company they formed, how significant in appearance, how appalling in suggestion! Gathered into one net, they fitly represented the dirt and degradation, the sin and sorrow of the Metropolis.

In order to secure them, many a square mile of congested London had been carefully gleaned over for days before. Districts as far distant as Notting Hill, Holloway, Lambeth, and Hoxton had been searched by experienced waif-finders. The services of many a friendly lodging-house deputy had been used, that homeless bairns might get invitations. How early in the day some of them set out on the journey it would be hard to say, but many were at the doorstep hours before the time of admission.

That so many of them could undertake such a journey without any caretaker in the wet weather that prevailed, is indicative of the endurance and hardihood that are bred in the gutter child. Once inside, the sorrows of the dreary way were all forgotten. Enough for them that their present was full of promise. They were welcomed with joyous strains of music, and when they thought they would, their efforts upon popular songs of the street made the large hall ring again.

Never was feast ordered with such precision, nor were guests kept so well in hand by friendly stewards. With bugle and command the viands were provided, while with curious care and discretion were they arranged by the recipients. The toothsome fruit-cake was carefully laid aside until the keen edge of the appetite was taken off by meat-pie and substantial bread-and-butter. The supplies were generous, and doubtless many remaining at home were more or less made acquainted with the fine flavour of the feast.

Be the supper ever so long, at last it cometh to thankful song, after which one could more readily open up confidential relations with the little folk. A very large proportion of them were of school age, and many professed to be enjoying the discipline of the honoured profession. Perhaps they were, perhaps not. But what did they want to know about degrees of comparison or the subjunctive mood, while every rag and tatter that exposed their grimy forms was mutely calling out for mothering, soap, and many waters? Here was a knot of coal-van boys. Their talk was of the market price and the wide circle of customers who could buy "half-a-hundred" at a time. There were van boys who sat on a tailboard from seven in the morning till seven at night. Now it is out-o'-works, over school age, who are filling in idle days by hawking vestas in the West End, until, perhaps, the evil spirit of the street stamps them for good as freebooters of the slums, loafers of the pavement.

Of the lasses with matted hair and varied garments, it is harder to speak. Their needs were so eloquent it seemed like impertinence to look at them, much more to describe them, critically. Besides, the compassionate soul who wishes to know them more intimately may do so any day. The pity of it is there are so many little maidens waiting to learn what Christian compassion really means.

But the best of the feast is yet to be. There is Dr. Barnardo staggering with bent limbs across the platform. He bears a bag of bullion on his shoulders. Oh, what mad delight! For every dirt-brown imp knows full well that in that bag there is a bright new sixpence which will soon be within his eager grasp. The worthy doctor is a man of motive: every single sixpence is a hostage for further good behaviour. Besides, a couple of oranges will accompany every piece of silver. The entertainment which followed awaked joyous and hearty laughter. The morrow had no sorrows in its lap, while song, instrumental music, ventriloquism, and lantern rivetted their attention.

Then Dr. Barnardo led up to the grand end of the gathering. He made a company of his smart, rosy-cheeked lads stand up to be looked at. It was a sight fit to turn the heart of any street-boy to a disciplined life. The promise, even of the life that now is—if he could see no further—loomed up before his eyes. Mothers who read this may not realise what these children were now asked to decide. The door of a new life was opened before them? Would they enter in? We are profoundly thankful that Christian philanthropy makes this possible. A hundred of the neediest of that two thousand will no more, bare-foot, hungry, and drenched to the skin, stumble through the muddy lanes to the Edinburgh Castle. They decided to remain and be trained for better things.

Welsh Forward Movement.

THE half-yearly meeting of the directors of this movement was held recently at Llanelly, Carmarthenshire. A large number of delegates were present, and much business was transacted. Rev. J. M. Jones, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, presided over the first meeting, and Principal Prys, M.A., Trevecca College, over the second. In the absence of the general treasurer, the general secretary (Rev. Lewis Ellis, Rhyl) read the financial statement, which showed that there would be a deficit of something like £700—before the annual collections would come to hand in March. In view of this, it was proposed that personal appeals should be made to friends interested in the salvation of the people.

Rev. John Pugh, general superintendent, in his report, showed clearly that, from a spiritual standpoint, the last six months had been far and away the most prosperous in the history of the movement. Two of the centres of Cardiff, East Moors and Grangetown, had experienced extraordinary blessing in the way of professed conversions, many of the converts being as hopeless as any human beings he had ever seen. A similar blessing had been experienced in a less degree by the majority of the thirty-four centres; in fact, there was progress all along the line—except, perhaps, at two or three minor points.

In the Newport Central Mission the large temperance hall has become far too small to contain the people anxious to hear the Gospel. Hundreds are turned away every Sunday evening. There are now four halls engaged in soul-saving work; and yet Newport, like Cardiff, is calling out for more halls, and men, filled with the Holy Ghost, to go forth and possess the people for Jesus Christ. The centres in the mining districts—taking everything into consideration—are doing quite as well as those of Cardiff and Newport. Thus, in what are called the blackest counties of Great Britain (Glamorgan and Monmouth), God is making the movement a mighty blessing to the most hopeless and helpless—victims of sin and Satan. As sure as he is taken to the people, Christ changes them and their surroundings, and that in a very short time.

Wrexham was named as an example of this. Mr. Pugh said: We only began operations in that metropolis of the liquor traffic in October last. Before we had been there a month the large Public Hall, which is said to hold 1500 people, was crowded with men and women, who for the most part never attended any place of worship. Since then scores of them have professed conversion to God. In conclusion, Mr. Pugh asked: Shall a movement, so blessed of God to the conversion of sinners, be hampered and crippled for want of funds? Surely this shall never be in a land where there are so many rich Christians who are conscious that they are only holding God's money in trust for Him, and for which they must ere long render an account. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Rev. John Pugh, Grange Gardens, Cardiff.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD

MR. W. R. LANE IN THE CITY.

A MISSION to City young men is being held by Mr. W. R. Lane at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. On the first evenings—Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday of last week—the evangelist addressed himself mainly to Christians seeking to stimulate and rouse an intenser devotion to the great work of winning others to Christ. On Wednesday week a reception was given, when some 400 young men, largely strangers to the place and the work, were gathered by special invitation out of the City warehouses and great business establishments. After tea and social converse, an address was given by Mr. Lane, who puts the personal claims of God and the imperative necessity of prompt decision with force and urgency. Not a few seemed deeply moved, and several professed to decide for Christ. The week closed with a full and fruitful meeting on Friday. This week these special meetings are being continued each evening.

A new interesting feature has been introduced in "Half-hour Talks to Business Men," given daily by Mr. Lane at the noon prayer-meeting, when he hopes to deal in the five addresses (Monday to Friday) with five Bible stories, illustrating different aspects of the power and penalty of sin. In the first talk, on Monday, the lessons of the story of Achan were enlarged upon in a vigorous fashion under the title "A Doubtful Destiny." The points made were:—The downward progress of sin—"I saw," "I coveted," "I took": The destructive influence of sin on others—a curse in the camp, and so defeat and failure: The discovery and judgment—"Be sure your sin will find you out"; God save us from secret sin which saps the life: and, lastly, the doubtful confession, "I have sinned." On these lines an earnest evangelistic address was given. Evident efforts had been made to bring in young men, who were present in unusual numbers.

A "COUNTRY HOUSE" MISSION.

IT is sometimes said that evangelists do not care about accepting invitations for village missions, and that they would rather go to towns where they can be sure of elaborate preparations and big crowds. This statement is hardly the case. The Lord Jesus, the greatest evangelist the world has known, went about among the villages, and certainly none of us who seek to follow his footsteps would dare to refuse any call that we felt to be of God.

A short time ago it was my privilege to pay a second visit to a well-known country gentleman for special meetings in his fine old house. The meetings were held in the large hall, which seemed specially adapted for the purpose. Each morning I conducted family prayers, when all the indoor and outdoor servants were gathered together to listen to the words of life. And every evening, immediately after dinner, the hall was well filled—and on one occasion the grand staircase also—with an earnest company of friends, servants, employés, and tenant farmers, all waiting before God, like Cornelius and his kinsmen, and near friends, to hear a message from the Lord.

I have purposely refrained from mentioning names or results, but I feel free to say that meetings have been held in the same way and place in former years by Lord Radstock, Captain Tottenham, and other prominent servants of Christ, and the Word that has gone forth has never returned void.

Cannot other children of God, whose hearts the Lord has touched, open their houses for similar effort, not forgetting that the evangelist is a man, and not an angel?

Eastbury, Gosport. W. MONRO COLLINGS.

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN BOSTON.

The work here grows in all directions. The noon meetings bring from six hundred to a thousand people, and the interest is very deep. Hundreds tell of blessing received and fresh light from the Word of the Lord. There has been establishment of many in their most holy faith. Oh, what a precious word that is, "And ye beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of Our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life" (Jude 20). We unite in kindest love to yourself and the excellent lady to whom you are united. May the sweet word in 1 Peter iii. 7 have a blessed fulfilment in your experiences. We pray for you. We have recently passed our fortieth wedding day. Our hearts are full of praise. I cannot tell when I shall get away from this city. The work grows remarkably. (From a private letter.)

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

In response to a desire on the part of the many friends of D. L. Moody that he should return to New York this winter, he is conducting a week's meetings in Carnegie Hall, beginning January 9. The object of these services is the deepening of the spiritual life and the training of Christian workers, like the great meetings conducted by Mr. Moody in New York city last winter, by which multitudes were benefited.

An eight days' mission has been held by Mr. Gerald Coultas, at the Allen-road Gospel Mission, South Hornsey. The old, old story has been most simply and lovingly given. The meetings have been well attended, and God has indeed used his servant. The result of the meetings have been a great harvest of souls, and the Lord's children being aroused to fresh life. The closing meeting of Jan. 10 was very interesting, being preceded by a tea, after which Mr. Gerald Coultas gave an account of his life and seventeen years' experience, relating many thrilling perils he has passed through in his work for the Master. The Allen-road Mission, South Hornsey, is carried on by a number of young men, their leaders being Mr. E. R. Brake and Mr. B. Boram.

MR. E. P. TELFORD, Beverley, 16-27.
MR. JOSIAH NIX, Warrington, 16-24.
MR. GEORGE CLARKE, Putney, 16-31.
MR. F. C. SPURR, Bradford, Jan. 15-23.
MR. J. J. SIMS, during January, in Bristol.
MR. W. R. LANE, 16-27, the Dome, Brighton.
MRS. E. L. BAEYERTZ, Huddersfield, in January.
GIPSY SMITH, Newcastle, Jan. 8-17; Banbury, 22-31.
MR. NED WRIGHT, St. Giles's Mission, Soho, Jan. 17.
THE WEAVER BROTHERS, Glasgow (Cowcaddens), Jan. 9-28.
MR. CHARLES INGLIS, the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, in January.
MR. J. S. HARRISON, St. Giles's Christian Mission, Sundays in January.
MR. J. BENNETT ANDERSON, Jan. 16, Liverpool; Jan. 23 to Feb. 3, New Quay, Cornwall.
REV. J. MCNEILL'S LONDON MISSION.—The following are the arrangements for Mr. McNeill's first mission, January 16-28:—Jan. 16, Sunday, 11 a.m., Marylebone Presbyterian Church, W.; Jan. 16, Sunday, 3.30, p.m., St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W.; Jan. 16, Sunday, 6.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Butts, S.E.; Jan. 17-21, Monday to Friday, 12 to 1 p.m., City Temple, Holborn-viaduct, E.C.; Jan. 17-21, Monday to Friday, 7.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle; January 23, Sunday, 11 a.m., City Temple; Jan. 23, Sunday, 3.30 p.m., St. James's Hall, Piccadilly; Jan. 23, Sunday, 6.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle; Jan. 24-28, Monday to Friday, 12 to 1 p.m., City Temple; Jan. 24-28, Monday to Friday, 7.30 p.m., Metropolitan Tabernacle. No Saturday meetings. Due notice will be given of subsequent missions.

Requests for Prayer.

For special services in Lyonsdown Hall, New Barnet, by Mr. John Elliott.

For a mission at Lewyn, Cornwall, from Sunday, Jan. 16, by Mr. G. W. Clegg.

For blessing on a mission, Jan. 16 to 23, at Little Waltham, by Mr. W. Wright.

For a Gospel Mission at Letchmore Heath Gospel Hall, Watford, Jan. 16 to 23, by Mr. B. H. Angel.

For a series of special services at Eldon-road Chapel, Cardiff, Jan. 17 to 20, by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport.

For a fourteen days' mission (to commence Jan. 18), at East Barnet, Herts, by Rev. P. J. Smart and Mr. J. Cheeseman.

ON behalf of Rev. S. H. Wilkinson's visit on January 17, at the monthly meetings for the deepening of spiritual life at Ipswich.

That the reformation movement among Roman Catholic priests in France may be guided on definitely spiritual lines. There is much cause for praise on account of evangelistic work in France.

For Rev. F. B. Meyer's meetings in the United States:—Albany, Jan. 20 and 21; Bay City, Mich., 22 and 23; Detroit, 24—26; Chicago, Ill., 27—30; Kansas City, Feb. 1, 2, and 3; St. Louis, 4, 5, and 6; Baltimore, 7—10; Washington, 11, 12, and 13; Philadelphia, 14 and 15; Brooklyn, 16 and 17; Rochester, 18—22; Student Volunteer Convention, Cleveland, 23 and 24.

Letters to the Editor.

THE STUDY OF SCRIPTURE.

DEAR SIR,—I was greatly interested in Mr. Willat's letter, "More about my Bible." It is refreshing to a young Christian in these days of discounted truth to come across one to whom the Bible is such "a living, bright reality." The faith of many has of late years been rudely shaken, but if only those who are "in darkness and have no light" would study the Bible itself, instead of what man has written about it, and leave alone the more or less fanciful theories current in modern literature, I feel sure they would find it solid ground beneath them instead of the shifting sand on which their feet are vainly seeking to find a hold.—Yours faithfully, A GLAD READER.

DEAR SIR,—May I add a few words by way of supplement to the very interesting and helpful article on the Bible by Mr. Willats, in last week's CHRISTIAN? The remark is made that very many Christians have but a slight knowledge of the Bible. I cannot but think that one reason of this partial ignorance is the fact that so few people make a point of reading it consecutively and regularly.

I can say from experience that until I began to do this, I never had anything like the same pleasure or profit from its pages.

The Book of Genesis has now quite a fascination. Whenever I read the Book afresh, and even in what appear to be dry and stony places, such as some chapters in Chronicles, there are precious gems which one feels it would be a great loss to miss. I would earnestly advise any who have not been in the habit of consecutive reading from beginning to end, to commence this plan, which will amply repay them. Trusting that some of your readers may be induced to follow this advice—I am, yours truly, A LOVER OF THE BIBLE.

DEAR SIR,—Your "Daily Homily" is a great help to me in my reading of God's Word, both at family prayers and in private.

I prefer consecutive to irregular reading, and when I come to chapters hard to be understood, I never fail to get some helpful thought (oftener, many a one) from these daily portions.

But I would warn my fellow-readers against a possible tendency to content oneself with the leading thought that the "Homily" presents, and to miss many others to be found in the rest of the chapter. It should be regarded as a condiment rather than a meal.—Yours truly,

A STUDENT.

Drovers in London.—One of the most interesting branches of the work of the City Mission is that among the numerous drovers and cattle-attendants at Islington and Deptford markets. The annual social meeting in connection with the Islington work, under Mr. O. Stewart, was held last week when 200 drovers and their wives were entertained. A resolution was cordially passed urging the Corporation to grant much needed accommodation in the Islington market for a coffee-room, and similar space for a coffee-bar and a shelter in Deptford market. In the latter case the need is specially great because of the growing importance of Deptford as a landing place for foreign cattle. The Duchess of Albany is showing a practical interest in the condition of the girls engaged at Deptford.

The Institute of Preventive Medicine, in course of erection on the Thames Embankment at Chelsea, is designed for purposes of vivisection and experimentation. The residents in the locality have objected to the institution, and now the London Anti-Vivisection Society, of 32, Sackville-street, W., through its secretary (Mr. Sidney G. Trist), has petitioned the Home Secretary to withhold a licence for the practice of vivisection. There are already thirteen places in London registered for experiments on living animals; and it is maintained that not only are the results of the experiments contradictory, but that the inoculations, which are so popular in scientific circles, often set up virulent diseases and sickness, attended by serious and even fatal consequences,—also that the practice of vivisection is wholly repugnant and hateful to many of Her Majesty's subjects. In acknowledging the petition, the Home Secretary intimates that no application has yet been received for the registration of the Institute under 39 and 40 Vic., cap. 77, and says that the protest will be duly considered in the event of an application being received.

Current Events

HOME.

There was a decrease of over £5,750,000 in British exports for last year.

Mr. Ernest Hart, editor of the British Medical Journal, has died at Brighton.

There are 150 cases of typhoid at Camborne, Cornwall; four have proved fatal.

Experiments are to be made with the view of growing sugar-beet in this country.

The first conference of the National Federation of Head Teachers' Associations, held in Essex Hall, has been a distinct success.

In the engineering dispute no progress towards settlement can be recorded. Masters and men are "awaiting the course of events."

The Miners' Federation have held a successful conference at Bristol, and decided to give the Workmen's Compensation Act a fair trial.

A peculiar type of measles is raging at Llanelly, hundreds of cases being under treatment. Several of the largest Board Schools are closed.

We are glad to note the activity of the police in the matter of gaming-houses. Forty arrests were made on Sunday last at a "club" in Soho.

Sir Edward Augustus Bond, late principal librarian at the British Museum, has just died. He was promoted to the grade of K.C.B. on New Year's Day.

By the invitation of Mr. Alderman Treloar, 1300 children, drawn from the poorest districts of London, have been for the fourth year in succession entertained at the Guildhall.

A scheme is on foot for the purchase of the Crystal Palace, as a pleasure resort, by the public authorities. This will be a boon if drink is prohibited and the highest good of the people kept well in view.

At a fire on the premises of a firm of wholesale chemists in Glasgow damage to the amount of £14,000 was done, and four firemen lost their lives owing to an explosion after the outbreak was almost subdued.

A portion of a roadway, believed to be of Roman origin, has been discovered by workmen at Reigate, The path is about 14 ft. wide, and is composed of flints, the edges of which have been trimmed to fit accurately.

A wooden hut, saturated with naphtha and petroleum, and "blazing like a blast furnace," was extinguished in 1 min. 18 sec. by "chemical" fire-engines. Since the great Cripplegate fire increased attention is being given to fire-extinguishing appliances.

A firm of brewers in Liverpool sent a case of champagne as a Christmas box to the police superintendents of the five divisions in which the firm's licensed houses are situated. The presents were returned with the expression, "There has been some mistake."

At the annual conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, Sir John Stainer, president, referred to the vast amount of worthless instruction now being given in music, and urged the appointment of a representative body with statutory powers for licensing teachers.

Sir John Hutton seriously attacks the existing water supply of London. Unless preventive measures are taken, he fears that an epidemic such as recently afflicted Maidstone may at any time develop. He expresses himself strongly upon the prevailing method of testing the sources of supply.

In her preface to the autobiography of Mr. Joseph Arch, Lady Warwick says: "It seemed to me a pity that the story of his life-work should remain untold, and I am glad to be of help to him in the telling of it." No firebrand, but a "village Hampden," is her estimate of Mr. Arch.

The number of depositors in the Post Office Savings Bank has risen in the last fifteen years from 2,858,976 to 6,862,035, and the sums deposited from £39,037,821 to £108,098,641.—A great accession was made last year to the number of female clerks employed in this department. Their work has been of an excellent character.

Sir E. Poynter, President of the Royal Academy, re-opened the South London Art Gallery and Passmore Edwards Institute after extensive improvements.—The personalty of Sir John Gilbert, R.A., the famous painter, is sworn at £231,584 2s. 8d. net.—The 240 works of Millais, now on view at Burlington House, are said to be worth a quarter of a million, an average of over £1000 each.

It is pleasing to note that the "list of denominations" which used to be included in "Whitaker's Almanack," has disappeared from the 1898 edition. Mr. Howard Evans's recent article in The Contemporary Review, in which the extraordinary inaccuracy and exaggeration of this list was so thoroughly exposed, is largely responsible for this, and he has rendered a real service to the cause of religion by taking a mistaken weapon of attack out of the hands of its enemies.

FOREIGN.

A young watchmaker, according to the New York Herald, has discovered how to telegraph pictures.

From Belgrade comes the announcement that the ex-King Milan has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Servian Army.

Mr. Chamberlain has refused to submit to arbitration the questions in dispute between Great Britain and the Transvaal.

On the Indian Frontier, the Tanga Pass has been captured with the loss of only one man wounded. When will this vexatious war cease?

To punish the troublesome tribes in the vicinity of Ediba, West Africa, an expedition of eight officers and one hundred men has left Bonny.

By the sudden giving way of the floor of the City Hall, London, Ontario, thirty lives have been sacrificed and over a hundred persons injured.

Delegates from France, America, South Africa, and Australasia are expected to take part next May in the celebration of the centenary of the Rebellion in Ireland.

On his return to his dominions, the King of Siam has received an address of welcome from his people. He promises to do his best to make his country great and prosperous.

Unbounded satisfaction is expressed by all Bulgarians at the berats which have been granted by the Porte to Bulgarian bishops for Divra, Monastir, and Strumnitza.

Dr. Darley Hartley, ex-president of the South African League, is on a mission to this country to lay before the British electorate the views of the loyal colonists at the Cape.

Great Britain, Russia, and Japan are in accord concerning Korea. This will assist present and future missionary effort in the peninsula, besides steadying its political position.

The Greek Finance Minister in his Budget declared that the income of the nation was 8,000,000 drachmae less than last year. It will be a long time before Greece can attain commercial prestige.

The Austrian Reichsrath is likely to be convened for a new Session about the middle of March. Meanwhile fresh efforts will be made to bring about a better understanding between the Czechs and Germans.

The Fram, which carried Nansen on his memorable voyage to the Polar seas, is to sail northward next June under command of Captain Sverdrup. This expedition is organised under the auspices of the Norwegian Government.

Sidi Ali, who fled to Suakim on the Dervish conquest of Kassala, has returned under the escort of Captain M'Kerrell. His "restoration" will produce an excellent effect throughout the district.—A regular postal service is now established between Suakim and Berber and Suakim and Kassala.

It is rumoured that Li Hung Chang has returned to power at Pekin, and that he has expressed himself strongly on the seizure of Kiao-chau by the Germans. His protest against the dismemberment of the Empire meets with the heartiest sympathy from American statesmen.—French occupation of Hainan is imminent, and Germany leases Kiao-chau for fifty years. In the latter case China will surrender all her rights over Kiao-chau bay, with its shores, entrance, and islands.—China appears to be endeavouring to secure the guarantee of the British Government to a new loan of £16,000,000.

The humiliating reactions against social reform in New York has been publicly celebrated by "processions and salvoes of artillery." The crusade initiated four years ago by Dr. Parkhurst, culminating in the disgraceful revelations of the Senatorial Committee, has been utterly defeated, and the government of the second largest city in the world has been again given over into the hands of adventurers and money-grabbers of the worst kind. And this by the votes of the community. "My people love to have it so." History and revelation speak with no uncertain voice as to the certain issue of such a sad relapse.

Kidnapping and Heresy in Russia.—The Berlin correspondent of The Daily Chronicle says: "I learn from the Caucasus that the authorities in the Don Cossack country and in Ciscaucasia have taken away several children from parents who belong to the Shalopout sect, and placed them under the guardianship of Orthodox relatives. The Shalopouts are a sect of Protestant Russians who are described as leading godly and quiet lives, but strongly opposed to the tenets of the National Church. Some time ago a meeting of Orthodox clergy at Kazan recommended this kidnapping of children as an efficacious way of dealing with heresy and retarding its growth."

Armenian Persecution.

The Cairo correspondent of The Times writes, under date Dec. 27:—Letters have been received by Armenian refugees in Egypt from relatives and friends in Asia Minor describing the consequences which followed the public act of reparation lately made by Turkey to Austria for the outrages committed upon the Austrian Lloyd's agent at Mersina. The Mussulman population became excited at the humiliation of their chief officials, but, not daring to revenge themselves upon Europeans, turned their anger upon the unfortunate Armenians. Four innocent fugitives were murdered on their way to Hadjim, 180 camel-loads of merchandise were plundered on the road to Cæsarea, numerous arrests were made, and a cruel persecution began at Mersina and Adana of the chief Armenians, especially those who had received money from Europe for distribution amongst their suffering brethren, twenty-five persons being arrested in the two towns and since sentenced to death. The Turkish authorities spread rumours of an Armenian plot to destroy the Mussulman quarters of Mersina with dynamite, and having got hold of some private correspondence from Europe advising the Armenians to rely only upon themselves for their own protection, as no hope could be founded upon any efforts of European diplomacy, they distorted this into evidence of a seditious conspiracy. All this produced intense excitement amongst the Christians of Cilicia, who, fearing a revival of massacres, prepared for flight, and 200 families who had gone to Mersina to embark were prevented by the Turkish authorities and sent back to Tarsus.

Scottish Notes.

According to custom some 2000 of the city poor were entertained to a New Year's supper in the City Hall, Glasgow.

Rev. W. Mackintosh Mackay, formerly of Troon, was last week inducted minister of the Free South Church, Aberdeen. Mr. Mackay was welcomed by the congregation at a largely-attended social meeting.

The usual New Year's meetings in connection with Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, were full of interest, and no small blessing was experienced in the special awakening of those who attended. This week Mr. Bewley Weaver is having a mission at Cowcaddens.

The Edinburgh Industrial Brigade Home receives destitute lads, who are fed, lodged, clothed, and educated. Each boy is apprenticed to a trade and works in his master's premises. The only recommendation for admission is destitution. Since the home was founded some 3,000 lads have passed through it, many of whom are now scattered all over the globe and doing well. There are at present 120 lads in the home.

The death took place at Aberdeen, a few days since, of Rev. George Cockburn, one of the missionaries of the Church of Scotland. Mr. Cockburn was a graduate of Aberdeen University, and a number of years ago he went out to the Church of Scotland mission at Ichang, China, where he laboured successfully. The climate told upon his health, however, and he returned to his native country. He has since resided in Aberdeen.

Rev. John Kelman, of Leith, is giving a series of lectures on the early history of Israel to the students attending the Training Institute of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Free Church, at Atholl-crescent, Edinburgh. At this institution a course of training is given to foreign and home missionaries in Bible study, Christian doctrine and evidences, non-Christian religions, Indian languages, nursing, singing, practical mission-work, etc.

The report of the Faith Mission for the past year is one full of encouragement. Hundreds have become new creatures in Christ Jesus. The work of the mission has extended to Ireland. Over 100 missions have been conducted during the year in addition to Prayer Union and special campaigns, and regular work in Rothesay and Edinburgh. The year commenced with a staff of 46 pilgrims, some in preparation for the foreign field; since then five have gone abroad.

Irish Notes.

The week of prayer in connection with the Evangelical Alliance was duly observed last week in Dublin, Belfast, Newry, Cork, Limerick, Derry, and various other centres through Ireland. The meetings were well attended.

A manifest work of grace has taken place in connection with the Methodist Church, Roscrea, co. Tipperary, during the past two or three months. A Christian Endeavour Society has been formed, and the religious tone of the congregation is said to be most cheering.

THE BOOK WORLD

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The year's parts of The Children's Sunbeam (1s. Stoneman) make a volume which will be welcome to little ones who can read. Some of the contents seem more suited to the intelligence of persons of riper years.

Miss Mason's little monthly for Christian workers, Rest and Reaping (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott), abounds in notes on work and workers, prophetic and expository articles, and hints on various themes. Vol. xi., just issued, contains in this way much that is of general interest and usefulness.

The Home Messenger has completed its sixth year, and the bound volume provides a large variety of good reading for young and old. Joseph Hocking's story, "And shall Trelawney die?" runs through the parts, and the general contents embody excellent sketches, biographical and otherwise. The serial is admirably illustrated. (Horace Marshall & Son.)

All who are interested in Gospel work in the Sister Isle will find instructive matter in The Christian Irishman, a brightly written monthly paper. The year's parts, stitched in a cover, make a volume which many will like to have for reference. Among the most valuable contents are sketches of John Tauler, Raymond Lull, and Gerard Groot, three "Stars in the Night" of the dark ages. (1s. Offices, 16, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin).

One of the many useful monthlies that visit us from America is Rev. James O'Connor's magazine, The Converted Catholic. The fourteenth annual volume is replete with instructive matter, and tells of the emancipation of many Romish priests, and of work in their behalf in America and other lands. The pages expose the intrigues of the Papal hierarchy and Jesuits in the political, social, and family life. (1 dollar. James A. O'Connor, 142, West Twenty-first Street, New York.)

Among attractive missionary monthlies, a high place must be assigned to Regions Beyond, the organ of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, of the Congo Balolo Mission, and of the Regions Beyond Helpers' Union. The volume for 1897 is a repertory of well-digested missionary intelligence, and earnest appeals for enlarged missionary interest. The pages give descriptions of needy fields and graphic accounts of evangelistic tours. The volume will be of great service to students of missions, especially as regards China, India, and Central Africa. (Partridge & Co.)

SOME JANUARY MAGAZINES.

The current number of The Phonographer (3d. Phono Coy., Elgin, N.B.) is an excellent one, both in contents and lithographic execution.

The Sword and Trowel (Passmore & Alabaster) is of very special interest and value this month; besides the usual live articles, Part I. of Mr. Spurgeon's autobiography is given as a supplement. The price is increased for this occasion to 6d. net; post free 8½d.

Dr. A. T. Pierson's well-known monthly, The Missionary Review of the World, begins the year well, combining with its various excellent features a greater use of the engraver's art. By this means one gets a deeper and more exact impression of places, scenes, and customs met with in missionary literature, (1s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

A new denominational paper has appeared with the title The Baptist Monthly. The contents of the January number include a sketch of C. H. Spurgeon, by Rev. H. D. Brown; and contributions by Revs. J. G. Greenhough, J. W. Ewing, W. Hill, and J. Culross, D.D. As an illustrated periodical for the Baptist denomination, this monthly bids fair to perform a useful ministry, especially as localised by the churches. (1d. A. W. Stockwell & Co., 17, Paternoster-row.)

Among the principal contents of the January Temple Magazine may be noted "A Visit to Lambeth Palace," the home of the Archbishop of Canterbury, by Mary Spencer Warren; and "Unto the Third and Fourth Generation": A story of the Murray Family in South Africa, by Dr. F. E. Clark. Both articles are admirably illustrated, the letter having portraits of Andrew Murray, the well-known writer, and his father (Andrew the first), who went to the Cape from Scotland over seventy-five years ago.

The periodicals issued by Messrs. Cassell appeal to various classes, and serve a great purpose in entertainment and education. With the New Year Little Folks (6d.) begins a new volume. The contents are varied and fully illustrated, and an album of simple songs is presented with the part. The Quiver (6d.) opens with words of greeting from many men of influence. Among the sketches is an account of Miss Weston's work among the sailors Cassell's Magazine (6d.) has a fully-illustrated article on "Tobogganing," and views of Paris from the Eiffel Tower and other points of eminence. In The Magazine of Art (1s. 4d.) Sir Wyke Bayliss gives a painter's study of the likeness of Christ as it has been represented from the time of the Apostles to the present day. This paper is accompanied by twenty-four illustrations. Chums (6d.) is all alive with readings for our boys—sketches and interviews, stories and items of interest. Cassell's Saturday Journal (6d.) is also a budget of weekly parts filled with readable matter. Cottage Gardening (3d.) is the very thing for those who struggle with a few flowers in town or attempt larger things in rural districts. Work (6d.) is a useful monthly for mechanics, and The Building World (6d.) is a trade journal of great value.

We welcome a popular biography of John Wyclif, by R. Corlett Cowell. (1s. Wesleyan Methodist Book Room.) The ever-timely story is told in useful detail, and with many illustrations.

Dr. Anderson has revised his book The Silence of God, and sent forth a second edition with a new preface. We observe an important addition to the concluding chapter, giving a concise recapitulation of the main argument. The book is likely to prove much more suggestive and useful in this form than as originally issued. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The great John Bright was a man of refined literary taste, and it is a pleasure to have in A Book of Thoughts, compiled in his memory by his daughter, Mary B. Curry, a selection of the passages which he loved to read in the works of celebrated writers, ancient and modern. The volume is arranged in the form of daily readings for a year; and extracts from some of his speeches, and passages of prose and poetry associated with his memory, have been included, to give completeness to the work. Several portions of Holy Scripture find a place in this book, which may well serve as a volume of great thoughts in noble English. (3s. 6d. Headley Brothers, Bishopsgate-st. Without, E.C.

Many will read with interest The Life of Frederick Richards Wynne, D.D., Bishop of Killaloe. By James Hannay, M.A., Rector of Westport. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) These pages tell of a life of rare unselfishness, devotion to duty, and loving service of God and man. Early in his career Dr. Wynne came somewhat under the influence of the Tractarian movement, but ultimately broke away from the teachings of that pernicious school. He was generally claimed by the Evangelicals, but he himself disowned connection with any ecclesiastical party, although his Church polity and teaching were certainly on Evangelical lines. The volume contains some specimens of the late Bishop's sermons, addresses, and charges, which may fairly be described as heart-searching and full of comfort. These add considerably to the value of this simple record of a "good and faithful" servant of God.

Mission work among the Jews has its peculiar difficulties and also its special attractions. Some of these are well outlined by Rev. W. T. Gidney, M.A., assistant secretary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, in a work entitled Sites and Scenes, in which the Oriental Missions of the excellent society are succinctly described. In a second part Mr. Gidney hopes to cover the remainder of the society's field. The annual and other records have been digested with great judgment and care in the compilation of the book, and to all who wish to know the story of the inception and persevering prosecution of the work, the pages are cordially commended. Deeply interesting particulars are given of efforts in Abyssinia, Palestine, Syria, Asia Minor, and Arabia, and the book will have much to tell even those who regard themselves as fairly informed on the subject of the Jewish mission. (1s. Office of the Society, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.)

We could scarcely exaggerate the fascination of Rev. J. Macgowan's book, Pictures in Southern China (Religious Tract Society), which describes, from the outside point of view, the characteristic features of life in the chief cities on the southern coast of China. Beginning with Shanghai Mr. Macgowan leads the admiring reader to Foo Chow, Kushan, Amoy, Swatow, Hong Kong, and Canton, with remarkably graphic accounts of the journey by water between the respective places. At the close of the perusal one feels he has got a mental picture of these great centres of Anglo-Chinese population photographic in its distinctness of detail, and full of a glow and colour that no camera can produce. As pieces of vivid word painting, we cannot recollect anything in the records of foreign travel to surpass the book. An insight is also given into many aspects of Chinese life that vastly increases one's interest in that marvellous race. The letterpress is adorned and illumined by nearly eighty splendid illustrations, and for intelligent, thoughtful students we can imagine no more welcome gift book.

The Y.M.C.A.

MILE END ARTISAN Y.M.C.A.

THIS Association has during the past year been carrying on various aggressive agencies, such as Evangelistic Work, Straight Talks to Men, Training Classes, Bible Classes, visiting, etc. We have added a Christmas Dinner Fund, and the success which attended the effort is an encouragement for future work. Our workers and visitors had many a pitiful case of distress and want to report to the committee; many a home being without fire or food, and most of the furniture sold to pay the rent, as was the case with numbers of the applicants that we inquired into. How many thousands there are in East London to-day in similar circumstanes, brought on them by depression in trade, long illness, and numerous other reasons, many of them, alas, having previously held fairly good positions!

But Christmas of 1897 is now gone, and with it many golden opportunities lost. We are thankful to those who helped us, so that we were able to provide a good meal in their own homes at this festive season. In all 66 homes were relieved, the total number in family being 277; but had funds permitted, we could easily have given help to four times that number. A. GOODBODY.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Leeds Association held during the Week of Prayer a most successful series of daily meetings, in which it was cordially assisted by the various clergymen and ministers of the town. The general work of the Association is making great progress; the Sunday afternoon Bible-class, conducted by the secretary, Mr. Thos. Moffett, giving especial cause for thankfulness.

Mr. J. Stuart Holden (Corpus Christi College, Cambridge) sails on 17th inst. to represent the Y.M.C.A. National Council, in a tour of the mission stations in Egypt and Palestine with the object of stimulating definite Christian work amongst young men. Prayer is asked for this important work, that souls may be reached and God glorified. Mr. Holden expects to be away from England about three months. Letters may be addressed to him care of National Council, Exeter Hall, W.C.

At Hackney Y.M.C.A., on Thursday evening, January 6, a most interesting New Year's social gathering was held, on the invitation of Mr. J. E. Vanner, president. God speed was bidden to Mr. E. C. Notman (who is leaving for missionary work in Central America), to Mr. Frank Reynolds (who has been appointed to the secretaryship of the Shoreditch Association), and to Mr. Alfred N. Salmon (who is entering College for the Congo). The officers and members of the Shoreditch Association were welcomed at the gathering.

A largely-attended New Year's reception took place at the Stafford Rooms Association, on the 5th inst., under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Seagram. A pleasing feature of the proceedings was the formal introduction of Mr. A. J. H. Fletcher, the newly-appointed general secretary, who received a very cordial and hearty welcome, while Rev. H. E. Stone and others who addressed the meeting gave expression to the high hopes entertained by all interested that the work of this old-established centre would continue to flourish under Mr. Fletcher's leadership.

The Y.W.C.A.

The new headquarters of the Kingston branch will be The Limes, Knight's Park.

The annual meeting of the Teignmouth Y.W.C.A. took place last month; it was largely attended.

Over 250 members and friends met together at the annual united social of the Rutherglen Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s, Dr. Rodger presiding.

Mrs. Ratcliffe, hon. sec., presided at a meeting of the Woodbridge Association, when an interesting address on the working of the Society was given by Miss E. Garratt. A Bible-reading followed on "Jehoshaphat."

The annual conversazione of the Glasgow Association was held last week in the City Hall, which was crowded. Lord Overtoun occupied the chair, and delivered a stirring and sympathetic address. Mrs. Oatts reported the membership as 2770. There were forty branches, three of which were junior branches for girls; one was a hospital nurses' union, and one was a teachers' branch. The Association owned two institutes. At the Central Institute, 80, Bath-street, there had been a busy year. The Servants' Home received 662 for a longer or shorter period. In the East-end institute all the accommodation was taken up. There were 150 members in the Nurses' Union. One last year left for Livingstonia. Addresses were given by Rev. John McNeill, and Mr. John [illegible] ville, M.P.

Among the Churches

Church of England.

A new mission room has been opened in Platts Common.

The Archbishop of Sydney leaves for his diocese in the ss. Ormuz on the 21st inst.

Rev. S. Hutchinson, vicar of Christ Church, Penge, has been very ill, but is better.

The Islington Clerical Meeting was held on Tuesday in St. Mary's Hall, Islington Green.

Rev. J. M. Burn-Murdoch, vicar of Dunton Green, has been appointed to the vacant canonry at Canterbury.

The Record states that Lord Midleton is resigning the presidency of the National Protestant Church Union.

The Bishop of Grahamstown has sailed for South Africa to complete necessary business before his retirement.

Canon Haig Brown, Master of the Charterhouse, who has been lying seriously ill at Godalming, is improving.

The Bishop of London's Fund has received a New Year's gift of £1200, and the Bishop has himself contributed £400.

Rev. J. Wilkinson Story has been appointed vicar of Gorsley-cum-Clifford Mesne. The appointment gives great satisfaction.

Rev. W. E. Burroughs, C.M.S., will be the preacher on Monday next at the weekly service at St. Bride's, Fleet Street, arranged by the Young Men's Society.

January the 24th is the day fixed by the Church Association for "humiliation and prayer." It has also decided to take immediate action regarding alleged unauthorised proceedings of some bishops.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge will be 200 years old on March 8. In connection with this celebration the two Archbishops have issued a letter urging the claims of the Society on Churchmen.

Rev. Edward Stuart Collingwood, rector of Southwick, who recently passed away, was the author of the life of the famous divine, Bernard Gilpin, a short treatise on Columbus, a history of Dr. Cowen and the Grange School.

The vicar of Christ Church, West Hartlepool, announces that an anonymous donor has given £450 to clear the debt on the new church of St. Oswald. In the same way an anonymous donor has given £1600 to cancel the debt on St. Michael's, Smethwick.

A new College is being established in Southwark by the Bishop of Rochester. The members reside in the collegiate house, which is situate in the immediate vicinity of St. Saviour's Church, and they engage, among other things, to lead a simple life of labour for the good of the diocese. No vows are taken.

The sum of £100,000 is required to endow the proposed new bishopric of South Yorks, with Sheffield as its centre. The Archbishop of York has offered to set aside £1,000 a year from his own income for the purpose. The wealthy men of Sheffield opposed the scheme on the ground that the money could be more profitably spent on church extension in the city.

Congregational.

At Greenwich-road sixty have been admitted to membership during the past year.

At Islington Chapel, N., fourteen new members joined the church on Sunday week.

Rev. E. Thomas, of Newport, had the joy of admitting twenty-four members on Sunday week.

Centenary Church, Lancaster, reports 392 members. Thirty-two have joined during the year.

The membership at Cannon-street, Preston, is now 375. The whole work is full of activity and life.

Macfadyen Memorial Church, Chorlton-cum-Hardy (Rev. D. Walters), reports 257 members and 317 Sunday scholars.

Finsbury Park Church now numbers 841 members. The pastor, Rev. LI. Parsons, sat in his vestry on Monday week to receive thank-offerings, the result being about £140.

Rev. J. Stockwell Watts has closed his ministry at Victoria-road, Southsea, feeling that the work connected with the Liberator Relief Fund will require all his strength for several months.

A crowded farewell has been held at Salem Chapel, Bradford, in connection with the departure of Rev. S. G. Matthews, after nine years' successful service. Canon Magenness, vicar of the parish, took part.

The church at Fishponds, Bristol (Rev. J. Parker), on Sunday week, welcomed thirty new members into fellowship. The pastor preached in the evening from the motto text for the year, "Holding forth the Word of life."

Grants of money have been made by the Colonial Missionary Society towards new churches at Vryburg, Bechuanaland, and Worcester, Cape Colony; also towards evangelistic work at Kalgoorlie goldfields, West Australia.

At Albion Church, Southampton (Rev. H. J. Perkins), twenty-two new members were welcomed at the communion service on Sunday week; half of the number came from the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavour.

The special fund started at Birmingham in the autumn for the Church Aid Society has reached over £1000. Consequently every married minister's stipend in the aided counties has been raised from £80 to £90 for the past year.

At the New Year's prayer meeting, held on Tuesday week in the library of the Memorial Hall, Dr. Horton presided, and delivered an address, in which he urged that continuous efforts should be directed to the work of Church extension. To this end arrangements are being made for a series of meetings in different parts of London.

Calls.—Rev. D. J. Roberts, of Neath, to Newton, Pem.; Rev. J. C. Maclachlan, of Lanark, to Stirling; Rev. C. G. Box, to Bishop's Hall, Taunton (assistant); Rev. A. W. Allen, to Fowey.

Resignations.—Rev. R. Ridler, of Albion-road, Tunbridge Wells; Rev. S. G. Matthews, of Salem, Bradford.

Baptist.

A large chapel is being built at Birchcliffe.

Rev. J. M'Cleery has commenced his ministry at Southend.

A new chapel has been opened in Tenison-road, Cambridge.

At Walsworth-road, Hitchin, twenty-three members were admitted during last year.

Seventeen were on Sunday week admitted into fellowship at Victoria Chapel, Wandsworth-road.

Rev. R. T. Middleditch, D.D., and wife, of Brooklyn, N.Y., celebrated their golden wedding on Dec. 23.

A tablet in memory of the late Rev. Edward Stevenson has been unveiled in Baxter-gate Chapel, Loughborough, by Rev. R. F. Handford.

An interesting service was held last week at Mare-street Chapel, Hackney, in connection with the departure of Mr. Ely Notman, for missionary work in Central Africa.

Mr. Sidney Ennals (Regent's Park College) left on Saturday for work in Queenstown, Cape Colony; he hopes, however, shortly to leave for missionary service in China.

The Christian Endeavourers of Cotton-street, Poplar, have collected during the year £20 toward the support of an old member who has become a missionary in Peru.

The late Sir Henry Havelock-Allan retained close connection with the Baptist denomination to the last. His mother was a daughter of Dr. Marshman, the well-known Baptist missionary at Serampore.

Calls.—Rev. Peter Jones, of Bousfield-street, Liverpool, to Pontlottyn; Rev. W. O. Williams to Cefn Mawr, Ruabon; Mr. W. R. Chesterton, of the Pastors' College, to East Parade, Horsham; Rev. E. Harden, to Wellington; Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, of Poplar, to Major-road, Stratford.

Methodist.

The memorial stone of a new chapel has been laid at Boxby.

The wife of Rev. T. Quance, of New Brompton, is dangerously ill.

Rev. J. Morgan Jones, of Cardiff, has undertaken the editorship of the Drysorfa.

A new chapel at Kingsley-terrace, Newcastle-on-Tyne, was opened on New Year's Day.

Rev. Owen Spencer Watkins is to be Methodist chaplain to the forces ascending the Nile.

At upwards of 2,000 Primitive chapels special temperance sermons will be preached on January 30.

Rev. W. Jeffery, Chatham, has been ordered by his medical adviser to have entire rest and change of air.

The Hon. R. H. Sawyer, who has just been created C.M.G., in recognition of his services as Speaker of the Bahama House of Assembly, is a prominent member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

Messrs. Horace Marshall and Sons have again presented the Worn-out Ministers' Fund with their profits as publishers of the Methodist Times for the year 1897. The amount is £300, which brings up the total for the thirty years since our contemporary was established to £3,470.

In the autumn two members of Jubilee-drive Church, Scarborough, who wish to preserve their anonymity, offered to give £750 in reduction of the debt if the remaining £580 was raised by the end of the year. The condition having been fulfilled, they have given the promised sum, and the chapel is now free from debt.

The Manchester District Meeting of the Methodist Free Churches have fixed upon the third Sunday in January as a day of special intercession for missions, Rev. R. Swallow, M.D., president of the Conference, suggests that it should be adopted by the churches generally throughout the Connexion. He thinks a week of self-denial might well follow, so that the urgent appeals for men and means received from the missions may be the better met.

Presbyterian.

The memorial-stone of the new Erskine Church, Ryehill, Newcastle, was laid last week.

Rev. G. Johnstone Ross, of Westbourne-grove, London, has been granted two months' leave of absence in order to recruit his health.

Special services have been held at Norham in connection with the retirement of Rev. W. Haig, who has laboured there for thirty-nine years.

The new church in Briar-walk, Putney, will be opened on 16th inst. with sermons by Principal Dykes and Mr. George Clarke, the evening address by the latter forming the commencement of a fortnight's mission.

Calls.—Rev. J. D. Dowie, of Lochee, to Houghton-le-Spring; Rev. W. W. Gouldsworthy, of Liverpool, to Silverhill, Hastings; Rev. A. S. Inch, of Dundee, to Dumbarton; Rev. J. H. Jenkins, of Aberarth, to Aberporth, Card.

Fallen Asleep.

At Norwich, Mrs. W. Hunter, aged seventy-eight, surviving her husband, Alderman W. Hunter, by only a few days.—At his London residence, on 1st inst., Sir E. A. Bond, aged eighty-two, principal librarian of the British Museum, whose knighthood only appeared on the day of his death.—At North Grimston, Malton, on 2nd inst., Rev. T. Houseman, vicar of the parish.—At Kettlewell, Skipton, Rev. Dickens Haslewood, aged seventy-four, for thirty years vicar of the parish.—At Southwick, Sunderland, on 5th inst., Rev. C. S. Collingwood, aged sixty-six, for thirty-five years rector of the parish.—At Low Harrogate, Rev. G. O. Brownrigg, for twenty years vicar of St. Mary's.—At Doddington, Wooler, Rev. M. Lazenby, vicar of the parish, a sturdy evangelical and earnest servant of Christ.—At Bury St. Edmunds, on 3rd inst., Miss A. M. Goodhart, eldest daughter of the late Rev. C. J. Goodhart, of Wetherden.—At Rochdale, Rev. L. G. Bamford, aged fifty-three, Congregational minister at Preesall, near Fleetwood.—At Great Yarmouth, Mr. H. J. Blaza, superintendent of Runham Mission.—At Northampton, Mr. Samuel Skempton, for many years Sunday-school superintendent.—At Luton, Mr. Henry Smith, an earnest and useful leader in mission and S.S. work.—At Upper Clapton, Rev. S. J. Le Blond, a retired Congregational minister.—At Alton, Hants, on Jan. 1, aged eighty-six, Miss Caroline Holmes, an invalid for the greater part of her life, but a loving and tender sympathiser with and helper of Christian work.—At Marten Nest, Netherton, Mr. John Radcliffe, a Sunday-school worker for a quarter of a century.—At Lowestoft, Mr. C. Mallett, an active leader in Christian and temperance movements.—At Oakwood Hall, Stockport, Alderman E. Hallam, a leading Methodist and large mill owner, and a generous giver.—At Crouch End, very suddenly, on 31st ult., Mr. C. H. Bedells, an eminent architect, and an earnest helper in Christian work.—At Liverpool, on 1st inst., Mrs. Lynd, wife of Rev. Dr. Lynd, of Belfast.—At 33, Stock Orchard-crescent, Holloway, on 5th inst., Rev. James Forsyth, M.A., D.D., Minister of the Caledonian Church, Holloway.—In Canada, Rev. Robt. Arnold, who was born in Ireland and educated in Trinity College, Dublin, but who lived for several years as a clergyman in Canada.

Lantern Services.—Mr. and Mrs. Roff, 335, Albany-road, Camberwell, S.E., would be glad of slides of pictures or hymns for the lantern. They have had meetings at Christ Church, Haddon Hall, and many other places in S.E. London.

Egypt and Palestine.—Rev. J. W. Miller, of Leicester, who organised a successful tour to Bible lands last spring, has been requested to get together another company of ministers and their friends. He has consented to do so, and has engaged the same large comfortable steamer Creole Prince, which will sail from England about the end of March. As the party will be limited, all who wish to join it are requested to communicate soon with Rev. J. W. Miller, B.A., De Montfort-square, Leicester.

Personalia.

Dr. Clough, of the A.B.M.U. Telegu Mission, baptized over six hundred converts at Ongole last year, the fruit of evangelistic tours in the surrounding villages. Idols had previously been brought forth, and at least a cartload of them destroyed.

Dr. John Hall.—A Reuter telegram from New York, dated Jan. 10, states that this well-known Presbyterian minister, has resigned the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Church (which he has held since 1867), in order to give the congregation the opportunity of choosing a successor possessing the energy and vigour which the work of the pastorate demands.

Mrs. Ballington Booth, we learn with regret, is a patient in the Presbyterian Hospital of New York city. She is seriously ill from an aneurism of the heart, which is a rupture of the arterial wall. Her condition (says an American contemporary) is regarded by the attending physicians as extremely critical, and awakens the deepest solicitude in the breast of her husband and her host of friends in this country and in Europe.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone is now in his diocese, "but," as the Sierra Leone Messenger says, "he is alone"—a combination of losses, by death and removal, having for the time thinned the ranks of the C.M.S. workers. He proposes to erect an Industrial School at Sierra Leone, in memory of the late Prince Henry of Battenberg. With a view to the accomplishment of the work an appeal is shortly to be made to the public schools (present and past boys).

Gathered Gold.

GEMS FROM RUTHERFORD'S LETTERS.

Send a heavy heart up to Christ; it shall be welcome.

He looketh to what I desire to be, and not to what I am.

He will see to his own gold, and save that from being consumed with the fire.

What is Christ's gain is not your loss. Let not that which is his holy and wise will be your unbelieving sorrow.

JESUS.

Many names are dear, but his is dearer,
How it grows more dear as life goes on!
Many friends are near, but He is nearer,
Always what we want, and all our own.

Jesus! Jesus! let us ever say it,
Softly to ourselves as some sweet spell;
Jesus! Jesus! troubled spirit, lay it
On thy heart, and it will make thee well.

—Anon.

Notices.

Mr. W. S. Plumstead, 6, Bedford-road, Clive Vale, Hastings, desires to obtain a nomination for the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society for a poor woman over seventy, who for forty years was a Bible woman.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

MANY of our readers will have seen in the daily press the reports of an action for alleged libel against the proprietors of this paper. All we need say is that, after cross-examination of the plaintiff, the case was withdrawn without the defence being called upon, Mr. Justice Hawkins characterising it as "an illjudged action that ought never to have been brought."

The long and painful labour struggle seems drawing to its close, and every hope is entertained of a speedy and peaceful settlement. Mr. Barnes, on behalf of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, has withdrawn the forty-eight hours a week demand. It is hoped that the resumption of work may now be speedily looked for.

The observation has often been made that times of national poverty, depression, and difficulty are promotive of religion, while times of prosperity bring neglect of God. Birmingham seems to serve as an illustration at the present time of the connection between increase of trade and increase of drunkenness, at least the Chief Constable is of that opinion.

The total number of persons apprehended last year for offences in which drunkenness formed an element in the charge was 4044, as compared with 3312 in 1896, and 2821 in 1895, an increase of over 40 per cent. in the two years.

In view of such facts it is not well to complain of badness of trade. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Some very striking details are published concerning the homeless men who found refuge at Medland Hall during the past six months. Of the counties represented Lancaster heads the list with 405 ; Devon, Cornwall, and Somerset, sent 114 each ; and Norfolk 117 ; from Ireland came 556 men ; from Scotland 314 ; and from Wales 88. That all Germans who come over here are not successful is seen from the fact that Germany is highest of the twenty foreign countries, from which 446 inmates were received, her share being 172 men. Nineteen British Colonies and dependencies were represented by only 90 men. Every county in England, except Rutland, sent men to claim the home's hospitality. God has poured much blessing on this unselfish effort to "raise the fallen and cheer the faint," for which we are devoutly thankful.

The Times has been raising once more the vexed question of cruelties practised on rare and beautifully-plumaged birds in order to obtain materials for the adornment of ladies' bonnets. On December 14th the sale of the season's feathers amounted to from 70,000 to 80,000 parrots, 1700 birds of paradise, the rare rapicola, the once sacred quetzal, and the fashionable egret plumes "torn from the living mother-birds during the breeding season." The plea of ignorance under which so much of this cruel devastation has been carried on is now scarcely possible, and yet it proceeds with almost undiminished ardour. There are few passions more pitiless than vanity. It is time that social opinion should be roused effectually against so inhuman a custom. Man was born to rule, not to tyrannise over and wantonly slay his fellow-creatures. Beauty of apparel bought at the destruction of animal life is worse than a vain thing.

How will the recent development of affairs in the far East affect the cause of missions in China? This is an aspect of the problem that has not been discussed in the newspapers, but it is an all-important one to all friends of missions. Judging by recent events in Madagascar and elsewhere, it depends very much on the predominance of English influence, this being the only nation that has any missionary ardour at present. The hope of the future for China is that it should be kept freely open to the influx of Christian influences in their simplest form. The "partition" of China among the "Christian" Powers would end in a serious check to Protestant evangelical missions. Fortunately, the peril of such a partition seems lessening, and in this lies the brightest element of the present situation.

Japan, now one of the most progressive nations in the East, was not always celebrated for liberality in questions of religion. Not so very long ago she was absolutely intolerant of Christianity in any form. Her present advance, however, may be traced largely to the influence of the pure gospel of Jesus Christ as preached by Protestant missionaries. A recent issue of the Strand Magazine gives the following interesting intelligence :—

In the early part of the seventeenth century there were a million Christians in Japan, but fifty years later came a fanatical upheaval which ruined this flourishing church. More than 200 pastors suffered martyrdom. The stamping out of Christianity was a root and branch affair, assisted by spies and infamous ordeals. Notice boards ordering these measures were exhibited in the streets of Japan as late as 1870.

What a wonderful change the last quarter-of-a-century has wrought in the land !

Very gratifying news comes from the deputation sent to Madagascar by the directors of the London Missionary Society. Two important interviews have been held with General Gallieni, the French Governor, and it is reported that a modus vivendi with the authorities has been found, so much so that a lady missionary who was to be removed to Samoa will not now leave the island. We trust happier days are before those associated with this great Society, still "holding the fort" in this troubled land.

A judicial summary of the "case of the Bechuana rebels" has been forwarded to this country by Rev. John Brown, L.M.S. missionary at Taungs, who had an out-station at Phohwane, where the rebellion broke out. He characterises this as "wickedly inexcusable, and that the rebels committed cruel murders on defenceless people." At the same time he has nothing to say in defence of the action of the officers who "suppressed" the rising, nor for the juries who acquitted them, and says of the "indenture" methods of the Government, that it has "done a right thing in a wrong way." He complains that while something of the kind was needful, the Bechuanas are exiled 800 miles from their native land, in a colder and damper country than their own, that they are scattered on lonely farms, where inspection will be very difficult, and that the Government does not guarantee them return railway tickets at the end of the five years, while out of their 10s. a month wages they cannot possibly save the price of the tickets.

This means practically exile for life, with no guarantee of good treatment among people whose language the Bechuanas do not understand. It is not too late to remedy this aspect of the case, and the friends of native races should see that every effort is made to secure fairer treatment for these misguided and ignorant people.

Although the Famine Commission report has been issued, and the Mansion House Fund is closed, it appears that the ravages of the famine are not yet ended. News from Bombay, dated Jan. 6, says that as many as 142 cases in one day and 105 on another have occurred ; that the epidemic is following pretty closely the lines of the original outbreak ; and that unless things improve by the time of the forthcoming solar eclipse there will be a serious exodus and a general suspension of business. This is, indeed, a painful reminder that the poison has not spent itself.

The correspondent of The Daily News, just home from the war in India, tells a significant incident as to the value of total abstinence and purity in the army. The Scots Fusiliers were very anxious to be chosen for active service when war was declared. These men knew if they kept their numbers up to war footing their time must come. So the men bound themselves to one another not to go near the bazaar, that quarter of a cantonment whence all poison comes. This meant that they could get nothing to drink except from the canteen, but it meant lessening the roll of sick by 50 per cent., and consequently raising their chance of seeing service when the time came for one of the regiments of the main column to be relieved ; and then the general would send the strongest in numbers to take its place. So I was delighted to see that soon after I got to the base the Scots Fusiliers got their reward, and were ordered to the front, where they did yeoman service.

Much as we lament the circumstances, it must be admitted that a more convincing commentary on the evils of self-indulgence, and the reward of self-government, would be hard to find. It were worthy of a better cause.

This incident illustrates another important truth, in showing the power of an adequate motive, even though it be of a low quality. For the chance of active service, these men were able and willing to deny themselves the pleasures of self-indulgence under temptations.

which at other times were too much for them. What self-respect could not achieve the desire to fight did. It sounds like a modern version of St. Paul's words, "And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." Now it is the purpose of the Gospel first, to purify our motives, and secondly, to strengthen them. "Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible." How to transform human incentives to noble action—and substitute worthy for ignoble ideals—this is the problem which Christian faith alone can accomplish.

A missionary among the Eskimos of North Alaska pays a tribute to their faithful observance of the Lord's day, which is in striking contrast to the laxity that prevails among older Christian communities. During the short and uncertain walrus-hunting season :—

Three of the best days for walrus hunting happened to be three Sundays in June. Some of the canoes got as many as seven big walruses on one Sunday. Our boys did not seem worried because they could not hunt on Sunday.

We do not realise the extent of this cheerful adhesion to principle till we remember that "What the potato is to the Irish cotter the walrus is to the Eskimo." If the same firmness of conviction existed among Christians in this country as to the ideal of the Sunday, the petty questions that are constantly arising as to what is permissible, and what is not on that day, would be seen too contemptible to be considered. "Doubtful disputations" are a sign of an uncertain faith, and there is a good deal of that commodity abroad nowadays.

The passage that closes an article in the Contemporary Review of this month, on the "Fall of the Roman Empire," by Mr. Thomas Hodgkin, D.C.L., in which he considers the causes of national decay, is worthy to be deeply graven on the British conscience. He says :

After all, the most precious asset in our national balance-sheet is not this protectorate or that kingdom, not "ships, colonies, and commerce," but the character of the men of this nation.... The character of a nation, as the character of an individual, may change, and there are many influences at work that may tend to enervate and to degrade us, to destroy our love of truth, to poison the fountain of family life. But as long as we successfully resist these influences, and keep the fibre of our national character undissolved, I believe the world will not witness the downfall of the British Empire.

And what is at the root of this moral fibre? It is the Christian religion, first and foremost.

Dr. Mahaffy's striking book on "A Survey of Greek Civilisation," recently published by Messrs. Macmillan, contains many valuable thoughts applicable to certain dangerous tendencies of the times. It is well for us, as it would have been for the ancient Athenians, to remember that neither art nor science contains any Gospel of salvation. Of the former this brilliant author says that the pursuit of the beautiful is not yet identical with the pursuit of the good, and in some senses only with the pursuit of the true.

And of the latter :—

We must not weary of repeating (that the exquisite culture of the Greeks is a striking rebuke to the modern vulgar idolatry of physical science) in a conceited and self-conscious age, among people who imagine that the great conquests over matter in our century imply great conquests in the domain of the mind. But science is not all; science is not human life; science is not, perhaps, even the best high road to human happiness, though it may be to material comfort.

No; the only road to happiness lies in a different direction, and must be gained by simpler means. Not in knowledge, nor in environment; but in a life that is "hid with Christ in God."

Is it not time that the wordy warfare that has been carried on in the religious newspapers recently on the comparative strength of Nonconformity and Anglicanism, of Protestantism and Romanism, should be ended? Figures give but a poor index to the state of religion or the influence of a community, and though every head that is counted represents a soul, it tells little about the spiritual condition. The place of a denomination is to be determined by the amount and quality of the faith it stands for; and though it be a little company in an upper room, it may count for more in the sight of God than all the pomp of Cæsar or the population of a continent. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual," and the highest aim of all believers should be the elevating of their standard and the deepening of their trust in God. The future belongs to that body which is in closest touch with the springs of power and life.

Socialism in Belgium has driven the Romish Church into active service of the people in its own defence; priests and laymen, men and women of every rank in life, are busy working on the lines of justice instead of charity. In the towns unions and guilds are formed on the model of English trade unions, and have, in some cases, splendid premises, with restaurants, meeting halls, and committee-rooms. In the country a certain Abbé Mellaerts is founding creameries, village banks, and co-operative supply associations. The Roman Catholics are opposing the employment of married women in factories, and are advocating more stringent Factory Laws for the protection of girls. At one place there is a great hostelry, where the priests sit down to dinner side by side with the workmen from the iron foundries. The Socialist teaching penetrates to the villages by means of the army conscripts on their return from compulsory service, but at least where peasant-proprietorship obtains, the Church hopes to hold her own. Every land testifies to Rome's activity where she has enemies!

Few things are more likely to cement the cordial relations existing between the mother-country and her Australian Colonies than the entertainment given at the People's Palace last week, to 1,300 poor London children. A true friend of destitute bairns, writing under the name of "Uncle Harry," in the Adelaide Observer has ventilated this happy idea with the result chronicled. This dinner has now been given for three years, by the Ragged School Union, from funds supplied by "Uncle Harry's" little helpers. Well it is that such a spirit of compassion for their poorer fellows should thus be cultivated in the far-off Antipodes.

Reflections have been made lately by occupants of the judicial bench upon the veracity of Welsh witnesses. Whether or not the facts are as stated, there seems to be an increasing laxity, not only in the courts of law, but elsewhere, in the matter of strict truthfulness. "Out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh." The voice springs from people's desire to seem to be what they are not. In this sense it is quite correct to say :—

To thine own self be true, and it will follow as the day the night,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

If men would but be honest with and to themselves there would be much less prevalence of lying to others. In these hurry-scurry days too little time is allowed to "Let a man examine himself."

We are never wanting in our advocacy of the essential spirituality of the Christianity of Jesus Christ. His mission was to save the souls of men. But the amelioration of suffering and the healing of the body carried on by the hospital system of London and large towns are blessings for which the whole community cannot be too grateful. All classes of society are interested in the noble efforts hospital surgeons and physicians make to reduce the tale of human sorrow. Very sympathetic with hospital work was the address of the Archbishop of Canterbury in connection with the London Hospital Christian Association a few days ago, when he said :—

Those connected with the medical profession, in studying the human body and all the incidents of the life of that body, were engaged in a branch of the study of God's work of the very highest value...The study those before him were pursuing was a noble study—one tending to lift a man higher in the scale of being.

Mr. John Hawke, of the National Anti-Gambling League, 13, Victoria-street, Westminster, writes :—

The recent judgment of Lord Esher in the Court of appeal, contrary to those of the last thirty years, has thrown open the football grounds and all athletic and recreation grounds to the demoralising work of the professional bookmaker. We expect that it will be upset, as the judges were deceived by an untruthful presentation of facts, but we need funds to accomplish this, and think that if your readers understood the enormous importance of the crisis the name of our society would figure more frequently and more largely in the list of your voluntary contributions. If we are successful in getting the Betting Act into proper working, from the point of view of temperance alone we shall have achieved a great and lasting result; for at least half of the public-houses are not only betting houses, but are largely dependent upon the bookmakers, and, according to Lord Esher's judgment, a bookmaker can carry on his business in a public-house as much as he likes, unless he has the exclusive control of some part of it, which of course he never has.

Lord Kinnaird has recently joined the Council of the League, which needs all the support it can get—and deserves it, too.

The Evangelical Protestant Institution and Training Hospital, at Tottenham, was founded by the late Dr. Laseron as a distinctly Christian institution — as, indeed, the title clearly states. Its objects are : the training of Christian women as deaconesses and nurses, and the maintenance of an hospital. Since his death, however, persistent efforts have been made to eliminate the religious element, and convert the institution into what would practically be an ordinary hospital on lines endorsed by the medical and surgical staff. With this view, a scheme has been drawn up and laid before the Charity Commissioners proposing a dual control, and "the separation of the evangelizing part of the institution from the active work of the hospital."

One of the oldest subscribers to the institution has drawn up a weighty memorial to the Commissioners, setting forth grave objections to such a scheme, and proposes to call on the local public and subscribers generally to express their views on the disingenuous nature of the whole proceeding. This protest ought to find wide and hearty support, for it is obviously a matter of genuine public concern that a Christian institution should be diverted from its object, an explicit deed set aside, and buildings erected by public money, for a specific purpose, devoted to another use—however laudable in itself that use may be. Therefore, an expression of the opinion of subscribers would be helpful, and it is hoped that many interested in the subject will communicate with Colonel Skinner, at the Institution, Tottenham, N.

The Last Judgment.

III.—THE CHARACTER OF THOSE JUDGED.

BY REV. W. B. RUSSELL CALEY, M.A.

"Before Him shall be gathered all nations, and He shall separate them the one from the other, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats."—Matt. xxv. 32.

WE have considered the character of the Judge, and of the judgments. Now we must ask, Who will be there? Everyone! Yes, but we can class them. But, first of all, note, the Judge separated before He pronounced the verdict—"then" (v. 34). The sentence is first pronounced upon the righteous, but first executed upon the wicked (v. 34, 46).

There is, then, here depicted the judgment of the saint and the sinner, or, as it is elsewhere described, "the quick and the dead" (Acts x. 42; 2 Tim. iv. 1). In Rev. xx. 12 we have "the dead" only, because all conditions of earthly life are then at an end.

Let us consider them in detail.

I. The Saint.—This is the order in the parable.

The saints judged first, in order that they may sit with Christ in judgment (1 Cor. vi. 2).

It will be for them a judgment of works (1 Cor. iii. 11-15). Note.—Only if you are resting on the one foundation, Christ's finished work, will this part of the subject concern you—to "inherit" (Matt. xxv. 34) implies birthright. What, then, are the characteristics of those included in this section? They are the kind, the compassionate, the self-denying, the thoughtful and tender (vv. 35, 36). They manifest the fruits of the Spirit (cp. Gal. v. 22, 23); they display the products of the Christ-life within. Let us remember in ver. 36 it is not healing and freedom which few could effect that are commended, but sympathy, visitation, attention, which all can give.

II. The Sinner.—Here we find various classes.

(a) The sorcerers, adulterers, false swearers, oppressors, and merciless (Mal. iii. 5). Note.—God is not only Judge, but Witness. He will not need to call witnesses, for He is Witness—"a swift witness" (cp. Ps. x. 11, 12; lxxiii. 11; xciv. 7; Jer. xxix. 23). Those who "defraud the hireling" (Mal. iii. 5; cp. Deut. xxiv. 14, 15; and James v. 4).

Are there not many in our day, in this country, shareholders, employers of "sweating" labour, who may well tremble at this thought of judgment? And the root of all the oppression and sin is Divinely indicated—they "fear not Me," saith the Lord of Hosts.

(b) "Whoremongers and adulterers" (Heb. xiii. 4). Sins easily excused and extenuated now, will then stand revealed before the stainless purity of Him who is "The Holy One."

(c) "Them that know not God and that obey not the Gospel" (2 Thess. i. 8). The ignorance here denounced is either wilful or judicial. See Rom. i. 23; Eph. iv. 17-18. Is it not so with multitudes now in these days of multiplied Gospel privileges? They will have to answer for it then. Oh! how terrible will be the judgment on the despisers of means of grace!

(d) "The ungodly in word or deeds" (Jude 15; cp. Ps. lxxiii. 8, 9, 19). The profane speaker, the wicked mocker, the foolish girl, the conceited man, will all be there. "Every idle word" shall then be accounted for (Matt. xii. 36). Well may we pray the prayer of Ps. xix. 14.

Thus we shall see these various classes finally and for ever separated. There is no middle class. It is an eternal acceptance or rejection. Then we shall see in perpetual manifestation the truth we so often forget—that character makes destiny, a truth we see strikingly illustrated in Jacob's blessing of his sons in Gen. xlix.

The Love of Christ

BY MR. CHAS. COOK.

(Concluded.)

CHRIST'S love is INSEPARABLE FROM ITS OBJECT. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" No one! Broken, bleeding hearts attest the changing love of men, and separation is ofttimes the result; but Christ is indissolubly bound to his bride; as Head of the Church He is in living union with her; the mystical Christ is one, as the head is one with the human body.

In the siege of Corinth the brass of the temple and the gold of the statues so ran together—became so fused by the tremendous heat, so welded together—that there was no way, at least then, of extracting the pure gold from its baser companion. Statuettes were formed of the mixed metal, and to-day in the Louvre, the Vatican, and the British Museum it is known and valued as Corinthian brass. So are Christ and his people inseparable.

Look for a better illustration to the planets and their satellites, whether it be imperial Jupiter, or Saturn with her wondrous rings, and eight attendant moons, or even our youngest and newly discovered Vulcan. The same law that swings them in their orbits binds them to each other, and as one has said concerning the double stars, Mizar and her attendant—

Mizar and her friend are one,
The force of gravitation holds them where they are,
And binds them to each other.

They cannot change their mutual positions, they are fixed. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?"—nay! The inspired writer says: "I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

The love of Christ is eternal in its duration. "Before the mountains were settled, or the hills brought forth, while as yet the earth was not made, my delights were with the sons of men." Jeremiah speaks more distinctly and still more clearly: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love."

There never was a time when the Lord Jesus did not love his Church, nor can there ever be a moment when He will cease to love his people. Whether we peer into the future, or gaze down the dim vista into a past eternity, from everlasting to everlasting doth Jesus our Lord love his Church.

The Psalmist says, "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear Him"; and again, "As far as the east is from the west so far hath He removed our transgressions from us." Truly we may say, "Thy love to me was wonderful," and revel in the truth, "The love of Christ passeth knowledge."

He loved me ere ever I had a beginning,
Predestined that I should be brought to the light;
My wand'ring departures, my sins all foreseeing,
Yet gave his good Spirit to lead me aright.

Lastly, the love of Christ is CONSTRAINING IN ITS MOTIVE POWER. For "the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again."

We are constrained by that love when we seek to help his people on in their sanctified and heavenly pilgrimage, when speaking to them, to their edification and their profit. What is it but that love in us that prompts us to "spend and be spent" in his service of winning the unsaved ones who cross our path? What but his love can go out after the myriads of sinners, whose sins grieve us, and whose lives lead us to prayer for them?

We have been wonderfully privileged. "He loved the Church, and gave Himself for it"; and in the reciprocity of love we cry, "We love Him because He first loved us." As we live unto Him we "may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge."

Oh, matchless and mysterious love that hath earth for its arena, the saved of all ages for its object, and heaven for its chief abode, its everlasting bliss; a love so full, so rich, so free, it takes the worst of sinners in; so lasting and so changeless, it never casts out the weakest of seekers.

Infinite in its measure, suitable in its choice, perfect in its quality, unchanging in its character, inseparable from its object, eternal in its duration, and constraining in its motive power is God's wondrous love.

As Dr. Guthrie put it, "We hang the harp of David on the cross, and, Jonathan himself consenting, we will take the garland from his brow, and weaving it with the crown of thorns, put it on the head of Christ, and say, as falling before his cross before Him at his feet, 'Thy love to me was wonderful'; 'the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge.'"

In Praise of God's Love.

(For a company of believers, met together.)

O LORD, in mercy condescend
To look on all assembled here,
Whilst up to Thee our songs ascend;
And with thy love our spirits cheer.

Immortal life is in thy smile,
And blissful peace thy favour brings;
E'en heaven itself is felt, the while
We rest beneath thy gracious wings.

Thou Light of light, in whom we see
Eternal truth exposed to view,
Shine Thou in us, that we may be
Guileless, sincere, devout, and true.

Held by thine arm, no earthly power
Shall e'er our hearts from Thee remove,
E'en in affliction's trying hour
We rest securely in thy love.

If born of Thee, in Thee we live,
Thou art our life—the Living Vine,
Which nourishment to each doth give Imparting influence Divine.

Thy will is ours, thy word our choice,
Dead to the world, we live to Thee,
Purchased at so immense a price
By Him who died on Calvary.

Let all desire beside be mute,
And love to Thee alone prevail;
Be this our aim, our sole pursuit—
To know that love which ne'er shall fail.

GEIBEL.

Dr. Comandi's Work.—For the information of such as may not have gathered the fact from the notice in last week's CHRISTIAN, we are asked to state that Mrs. Leigh Bayly, Park House, Farnborough, Hants, will be glad to communicate with any friends interested in Dr. Comandi's undertaking. The address of Dr. Comandi is, 6 Via Aretina, Florence.

God's Methods with Man:

Past, Present, and Future.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

II.—THE DISPENSATION OF THE SPIRIT.

WE now come to deal with the central circle in our chart, marking the present dispensation. The thin line continued across it is golden instead of green, showing that God's chosen people are now of heavenly rather than earthly character. Above is a line which marks the present High Priestly work of Jesus Christ in the heavens, this line having its purple or priestly side toward the earth. The device of a divided tongue of fire shows that the whole dispensation is that of the Spirit.

The ten days of waiting by Christ's disciples, between his ascension and the ushering-in of the Spirit's dispensation, were for them days of weakness and of foolishness. They had no wisdom to know what to do, even if they had possessed power. They were to tarry for "the promise of the Father," until they were "endued with power from on high." The wondrous power that came upon Christ's followers, and the marvellous deeds of early apostolic days, are well known to every one of us. It is our aim to get a general view of the WHOLE DISPENSATION THUS INAUGURATED.

By his coming upon that company of men and women, the Holy Ghost formed the Church of Jesus Christ. There had been no Church prior to that coming of the Spirit. Individual Jewish disciples had gathered around the Lord during the days of his ministry; but when the Spirit fell upon them, they were united in one body. The Spirit came to create the Church, to be the bond of its life; and from that time to this, men have only entered the Church of Jesus Christ through the new creation of the Spirit. Avoiding anything like controversy, we still find it necessary to say, in passing, that no person was ever admitted to the Church of Jesus Christ by baptism or by votes of members. There can be no admission into spiritual union by that which is purely material. We admit persons into church fellowship, not in order that they may become members of the Church of Christ, but because they are already such. For the sake of a very important distinction, I repeat that by the coming of the Spirit the Church was formed; and that same Spirit has, from that day to this, admitted into the Church of Jesus Christ such souls as, convinced by Himself, have believed upon Christ and have, therefore, been born again of the Spirit. So began the dispensation in which we live.

What is the difference between the Spirit's relation to this present dispensation and to former ones? The Spirit had direct dealings with every dispensation that has passed away. "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth" (Psa. xxxiii. 6). Breath there should have a capital B, as referring to the Holy Spirit; and in those words we have the union of God the Father with the Word of God (the Logos of which we spoke recently) and the Spirit of God in creation.

"And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man" (Gen. vi. 3). Sermons have been preached from this passage to prove that God now withdraws his Spirit from living men; but in its setting it plainly refers, some 120 years before the event, to the time when judgment should set in by the flood. But I quote it to show that in the old dispensation God dealt with man by his Spirit for special reasons and on particular occasions.

"And the Lord came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the Spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders; and it came to pass that when the Spirit rested upon them, they prophesied." (Num. xi. 25.) The Authorised Version adds "and did not cease"; but the Revised Version makes an important alteration, "they did so no more." The elders prophesied when the Spirit was upon them; and when it was not, they could not do so. We read further that when Eldad and Medad, who were not ordained, began prophesying, the men "in orders" had a fearful time! Moses, on complaint thereof, says, "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets." Forgive the use of a word to which I particularly object; but the Spirit upon the laity made them prophets. It is high time that we between clergy or ministers and "the laity." The Spirit came, of old, that men, in or out of orders as God chose, should become his messengers to the age in which they lived.

Exodus xxxi. 1-5, "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, See, I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah: and I have filled him with the Spirit of God." What for? "In wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise cunning works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship." The anointing of the Spirit to be a brassworker, carpenter, stonecutter, and everything else! Would to God we believed it, in this day, more than we do. Such illustrations might be multiplied, and they form

A MOST INTERESTING STUDY.

Under the old dispensation the Spirit was given for specific work or delivery of special messages, and was then withdrawn; but the men of those days looked for something further in connection with the Holy Visitor. Here is a promise made to them (Joel ii. 28, 29), "And it shall come to pass afterward that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit." That is a supreme instance, but not the only one, of a promise made to the old dispensation. Jer. xxxi. and the wondrous chapters toward the close of Ezekiel's prophecy show how men of old waited, not only for the coming Messiah, but for the giving of the Holy Ghost as never before.

From creation, through the reign of conscience, on to the period of law, the Spirit has worked among men, convincing of sin, revealing the will of God, fitting for specific service to be rendered unto God, but that was all. Pentecost, however, was a fulfilment of that prophecy in Joel, as Peter declares in Acts ii. The Holy Spirit from thence is no longer a visitor, but a resident in the Church. He comes occasionally upon men no more, but is poured, in all the plenitude and fulness of his own personality, upon the whole earth. That event was equal in importance to the Incarnation itself, was closely allied to it, and was the direct consequence of it. Bring together those remarkable statements: "The Word was made flesh"; "I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh." Now that Divinity has come to humanity, and humanity, in the person of the incarnate Logos, is linked to Divinity—the Spirit of God can be poured out upon all flesh. The two events are so closely joined in essence that neither can be correctly understood apart from the other.

The Holy Spirit is to-day the Revealer and the Administrator of the affairs of the absent King, whom the world still rejects. The fact that the earth has cast Him out abides unto this time; but God, in grace, has turned the wrath of man into that which praises Him, taking hold of human failure and transforming it into Divine victory. The hidden One is being made real to all peoples in this generation. How? By the Spirit, the Administrator of the King, in his absence. He makes Christ, and not Himself, the consciousness of the believer. His one work is to realise within the character of those who are born again all Jesus is, by bringing them under the blessed rule of the King Himself.

There can be no better treatise on the Spirit than the very words of the Master Himself in John xiv.—xvi. The word given as "Comforter" is, however, one of the untranslateable terms of Scripture. It is Comforter, Intercessor, Advocate, all in one, and infinitely more. It is the word which reveals the work of the Spirit in the life of the believer.

The work of Jesus Christ has a two-fold aspect (1 Tim. iv. 10); He is "the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe." If, therefore, the Spirit of God comes to take up Christ's work, and to apply it, the same double office will characterise that Spirit's operations; and it is because we have lost sight of this truth that some have fallen away from the hope of the Church—the return of our Lord Himself.

First, there is the work of the Spirit in the Church; then his work upon all flesh, as illustrated in Acts ii. The waiting disciples were equipped for service by that inflow of the Spirit which created the Church. But Peter's words to the crowd were in power and demonstration of the Spirit; and that still marks

THE TRUE SPHERE OF PREACHING.

How some of us labour to make the Gospel plain; and what an endless pity it is that we do not leave such demonstration to the Holy Ghost!

Looking closer at the two-fold nature of the Spirit's sphere, John xvi. 13-14, shows us that all we can possibly know concerning the beauty of Christ's character, the tenderness of his love, and the majesty of his person, is taught of the Spirit. The work of the Spirit is to make Christ, to the believing heart—

> A living, bright reality,
> More dear, more intimately nigh
> Than any other earthly tie.

Then is it that a man's whole being goes down before the Lordship thus revealed.

But verses 8-11 give a larger outlook upon the Spirit's work in convincing the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment. Why will men wrongly add the words "to come"? Judgment has passed upon the prince of this world, and the Spirit's work in the world, as distinct from the Church, is that of bringing men into living contact with Christ. Sin, in this dispensation of the Spirit, is, in essence, refusal to believe in Jesus. It is unbelief; not merely a refusal to accept intelligently certain statements, but the refusal to surrender the whole being to Christ. The Spirit points to the seed of the woman, who has bruised the serpent's head; and He has been so pointing all through the centuries. Judgment has now been accomplished by the Cross; therefore the pardoned sinner may, through Christ, enter freely into the region of purity, power, and blessing.

In this dispensation the Spirit of God is selecting or electing members of the Church of Christ; but He is doing infinitely more. In the believer He is revealing Christ; in the world at large He prepares for the coming of the King, who, though He be hidden from mortal eyes, is still here in heart and sympathy. As the High Priest of our profession, He bears amid the highest heavens his wounded humanity in the presence of God for us—a great fact which the Holy Spirit makes real in the believer's experience. By his own working and by his inspired testimony through the Church, the Spirit is also preparing in every land and place for the coming of the King.

Nations are getting ready for Christ. For example, the messengers of the Cross have influenced the great teaching centres of India, where thousands are flinging away false religions. Alas! that many of such enlightened souls should be drifting into agnosticism and atheism. We can almost hear the footfall of the King as He comes to bring in all that lies beyond in the wondrous dispensation which is to succeed this present one. Look where you will, and you find triumphs of the Cross by the power of the Spirit's work, and there are signs of readiness on every hand for the dawn of the day of God and the advent of the King.

Let us remember, then, that the two-fold work of the Spirit is to make Jesus real to this age. He does this, in the Church, by revealing Christ increasingly, growingly, progressively to believers, that they may be transformed into his likeness. He does it in the world, by preparing everywhere for the return of the King Himself.

The Anti-Opium Movement.

THE Representative Board of Anti-Opium organisations in this country, taking the opportunity of the presence in England of two such missionaries of weight and experience as Archdeacon Wolfe and Rev. Arnold Foster, held on Wednesday week a breakfast meeting at the Cannon-street Hotel. The invitation was largely responded to; the addresses were of a high order, intensely practical, clear, and to the point. It was felt that the great cause had made a distinct advance, and that the whole movement, notwithstanding the temporary effect of the recent report, had received a fresh impulse, and there is full hope that in the ensuing Session the opium question will be definitely raised in the House of Commons. Important letters were read from influential men, such as General Sir Arthur Cotton, who said that thirty-five years' experience had convinced him of the deplorable results of the opium vice.

Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., who presided, spoke of his close association with China, through his brothers, Bishop Moule and Archdeacon Moule, and other experienced missionaries having intimate acquaintance with the people of China. In this way he was able to say emphatically that the habit of opium smoking in that vast country was condemned by every representative of a Christian Church as well as by the victims of the vice itself, who were too weak to resist the habit. Whatever may be said as to casual circumstances, the main phenomena of opium smoking in China were an effect the causes of which lay at the door of England, for the fact that opium-smoking prevailed so universally in China was owing originally to the importation of the drug from India.

Rev. E. O. WILLIAMS read the subjoined letter, addressed to Mr. Broomhall, the secretary of the Representative Board, by Archdeacon Wolfe:—

Though I cannot be present at your meeting, I am in full sympathy with the object it has in view—viz., the repression of the opium vice in China. What I have said in the past I can now only reiterate more emphatically, if possible, and under stronger convictions than ever, viz., that this habit of opium indulgence among the Chinese is a terrible and most debasing evil, causing untold misery and absolute ruin to hundred and hundreds of thousands among all classes, and is one of the greatest hindrances to the cause of Christianity and the progress of Christian missions in that country. That this is the case in that part of China, at least with which I have been intimately acquainted during the last thirty-six years, cannot be denied, I am persuaded, by anyone who has made himself acquainted with the state of the country and the real condition of the people in reference to this dreadful and degrading habit.

This entire question of the opium traffic is one which presses very hard upon our English missionaries. I have reason to know, from most unhappy experience, that the connection of our English Government with the Indian opium trade is the one great stumbling-block in the way of friendly intercourse and good feeling on the part of the gentry and literati towards the English missionaries in Fukien. The hostile and unfriendly feeling of these classes has been expressed again and again towards English missionaries, not only in hostile words, but also in hostile deeds, and British missionaries have been repeatedly reproached by them while preaching in public with the cry, "Oh, they have come from the country that sends us the opium; don't listen to them!"

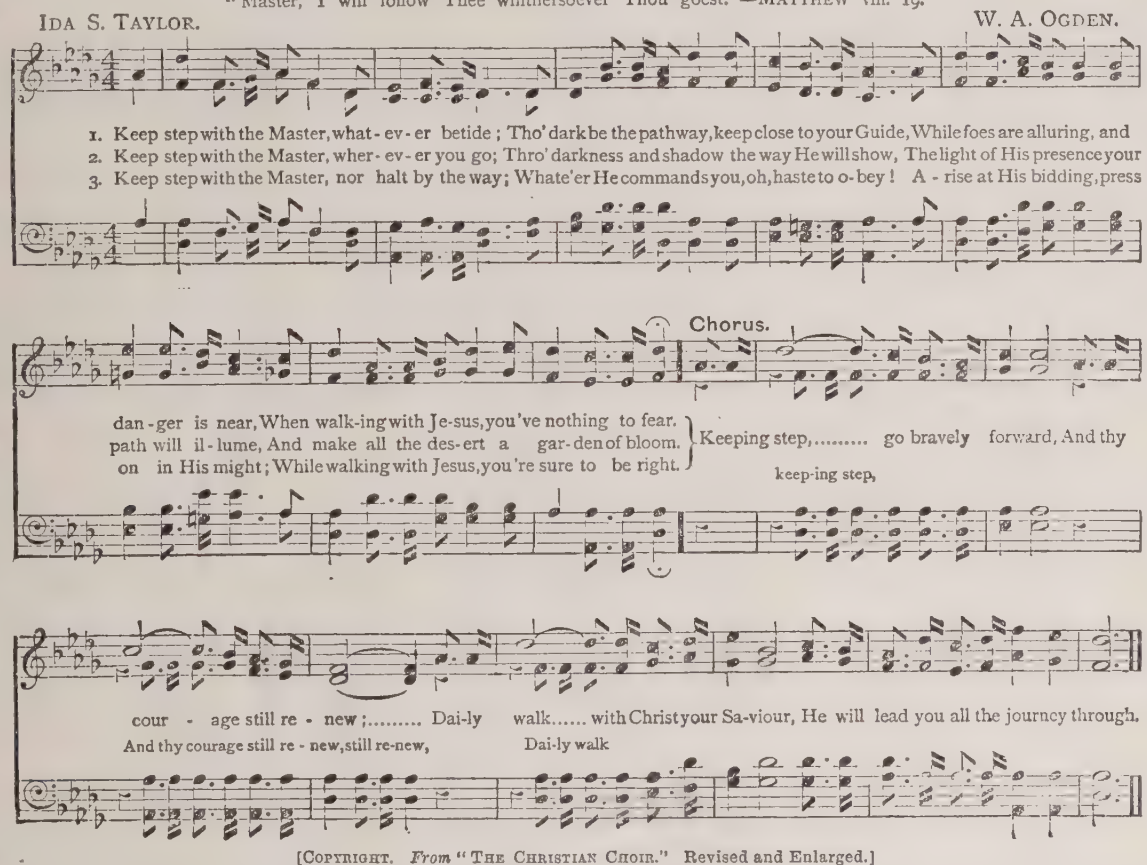
The amazing indifference, as it appears to me, having only recently returned from China, which prevails here at home among Christian people generally with reference to the terrible evil which this opium is inflicting upon the Chinese people, and for which this country is mainly responsible, is most alarming and disheartening. And I cannot but express my belief that the recent Report of the Opium Commission to India is largely responsible for this deplorable state of feeling in the country. I cannot but think that it has misled the public mind as to the real state of the case. Most certainly is this true with reference to China. If the Commission had visited China, as I think in all fairness it ought to have done, and fully carried out its inquiries there as to the condition of things with reference to the opium, I have very little doubt the result would have been entirely different.

It appears to me now, looking at the present condition of things, and having experienced the failure of all our efforts in the past to awaken the conscience of our rulers or of our countrymen generally as to the immorality and injustice of this opium question, that we should betake ourselves now more to earnest prayer as our surest and, indeed, our strongest resource. We should cry, especially, I think, at this present crisis, mightily unto God on behalf of our country, harrassed as it is almost at every point, that God would open the eyes of our rulers and of the whole nation to consider well and see if there be not a cause for all this trouble, before it be too late, and that while the judgments of the Lord are abroad upon our land the nation may learn righteousness, especially with reference to this opium business. JOHN R. WOLFE, C.M.S.

Mr. Williams added that in the three western provinces, Si chu'an, where he had laboured, Kwei chau, and Yunnan, there had been within the last forty or fifty years an immense increase in the growth of the poppy. So vast had this been, that thousands of acres, which, fifty years ago, were laid with rice and other cereals, are now devoted to the cultivation of the poppy. There had been a correspondingly immense increase in opium-smoking in those provinces during the last fifty years. In fact, in vast districts where, thirty or forty years ago, there were practically no smokers, seven out of every ten men are now opium-smokers. The physical degeneration and demoralisation that followed was enormous. He trusted the result of this meeting will be that the conscience of Christian England will be aroused to wipe out this blot on our beloved country.

Rev. ARNOLD FOSTER, who has laboured twenty-six years in China, devoted himself to a searching examination of the report of the Opium Commission, to which he confessed he had given long and serious study. The Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the opium question, as regards India—China not being mentioned in the reference, and this has tinged the whole report, which is really an elaborate defence of the East India Company and the Government of India in their dealings with the opium trade. With the exception of Mr. H. J. Wilson, the Commissioners were by no means impartial. Nor did the Commission visit China. Again, the memorials of missionaries condemnatory of the opium traffic were either wholly disregarded or made light of, while stress was laid upon every bit of evidence that could be construed to palliate or excuse the traffic. For example, two medical men gave evidence; one had thirty years' experience in an hospital in the heart of Shanghai; the other has been but a few years in China, has no hospital and has little to do with the Chinese people; yet, because the latter favours the Governmental view, his evidence is enlarged upon, whilst the older and vastly more experienced man is passed over. The Commissioners, with one exception, showed that instead of being impartial judges they were simply strong advocates.

In view of all this, it may be asked, what are we to do? The churches must come to the front. I will publish these facts and ask the various churches to appoint a united committee to examine the whole question, and insist that the mode in which the Commissioners conducted their inquiry, the nature of the evidence sought and adduced, and the findings of the Commissioners should be investigated by, say, three of Her Majesty's judges, who should be asked to pronounce whether the Commission and its report were worthy of any confidence.



Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE moved the following resolution:—"That this meeting, after hearing statements as to the effect of the opium habit in China from trustworthy Englishmen, long resident there and intimately versed in the social life of its people, is profoundly moved by the vast extent of the vice disclosed and the irresistible evidence of the moral and physical ruin which ever dogs its footsteps. It is clear that the growth of the poppy is spreading more and more throughout the empire, and that the home supplies are gradually excluding Indian opium. We submit that these facts only enhance the responsibility of our country. By fostering and enforcing the opium trade for the sake of revenue Great Britain has been the main factor in breaking down such barriers as formerly existed in China against the spread of this fatal vice. We call on our countrymen, before it is too late, to stop this unrighteous and demoralising traffic, and to let their influence at last tell in favour of justice and goodwill to this ancient and afflicted people." This was seconded by Mr. W. B. SLOAN (C.I.M.), and carried unanimously.

Mr. JOSHUA ROWNTREE and Dr. CHALMERS moved and seconded, "That the wrong done to the people of China by the British opium traffic should be again brought before the House of Commons, and that every effort should be made to end this immoral trade."

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, January 23.

"Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah?"—Zech. v. 10.

THE first vision of this chapter denounces those who had sinned against the first and second tables of the law; the record of their sin would be written in unmistakable syllables, and would consume the houses of evil-doers with dry-rot (4). But the second vision is most consolatory. A woman who symbolises the wickedness of the land is thrust into an immense ephah, and covered with a leaden weight, and then is borne away from the Holy Land by two women in whose wings are strength and speed. Its destination was Babylon; thence the principal forms of iniquity, with which the chosen people were cursed, had come, and thither would they return. What encouragement to every pious Jew to know that the wickedness which had brought God's judgments on the land was removed beyond recall.

This choice is presented to everyone of us:—If we refuse to confess our sin it eats out our heart and life, as white ants do the fibre of wood. If, on the other hand, we confess, and seek the grace of the Holy Spirit, our iniquity will be purged, and the power of sin broken. With swift and sure salvation will God come to our relief, and the chains that bind shall drop from off us. However many the dark transgressions of the past, when sought for, they cannot be found; and whatever be the temptation without, and the frailty within, we are learning to abhor that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good.

MONDAY, January 24.

"Behold the man, whose name is the Branch, and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord."—Zech. vi. 12.

Three men came from Babylon, where many Jews remained, even after the return under Ezra and Nehemiah; they brought presents to the new-founded temple.

Of the gold and silver a double crown was made, and placed on Joshua's head; one as emblem of the priest, the other as king, signifying the final gathering of Israel's outcasts to the Messiah, who would then be recognised as their true king and priest.

In the Jewish commonwealth it was without precedent for the same man to be both king and priest, but as the time drew nearer the advent of the Lord, revelation concerning his marvellous Person grew in clearness, and the majestic combination of glory in his character became apparent. As Branch, He is a scion of David's ancient stock; and through his far-reaching boughs the sap of the eternal purpose breaks into flower and fruit. He sprouted out from his place, Bethlehem, as predicted, and as befitted one of David's line. He would begin to build the Temple of the Lord, laying its foundations in the blood of his cross, and bringing forth its top stone in his second advent; its stones being quarried not in Lebanon, but from the hearts of his people. That temple grows towards completion, and the most solemn thing for each of us is to know whether we have been built into its fabric, or left as those huge boulders at Baalbec, which were shaped for the temple but never carried beyond the quarry. Christ is Priest and King, after the order of Melchisedec.

TUESDAY, January 25.

"When ye fasted and wept in the fifth and seventh month, even these seventy years, did ye at all fast unto Me, even unto Me?"—Zech. vii. 5.

The men at Bethel asked this question of the priests; it was answered by the prophet. The fast of the fifth month was in memory of the fall of Jerusalem; that of the seventh commemorated the murder of Gedaliah, when the last blow was struck at Jewish independence. The question was: should the restored Jews continue these fasts now that the events they recalled were forgotten in the abounding joy of the new state. It was a question of rite and ceremony, and outward observance, and the prophet answers in effect: "Ye take much trouble and thought about the observance of a man-constituted religious rite; would that you were equally solicitous to practise those virtues, and denounce the vices which were the theme of so many expostulations and warnings of the older prophets.

God invariably demands a religion which does not consist in outward rites and ceremonies, but is inward and spiritual; and demands true judgment, the showing of mercy and compassion, the forsaking of oppression and evil imaginings. This is unpalatable enough to the natural man, who pulls away his shoulder and stops his ears. On the general question, one would advise that there is no need to observe the sad anniversaries of our sins and their accompanying punishment, if once we are assured of God's free forgiveness. When He forgives and restores, the need for dwelling on the bitter past is over.

WEDNESDAY, January 26.

"If it be marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of the peoples in those days, should it be marvellous in my eyes, saith the Lord?"—Zech. viii. 6.

Marvellous! Marvellous!! Probably there is no adjective more frequently on our lips than this, in these wonderful years when we are reaping the harvests of centuries of patient sowing, and when any morning the newspapers may announce a discovery which will revolutionise our methods of illumination, or locomotion, or military organisation.

The other day we were told that the philosopher's stone was found at last; and that silver can be transformed into gold; to-morrow we may rub our eyes at the marvellous news that the North Pole has been reached. Men resemble the little child led into a toy-shop, or listening to a lecture at the Royal Institute, with open-eyed wonder and open-mouth exclamation.

But none of these things are wonderful to God; they are but the unravelling of his thoughts, the discovery of his secrets! They are only marvellous to us because we are as yet in the baby stage, waking up to know a little of what a wonderful God He is.

But there are more wonderful things than these. That rebels should be forgiven, prodigals restored, the sons of darkness changed into children of light, Satan driven out before the stronger than he, the unclean heart made the pure temple of the holy God. Talk they of marvels in the natural world! These pale before the star of Bethlehem, the sunset of Calvary, and the radiance of the Resurrection morning. And we shall see greater things than these when we follow on to know through unending ages the infinite glory of God.

THURSDAY, January 27.

"As for thee also, because of the blood of thy covenant, I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water."—Zech. ix. 11.

The state of the Jews in Palestine is presented under the figure of prisoners, shut up, as Joseph of old, in disused water-pits, from which the water had been drawn off, leaving a miry swamp behind. Jeremiah sank in one of these, almost to suffocation. But all the while they might reasonably be prisoners of hope, not of despair; of hope because the seventy years had expired; of hope, because the purpose of their captivity had been achieved; of hope, because God had entered into covenant with their fathers, and had ratified it with blood. And, because of this, they would go forth out of the pit.

These words will probably be read by many other prisoners; prisoners of circumstance; prisoners in the hands of strong oppressors; prisoners in the utmost extremity. They fear every day because of the fury of the oppressor, as though he were ready to destroy. Behold, I bring to such of these as are united with the Son of God good tidings of great joy. God will ever be mindful of his covenant. You may forget, or be utterly unworthy of his continued favour; you may have involved yourself in difficulties of your own making, the consequences of your own sin; but you must never forget that you are bound to God by the blood of an everlasting covenant. In the depth of your despair you may appropriate the Psalmist's words, "Remember the covenant!" And He who brought again from the dead, the Lord Jesus, the Great Shepherd, will raise you from the dark dungeon, and make you sit with princes. He will certainly chasten, but He will assuredly redeem.

FRIDAY, January 28.

"They shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and I will hear them."—Zech. x. 6.

God distinguishes, in these words, between the civil rulers of the people, called shepherds, and the people, his flock. He was determined to interpose on the behalf of his people, and to redeem them from the troubles in which their rulers had involved them. The distinct mention of Judah and Israel foreshadows a more complete restoration than that which had brought them from Babylon, in which Judah alone, with a few other Israelites from the other tribes, participated. This restoration is yet future, but when it comes it will be so complete that the long history of the centuries shall be obliterated, and both the house of Judah and the house of Joseph will be as though they had never been cast off.

Hast thou been cast away from the hand of God, not as far as thy salvation is concerned, but for his purposes of service? Be sure to put away your sin. Ask for rain in the time of the latter rain—the gracious rain of the Holy Spirit; put away the false ideals which you have followed, as Israel false gods; then He will bring you again. Your sins shall be remembered no more—the deep gulf of separation shall be bridged, the years devoured by the locust shall be restored; the dead past shall bury its dead: the river of the water of life will flow again into the channels which once it filled. God not only forgives, but obliterates the remembrance of past failure and sin, and treats his prodigals as though they had never gone astray.

SATURDAY, January 29.

"And I took unto me two staves, the one I called Beauty, and the other I called Bands; and I fed the flock."—Zech. xi. 7.

The prophet exercised his office amongst the poor of the land. They gave heed unto him (11), and recognised that he spoke the word of the Lord. It always has been so, and such people make the best flock. Those ministers are not always to be congratulated, to whose church doors carriages roll up, and whose pews are filled with glittering diamonds and splendid dresses.

One day, the prophet appeared amongst these humble folk with two staves: Beauty, to represent the possible excellence of the people whom God loved; Bands, to denote the unity by which the entire nation should have been bound in one. These twain he broke to show that God would be compelled to choose another people to set forth his praise, and that the unity of Israel was like a wreath of morning mist, when dissipated by wind or sun. As for the people generally they made a collection amongst them in recognition of his pastoral care; but this amounted only to the price of a good bond-servant (Ex. xxi. 31). What a miserable return for all the prophet's tears and words.

All this was symbolical of our Lord. He longs for the beauty and unity of his Church. But, alas! how bitterly He has been disappointed! How hopelessly He has snapped his staves! How ungraciously his reward has been meted out to Him! (Matt. xxvi. 15). The historical counterpart of this scene was afforded in his closing discourses and final betrayal; and its spiritual counterpart is being enacted day by day. O my soul! hast thou missed the beauty and unity He chose for thee? Hast thou esteemed his service of small account? Art thou like the Pharisees, that use the price of blood for the Potter's Field? (Matt. xxviii. 6, 7, 10). Repent thee, lest the Good Shepherd be compelled to adopt severer methods, and pass thee through the refining fires.

Child-life in Heathen Lands.

YOU cannot tell how deeply interested I am in God's work in heathen countries, and especially his work amongst boys and girls in those lands. I think nothing would give me much greater joy than to know that all the readers of this Young People's page intended to give more thought and more prayer to foreign missions this year than ever before. I should like very much to help you to wider sympathy with our kind Christ's great love for the world—of course, He loves all heathen children as well as those in bright, happy homes like yours. But they do not know—millions of them—how much Jesus loves them, as you do.

I wonder whether it would help you think and work more, and devote larger sums out of your pocket money to God's work abroad if I told you two or three things about some heathen children? The other day I was looking over some missionary literature, and I found several things about girls and boys in foreign lands that I thought you would like to know. Here is one:—

"The brown-skinned, black-haired, dark-eyed boys and girls of the central province of Madagascar differ greatly from their English brothers and sisters. They are very intelligent, fond of study, and, under a good teacher, work well, indulging in few of the tricks so natural to an English schoolboy.

"Malagasy children have very few healthy run-about games—no hoops, or cricket, or football, nor do they care to exert themselves much to play. The girls sit quietly, throwing up stones, which they catch in succession in a clever way, or they patiently spend hours in rubbing down the rough edges of broken crockery, the little bits thus prepared being looked upon as great treasures, and the girls 'pretend' they are men and women and all sorts of things; in fact, they have to take the place of dolls and other toys. Some girls make queer little rag dolls, and no prize is so valued as a large, brightly-dressed china doll, but those are much too precious to be played with. They are either wrapped up carefully and kept in a box to be exhibited occasionally, or a string is tied round poor dolly's waist, and she is hung up on the wall as an ornament.

"Boys have marbles, tops, kites, and a few toys, and play some rougher games, pretending to be fierce oxen and so on. One of their favourite amusements is making chameleons, large spiders, crickets, and other creatures to fight, and if they cannot get anything alive to fight they will make toy oxen out of the large kernel of the mango seed with prickly-pear thorns for horns and legs, and have imaginary fights with these." I need not tell you how cruel such sport is.

Shall I tell you also something about Hindu girls? Perhaps you will hardly believe it, "that girls are not wanted in Hindu homes."

A mother in India who has only sons is looked upon as a special favourite of the gods, whilst one who has daughters only is despised; and it is the law of the land that, if within seven years after marriage a wife has no son, the husband may put her away and marry another; for it is supposed that the gods are angry with her, though what she has done to offend them she has no idea.

The reason why sons are welcome whilst daughters are not is easy of explanation. A boy can earn money, and, as after his marriage, he will live at home, and give his salary to his father, the more sons there are in a family the greater the income. But as the girls cannot work away from home, they are an expense rather than a profit. Boys can also perform religious services after a father's death by which his ancestors' happiness in heaven is secured. A girl cannot do this.

As Hindu girls marry early, often, indeed, when they are babies, and generally when little more than babies, it happens that a large number of them are robbed by death of their husbands. In fact, there are no less than twenty millions in this sad condition, many of whom are under twelve years of age.

Hindu girls and boys, you see, have by no means so joyous a young life as you have. And it is all owing to this: that they do not know how much God is interested in them. He gave Jesus to die for them as well as for you. And you are co-workers with God in bringing these dusky children really to trust and serve Him when you do your best to send the Gospel to them. I hope I may trust you to do your very best to assist missionaries in foreign lands this year! God does not ask for more than your very best. But he does expect that. Is it not a supreme honour for God to make even a child who helps on his work in the world a co-worker with Himself? This honour must be yours.

JOSEPH WOODHOUSE.

Finished and Folded up.

"THERE, that is finished and folded up, and I am heartily glad!" said Bertha, as she took off her little thimble, and laid on the table a pretty blue muslin dress on which she had had been busy for several days.

"Is it well done, too?" asked practical Aunt Mabel.

"Pretty well done for me, auntie; mother says that I improve in dressmaking."

"That is encouraging. Now, Bertha, do you know that something else of yours also is finished and folded up this evening?"

"What else can it be, Aunt? This is the only piece of work that I have had to do this week, unless it is that tidy. I do not expect to see the end of that for six weeks."

"Still you have finished and folded up something more important than your tidy, or your dress even—something which will not be unfolded again for ages, perhaps; and yet, you will see it again, with every line and fold. Your day's history is done and gone from your keeping. You may remodel the dress, if it does not please you: but you can not change one jot or tittle of the day's record."

"What has the record been?" asked Bertha of her own heart, as she thoughtfully laid away the blue muslin. As, little by little, she tried to go over the hours, there was much that she would gladly have changed if she could.

"I wish that I had spoken pleasantly to Ned when he wanted me to help him with his flag. It would only have taken me a minute or two; and he was first sad and vexed with my crossness. It is too bad! I left mother to do all the baking alone, and did not even prepare the cherries for her in my haste to finish my dress." A sight of the little Bible, whose clasp had been closed all day, suggested still more reproachful thoughts. "No wonder I have had such a poor day's record, when I began it in too much haste for prayer, or reading a verse even."—Words of Life.

Our Prize Competition.

THIS week I give the results of our Ninth Quarterly Prize Competition, which will be a source of mingled joy and sorrow to my young friends, as all the previous ones have been. Many parents will have to "listen to a tale of woe," I am afraid, from those who have failed; while I suppose the house will be hardly big enough to hold those who have come off victorious.

But I have got a "tale of woe," too; and that is, that on the whole, especially in the second division, the papers have not been nearly so well done as usual. Last quarter I told you the competition was the best done as yet. That made some of you a little too vain and not sufficiently careful. So I will give you a text which may be useful for you to remember, not only in prize competitions, but in all sorts of ways through life. It is in Proverbs xvi. 18. Those in Divisions III. and IV can learn it in full; those in I. and II. will remember it better in this shorter form—

"PRIDE...GOETH BEFORE A FALL"!

FIRST PRIZES.

DIVISION I.—Dorothy Gertrude Hewer, Agnes Fullarton, Gladys Mary Phipps, John Wm. Wheeler, Pringle Wilson.

DIVISION II.—Dorothy Mary Davies, Evelyn Lowndes Moir, Marion Brock Richards.

Bible Searcher (No. 107).

1. What idol-god did Israel's hosts entreat? (Judges ii.)
2. And who the prophet, used in his defeat? (1 Kings xviii.)
3. What place was that selected by the king? (1 Kings vii.)
4. And who the artisan, from thence to bring? (1 Kings vii.)
5. Who chose to live in Jordan's fruitful plain? (Gen. xiii.)
6. Please name the vale where fell the giant, slain. (1 Sam. xvii.)
7. Who was the captain hung on frame of wood? (Est.)
8. And who the scribe that on a pulpit stood? (Neh. viii.)
9. Then name the patriarch, whose recorded age Exceeds all others in the sacred page.

The primal letters of the names will spell a town in Judah; David knew it well.

Give chapter and verse to each answer. Children under TEN any four, under THIRTEEN any eight, over THIRTEEN the whole, and name three incidents which occurred in or near the town which are recorded in the Old Testament.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (106).

Personal.

Margaret Hogg.—Many thanks for your little parcel. The needlecases are very pretty and useful. Eva Edmundson.—I notice the great improvement in your writing this week. Dorothy Hewer.—I am very sorry to hear of Evelyn's illness, and do feel for you in being separated from her. Soon I hope to hear she is better. Winifred Harvey.—You have not understood the questions this week. At any time you may ask someone to explain them to you. Have counted you correct, as your answers were right according to the way you read the questions. J. A. Field.—I was surprised to find you had left Sydney. I, too, hope you will succeed as you wish.

I am very glad to see fresh names this week, and warmly welcome all new members of the Bible Searcher.

I have received a box of pincushions and blotters this week, and am sending them on for the soldiers.

Uncle Tom.

Mrs. Hilton's Cre[illegible].—On Thursday the annual social gathering of the children took place. The toys from Truth and friends were distributed by Wilfrid Hilton, the late Mrs. Hilton's grandson. A few days ago some of Dr. Barnardo's people observed smoke rising from the roof of the infirmary, and gave the alarm, when it was found that an iron smoke-pipe had become heated, and set fire to a beam of wood. The prompt action of some of Dr. Barnardo's boys extinguished the fire, and probably prevented a catastrophy.

From Other Lands

Saved in the Sierras.

By Dr. Harry Guinness.

"Would you care to look at this, sir?" The powerful engine-driver of the Sierra line handed me a letter as he spoke. We were standing together on the platform of a small Peruvian station where our train inland from Callao to Lima had paused on its ascent to the mountainous Andes region.

The engine-driver was a splendid man, who had attended our Callao meetings, and come very near the point of decision for Christ. Breaking the envelope with interest, I discovered a special permit he had obtained for me to ride on the engine, and readily availed myself of this coveted privilege, especially as it brought me into close contact with him.

The run that followed was a marvellous experience. Nothing that I have seen before, including the Mont Cenis, the St. Gothard and the zigzag railway of the Blue Mountains of New South Wales, can compare to the audacity of engineering skill, and the blood-curdling effects produced by a climb on the Peruvian line among the lonely Andes solitudes. Often it seemed as if the train must surely dash over the precipice before us, when we neared a new curve, only to swing round it, and rush along the edge of some enormous steep that plunged into the valley below, where the rushing Rimac dashes its foaming course amongst craig and boulder towards the sea. Every now and then we plunged into a tunnel, and the mountain peaks, with glorious sunshine, were exchanged for an awful blackness, in which the blazing furnace and flying sparks dazzled the eyes, while the ceaseless roar of the train made the loudest shout absolutely inaudible. I clung to an iron support on the vibrating iron steed, and felt what one cannot describe. Capital opportunities occurred for conversation, and I was deeply grateful for such a chance to present the necessity for personal decision.

About eight kilometres before arriving at Matucana, the train suddenly pulled up, and a crowd of excited people jumped out to examine what was wrong. We found that one of the connecting iron rods, which bind the rails together, was torn up and had struck the carriages underneath, so as to alarm the conductor and

BRING THE TRAIN TO A PAUSE.

At the time we were travelling up an incline of about five feet in one hundred, at twenty miles an hour. When the trifling nature of the accident was known we jumped on board again. On arrival at the station, however, what was our dismay to see that one of the wheels of the coal tender had smashed off both from the axle and the bearings, and was lying partially on its side jammed under the tender. It was evident that the train would be unable to proceed until another engine could be sent up the line. This accident, which fortunately had not dashed the train over a bridge spanning the precipice just before running into Matucana, might have proved very serious, and both the managing inspector of the road and the engine-driver united in recognising a signal interposition of Providence on our behalf. The effect of our narrow escape was a double one; it made it impossible for my new friend to leave till next morning, and thus gave us several hours in one another's company, but it also deeply affected him, as he felt that God was thus giving him by an apparently miraculous intervention an opportunity he must indeed lay hold of to turn to Jesus Christ. He had many a time heard the Gospel and had attended Mr. Moody's meetings at St. Pancras. He had lived at Nottingham, and knew every mile of the Derbyshire and Midland County rails, with which we are so familiar.

The day before we landed at Callao, that place was visited by the most serious earthquake that has occurred there for many years. In spite of the fact that all the houses are so constructed as best to resist the frequent shocks that are experienced, fourteen houses were so damaged that they had to come down, and cracks occurred of so serious a nature in one of the churches, as to compel its being closed for repairs. It is somewhat curious that this very church contains an image which is supposed to possess special virtue in averting such disasters. The name of the image is "Il Senor del Mar" (the lord of the sea), and once every year they have a great procession through the streets of Callao, when he is taken down to the sea, which he is supposed to bless, multiplying the fishes, ensuring calm weather, and especially averting the disaster of earthquake. Probably his devotees will find nothing very incongruous in the fact of the very church which is graced by his presence being the particular one most to suffer during the recent shocks! This earthquake, which produced a profound impression in Callao, prepared the way, as nothing else could, for our Gospel mission.

WANTED—PITY FOR ANIMALS.

We encountered no little difficulty at Tarma in securing animals without sore backs to carry us to the Perene. Mr. Stark examined about 150 horses at one place, and could only find one that was fit to mount! If the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals want a new sphere for their helpful influence, let them come to cruel Peru—cruelly callous to animal suffering. The way, for instance, that oxen and pigs are put on board the vessels at the various ports might be so easily improved by a little extra care and time in landing. The oxen are lifted by a rope which goes round their horns—a method very painful, especially to the heavier cattle, who are dazed when the crane lowers them on to the deck. The worst part of the business, however, is the way the cattle are then driven into their pens—long nails on sticks are goaded into their sides, their tails are twisted and cracked, and they are subjected to severe pain and terrible fright. The pigs are lifted by a hind leg, and often dumped down aboard on their snouts, often causing the blood to spurt!

After steadily refusing to mount animals with sore backs (and wounds swarming with parasites), we at last secured two sound beasts, and left Tarma to ride inland. The road is quite an engineering feat, cut out of the side of the mountains. The sheer cliff often bounds the narrow path above and below, and down the precipice you can see the flowing stream, sometimes 1000 feet below. The path varies in width in these situations from, say, eight feet to four, and is sometimes a narrow ledge only one or two feet broad.

There is considerable danger in wet weather from falling rocks. One large fragment nearly struck Mr. Stark in its descent into the ravine below, but a kindly hand protected both our "going out" and our "coming in."

In a substantial wooden and mud house on the side of the mountains we put up for the night. Mr. Stark had a capital opportunity of preaching the Gospel to our Italian host and our guide, Verhilio, an intelligent, sceptical man, who has seen and been shocked by the rottenness of Romanism in this land. Long after we had gone to bed, into the early watches of the morning, these two men were talking over Mr. Stark's message, and looking into the Gospels and Testament he had given them.

In the Heart of Brazil.

Mr. W. R. Ronald writes from Mulgrave-street, Liverpool, that, in response to the article which appeared in our issue of December 9, he has received several sums of money in aid of Mr. Witte's proposed mission. During his stay in Lisbon, Mr. Witte has met Mr. H. Maxwell Wright, who having been on the Amazon, and knowing nearly everybody of any consequence there, has given him much information. Mr. Witte has been greatly cheered by a letter from Dr. Graham (Cowdenbeath, Fifeshire), in which he stated that he and his intended wife (who is also a doctor) have decided, if it should be God's will, to go next year to the same mission field. Mr. Ronald will be glad to supply information regarding this mission alike to those who desire to support it and to such as would be willing to join the party

American News.

THE usual religious summary for the past year in the United States is given in the New York Independent for January 6. It has articles from thirty-eight representative members of "Churches"—from Adventists to Universalists, and embracing Jews, Roman Catholics, Christian Scientists, Latter-Day Saints, and Unitarians. The general tone of the articles is hopeful, but no writer is able to report any startling progress during the year. Foreign missions receive a good deal of prominence, but there is not much to indicate increasing unity in any manifested form.

The statistical summary gives a total of close on 26,000,000 communicants in connection with all these bodies. The "Catholic" Churches, including Roman, Russian, Greek, Armenian, and Reformed, show a membership of over 8,500,000; Methodists come next with nearly 6,000,000; Baptists have over 4,000,000, Lutherans and Presbyterians muster 1,500,000 each; Disciples of Christ, 1,000,000; Protestant Episcopal, 667,000; and Congregationalists, 630,000. The total gains in membership reported for the year are 630,000.

Dr. M. H. Houston, a missionary in China, and now secretary of the Committee of Foreign Missions of the Southern Presbyterian Church, has been convicted of heresy by the Louisville Presbytery of that Church. The charges brought against him were that he holds the Lord's Supper to be not merely a church ordinance, but one that may be properly administered in the household by the head of a Christian family; that he believes that there is no valid Scriptural distinction between teaching and ruling elders; and that he holds the doctrine of possible complete sanctification in this life. The New York Independent says that if the Southern Presbyterians reject Dr. Houston on these grounds he will find a home in other denominations.

A "call to prayer" for the International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, February 23 to 27, has gone forth. This is not an American gathering only, but, like the Liverpool Conference, a rally of representatives of the movement throughout the world. "Our policy"—we quote from Mr. Mott's paper in the American Student Volunteer—"has been to hold a convention within each student generation. It has been thought better, in this day of so many conventions, to concentrate on one conspicuously strong gathering within the period covered by the course of the college student than to attempt to hold a series of more frequent and therefore less effective conventions." The first was held at Cleveland in 1891, and attended by 680 delegates; the second at Detroit in 1894, with 1300 delegates; the third at Liverpool in 1896, with nearly 1000 delegates, was the largest student gathering ever held in Europe. In view, especially of the financial problem which faces the American missionary boards, united prayer is desired that the evangelisation of the world may be furthered by this convention.

Dr. Theodore Cuyler, of Brooklyn, writes on January 5:—"Our dear brother, Ira D. Sankey, and his wife sailed yesterday for Egypt to spend the winter. In the spring they expect to go to Palestine." The "Week of Prayer" opened with good meetings. But how much we need a thorough, searching, and shaking Revival!

Marchmont, Belleville, Ontario.

IN their annual report of the work of this distributing Home, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace say:—"We begin with a note of heart-felt praise to our Heavenly Father for his goodness to us and our large family. There has been no serious illness, and no deaths in the Home during these two years. Not only those in the Home, but those scattered throughout the country, have enjoyed on the whole wonderfully good health and freedom from sickness, which speaks well for their good constitutions and the healthfulness of the country life.

"The total number of children received for the year was 202. Although not so many as in some previous years, it is a large number to bring such a long journey by sea and land without accident, and to prove with good comfortable homes and a fresh start in life. It is a great responsibility to take these little ones to bring up for the Lord, but it also brings very real joy and blessing into many hearts and homes."

The Earthquake in Assam.

WITH reference to the great earthquake of last summer in Assam, Rev. Josiah Thomas, secretary of the Foreign Missions of the Welsh Presbyterians, writes to us:—

"Allow me to recall the serious losses sustained by the Foreign Missions of the Welsh Presbyterian (or Calvinistic Methodist) Church. The Theological Institution and the hospital in Cherra, the normal and the high school in Shillong, the hospital in Jowai, the mission houses in Khasia, Jainstia, and Sylhet, the chapels and schools (built of stone) were all in a few moments levelled with the ground. A detailed statement recently received makes the loss to be 207,174 rupees, say over £13,000, without taking into account the personal losses of the missionaries. This loss, which is equal to twice the amount of the annual receipts from congregational collections, is a most serious one, especially when it is remembered that the annual expenditure has for some time been in excess of the receipts. In addition to this the native Christians have suffered great losses. Not only have their houses been destroyed, but the very land has in many cases become valueless. We have not hitherto asked for help outside of our own churches. Many of these have done nobly."

Mr. Thomas mentions an offer of £1000 guaranteed on £12000 being speedily raised, and reports about £8000 already in hand. The offices of the Missions are at 9, Westminster-chambers, 1, Cross-hall-street, Liverpool, and the general treasurer is Mr. David Hughes, J.P., 4, William Moult-street, Liverpool.

Armenian Refugees.

DEAR SIR,—May we ask for the insertion of a few words from a letter by Dr. Cochrane, whose name is well known as the able and untiring friend of the Armenian refugees in the district of Oroomiah, Persia? With the help of our fund he has laboured for many months past to relieve their sufferings, and has been able to provide means for about 500 families to settle in that neighbourhood with a fair prospect of becoming ultimately self-supporting. In October the number of the refugees was estimated at over 6000, but more have come since.

Dr. Cochrane writes on December 4 that there had been many fresh arrivals. The village of Saat, situated among the wildest Kurds, had been completely pillaged by the Kurds. Everything that the poor inhabitants had stored for the winter having been taken, they were compelled to quit their homes and come over to Oroomiah. From another Nestorian village, Uramar, a hundred families had been forced to flee, and all these new refugees have needed help from the already overtaxed means at the disposal of the missionaries. Not knowing, when the fund was exhausted, how to save what they had already done—how to provide seed which must be sown then or never, or how to meet the absolute and immediate needs—they gave pledges which the last sum we sent them enabled them to redeem, but this has left them without anything in hand. "We have again," writes Dr. Cochrane, "more than exhausted our supply, and still have to cry for more." Shall the cry of these good men, whose hearts are touched by the suffering around them, and who are doing their part so wisely and well, meet with no response from us in this Christian land?

The hon. treasurer of the fund is E. W. Brooks, Duvals, Grays, Essex.—Yours faithfully, MARY HICKSON, Hon. Sec.

The Information (Armenia) Bureau, 3, Essex-court, Temple, E.C., has just published two leaflets dealing with the present position of the Armenian question. "The Sultan and the Armenians" gives the translation of a remarkable despatch issued by order of the Sultan, while "The Armenians in Turkey" contains the reprint of a recent letter of The Times correspondent at Constantinople, who expresses his conviction that the Sultan does not desire reconciliation with the Armenians, and shows how his present methods have all the practical value of a massacre. Specimens and other particulars may be had from Mr. Charles E. Hecht, at the address given.

Indians in Africa.

THERE is a considerable sphere of work for Tamil and Hindustani speaking Christians in Natal and the Transvaal. Both men and women can be more easily reached there than when surrounded by the caste prejudices of their own land.

In Durban and Pietermaritzburg, Canon Boothe and others have a considerable amount of work amongst Indians in both Tamil and English. The S.A.G. Mission has two lady workers, who are beginning work in Tamil in a large plantation near Durban; but a lady is needed to organise Zenana work in Hindustani in the last-named town, where there are a large number of merchants and smaller traders, who have wives and daughters living in Purdah, as well as a large number of poorer people, who should hear the Gospel in their own tongue.

In Natal there are 45,000 Indians, and about one-fourth of them are women. In Johannesburg the numbers are, comparatively speaking, few, but a friend easily collected between 200 and 300 men in a very few minutes on a Sunday afternoon, when I was staying in that wonderful city. They listened readily, and asked for Gospels.

Is not this an open door into which one or more of those who have laboriously and prayerfully acquired one or two Indian languages should enter in? E. ABRAHAM.

The Neglected Continent.

IN a call for prayer, Senor Emilio Olsson, of the New York Christian and Missionary Alliance, and whose great missionary enterprise for South America we described a few months ago, writes to us:—"Realising the stupendous possibilities of the work in this land, and seeing the open doors and inviting opportunities, our missionaries can but conclude that now is the time for a great advance movement in evangelistic work on the Continent. God has laid it on the hearts of many to devote their lives to this work, and the present moment finds more than a score who, with native workers, are scattered over this vast field, preparing the way, and laying the foundation for future service.

"There is no lack of workers, for a hundred stand ready to come. The need is not men and women, neither is it, in one sense, money, for the world and Church have plenty.

"The real lack of to-day is in the individual, who, as an integral part of the body of believers, does not live up to his privileges of faith and trust in God, which is evidenced by a lack of believing prayer, and by the non-acceptance of the promises in the Word of God. The crying need of to-day is faithful prayer on the part of every child of God, prayer full of a faith that has no limit to its vision. Therefore, with the need of the work pressing upon us, we invite you to join us in prayer every Friday afternoon, between the hours of twelve and six, during which time (D.V.) all missionaries on the field will also be united prayer. Pray for the speedy evangelisation of South America; that those ready to come out may soon be on the field; that those now in South America may be kept body, soul, and spirit; that the means for preparing and sending forth native workers may not be lacking; that special wisdom and grace be given the board at home and the superintendent on the field, and that all workers may be endued with the power of the Holy Ghost."

Señor Olsson's permanent address is Adrogué, F.C.S., Rep. Argentina, South America. The joint honorary secretaries of the London committee are: Mr. William Greene, 3, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W.; Mr. H. S. Ridings, 31, Carson-road, West Dulwich, S.E.

Jews in Paris.—We have closed another year of evangelical work among the Jews in Paris. Steady and sure progress has been made; the Gospel has not only found its way into a great many Jewish houses, but into many Jewish hearts. We see and hear of fruits springing up among men, women, and the children attending our Sabbath-school. This year at our Christmas festival Testaments and Christian books were given as prizes to the children who distinguished themselves in Scripture knowledge. The effect of these Bible prizes on the children and parents is most encouraging. L. C. MAS

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

FROM Nairn to Brighton the evangelists of this society are at work with many encouraging tokens. Quite a number of the missions, in towns, have been held in public buildings engaging the sympathy and active support of Christians of the various churches. The honorary secretary is most anxious to promote missions of this united character, their effects on the churches themselves being of the happiest, while non-church and chapel goers are induced to attend more easily than when the services are in some recognised place of worship. From a number of letters now before us we may give a few extracts.

A farmer in the county of Oxford writes: "It was through your Mr. Bryant that the Word of Life came to my own soul in 1880, and many more who received the message at the same time are now living as children of God. I rejoice in the clear, forceful, and faithful preaching of your evangelists. I cannot but feel how vastly important is the work of your society in these days, when ritualism, worldly pleasure, and other evils are drawing so many aside."

From the same county a lady writes that Mr. John Harris has again visited Brill. "The services ended last night. We have had splendid congregations—far larger than in previous missions. The services have been marked by earnest attention and deep interest. There are at least twelve earnest believers here who owe their conversion to a mission held by the same evangelist seventeen years ago, We see evidences of blessing now, and trust that the future will show it to be deep and lasting."

A correspondent in Blackburn writes: "The mission taken by Mr. J. Greenwood has been a great success. The meetings have been well attended, and, so far as we can form a judgment, about fifty persons have accepted Christ. Several of these appear to have been under conviction since the evangelist's previous visit."

From Buckland Newton a correspondent writes: "The mission was all too short (a fortnight). Mr. Bray proclaimed the Gospel so simply and earnestly, that many sinners have been awakened, and some have been led to accept Jesus: while believers have been aroused and drawn into closer fellowship. We shall not soon forget the closing address, when many hearts were touched. We have decided to continue holding united services once a month through the winter."

From Bristol, Rev. C. Griffiths writes: "I wish to express my heartfelt thankfulness for the mission just held by Mr. Alexander Clark. We have greatly enjoyed the services, the addresses being well calculated to arouse Christians, kindle earnestness, and bring the careless to see their need of Christ. Several profess to have been converted during the mission, and have come forward voluntarily to say so."

A lady in Essex, speaking of barn-meetings held just before Christmas, says: "I was wrong with regard to the advisability of extending the mission. The second week was the best, and I would not have missed it for anything. The ground here is hard, and it is long since it has been so thoroughly stirred. Some have been brought to the Saviour already, and in others the Word is evidently working. Mr. Cooke, the evangelist, has had a difficult time, but wisdom, patience, and his self-less spirit overcame all."

Many letters of a similar character speak in encouraging terms of missions held in various parts of Scotland. Two ministers write as to a united mission at Pitlochry: "The first week's services were conducted each evening in the Free Church. During the second week the meetings were held in the Established Church, and on the Sunday evenings there were united services. Members of the Episcopal and Baptist Churches also attended the weekday meetings. Thorough cordiality among the churches marked the movement. Though there was only one dry evening during the fortnight, the weeknight services were well attended, and showed a well-sustained interest. The attendance on the Sunday evenings taxed the full capacity of the churches."

MISSION TO THE BLIND.

We recently announced that through the kindness of a lady deeply interested in the spiritual and temporal welfare of the blind, a special mission was in progress in the Metropolis. No less than 2894 needy blind persons and their guides were assembled at eight different centres to partake of tea, which was followed on each occasion by a Gospel service. Those who are in close touch with the blind know how needful such a mission really is, and realise, as they witness the deep depression of some of these afflicted ones, what an awful thing it is to be in double darkness, which—alas!—is the case with not a few. We are glad to learn that the people listened attentively to the Gospel message, which was earnestly, lovingly, and forcibly proclaimed by men whose hearts yearned for the salvation of their afflicted brethren and sisters.

Mr. W. Mead, superintendent of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society (himself blind), who organised the entire mission, asked the following searching questions at each meeting:—"Have you accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as your own personal and all-sufficient Saviour, so as to be able to say, 'Christ is mine, and I am His'? Have you told your family and those about you that you have thus received Him? If you are a Christian, do you daily consecrate yourself to God?" At the close of each meeting, the lady who bore the expense of the mission gave each blind guest 5s., except in cases where husband and wife were both without sight, when the amount was equally divided between them. Each guide was presented with a copy of "The One-Talented People," which the lady said she hoped would show them they could all do something. Also, 130 blind invalids received the gift of 5s., and 219 blind inmates of workhouses, known to the Society's missionaries, received 1s. each.

We are pleased to hear that there has been encouraging fruit of this effort. The Society has a staff of blind missionaries, who regularly visit their fellow-sufferers in their own homes, reading the Scriptures, and giving needful counsel. These men are glad to have their quiet work backed up by a special effort of this kind.

MR. LANE IN LONDON AND BRIGHTON.

The mission which Mr. W. R. Lane has been holding at Aldersgate-street was continued last week with growing interest. The evening meetings showed a marked increase in attendance, while many young fellows of the right stamp were among the audience. Good work was done at the after-meetings, and it is believed not a few have decided for Christ.

Mr. Lane's "half-hour talks to business men" have evidently aroused some attention and attracted not a few fresh faces to the central noon prayer meeting. Dealing with the various aspects of sin, he has brought the lesson of certain Bible narratives to bear with startling effect on every-day life. To take but one example. On Thursday he spoke on "A Terrible Epitaph." The theme was Judas—the epitaph, "It had been good for that man if he had not been born." These words were spoken by the tender, pitiful Jesus of one who had been in his company, had made a distinct profession, and had been one of the twelve apostles. How searching the lesson—to take nothing for granted. Again and again the Lord had warned Judas in the most solemn way; yet, though he was a pilferer, his fellow disciples suspected nothing, as is evident from their puzzled query, "Is it I?" when at the last supper the Master said, "One of you shall betray Me." The slow, benumbing, blinding progress of sin indulged was described, with a few telling sentences on the remorseful repentance, and the awful end when Judas "went to his own place."

Mr. Lane commenced on Sunday a united mission at the Dome, Brighton. He was warmly welcomed at a prayer meeting on Saturday evening, when a solemn time was spent in prayer for definite blessing upon the mission. On Sunday the Dome (which seats 3000) was nearly filled. Mr. Lane gave a striking address from Ezek. xxxvii. 8. In the evening the congregation filled every seat in the vast building, while hundreds remained standing. Mr. Lane selected three texts relating to "thorns," and together setting forth the themes of "Ruin, Redemption, and Regeneration." At the close a large number of persons remained behind—probably numbering a thousand—and a quiet after-meeting was held, in which requests for special prayer came from every part of the room.

MR. T. W. CANNING AT DAWLISH.

Mr. Canning is conducting a united Gospel mission in the Congregational Chapel, Dawlish, Devonshire, under the auspices of the Council of Free Churches. The work began on Sunday, January 9, and is being continued with increasing interest and growing numbers, and with manifestations of God's power in the conversion of many souls. The preceding week was spent in united prayer-meetings. These gatherings have been increasing night by night. One of the most blessed features of the mission has been the work through the churches; and the ministers are rejoicing in the conversion of many who have been regular attendants at the various churches, who had not till now decided for Christ. So mighty are the manifestations of God's presence that souls are crying out in the meetings for pardon and grace. This is not the outcome of sensationalism, but through the blessing of God resting upon the preaching of the Gospel. In the afternoon Mr. Canning conducts Bible-readings for Christians, and these have been well attended. The children, too, have their meetings, and every evening numbers gather together to hear of the love of Jesus Christ, and are deeply interested and greatly impressed.

F. Wycliffe Pascoe (Congregational Minister).

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a united mission at South Tottenham in connection with the Free Church Council. The centres of the mission were at High Cross Congregational Church and St. John's Presbyterian Church.

A week's mission, organised by the Rushden Free Church Council, was opened on Sunday, 9th inst., by Mr. W. Forbes. The meetings were well attended. Each night during the week the evangelist has addressed meetings at the Public Hall, which has been crowded every evening.

Mr. James Wharton has been the instrument of bringing, during the late mission, the message of joy to many hearts in Woolton. Nightly the attendance and interest grew till the last night, when nineteen handed in their names as having decided for Christ during the mission. We would ask prayers for the converts.—E. D.

Mr. J. B. Wookey is conducting a series of evangelistic services in Belfast under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The mission has awakened a widespread interest in the northern capital, and has attracted large attendances, especially of young men. On Sundays the new Y.M.C.A. hall, the largest in the North of Ireland, has been filled to overflowing. The addresses have produced a deep impression upon many young men. The truths of the Gospel have been pressed home night after night with singular power and tender pathos, with the result that many have surrendered themselves to the Saviour. The success of this special effort to reach young men has encouraged its promoters to continue the meetings another week.

Dr. Munhall has lately closed a three months' campaign in the Middle West (U.S.A.). Hundreds have been added to the churches, and thousands of professors quickened in their spiritual lives as a result. In Ottumwa, Ia., seven churches united in the work. The meetings were held in a tent arranged to accommodate 2000 persons. Many non-church-goers were reached in this way. In Mankato, Minn., five churches were in the movement. A street parade of the Young People's societies, in which fully 600 participated, was a marked feature of the campaign. Not less than 3000 persons attended the open-air song service that followed. At Pontiac, Ill., all the stores save one, and the manufacturing establishments of the city, closed for one and a-half hour on a Tuesday afternoon, while the business and working men thronged the largest church to hear the Gospel.

A most successful mission was commenced on January 2 in the North-road Wesleyan Chapel, Darlington, by Mr. Josiah Nix. It was feared at first that the commencement of the New Year would be a most unfavourable time for conducting mission services. These doubts, however, were dispelled, as the congregation nightly increased, and numbers passed into the inquiry-room seeking peace with God. On the second Sunday the chapel was crowded to its utmost capacity, and Divine blessing rested abundantly on the services. On Monday, the 10th, at the closing service, admission was by ticket only, and from seven to eight hundred were present to hear Mr. Nix's address to the members of the church, new converts, and those who had taken the temperance pledge. The various churches in the neighbourhood co-operated heartily, and have alike shared in the impulse given to church life, and the addition of new members.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR much blessing on a fortnight's mission in the village of Navestock.

For much blessing on special meetings by Richard Spragg at Pontnewydd.

For a mission at Watton, Norfolk, from Jan. 30 to Feb. 13, by J. Simmonds.

For a fortnight's mission to men at Barnsley by Rev. Dr. Morris, Jan. 23 to Feb. 6.

For mission to be held in Exmouth, commencing Jan. 27, by Mr. Richard M. Holman.

For mission services at New Brighton by Mr. J. de Burgh Rochfort, Jan. 23 to Feb. 6.

For a mission, Feb. 1 to 6, in Gilford Hall, Sandymount, by Rev. W. Newman Hall.

For blessing on a mission-room opened by Sir George Pigot on his new estate at Warfield.

For a mission, commencing Jan. 22, at Railway Mission Hall, Wisbech, by Mr. J. Ashton.

For a ten days' mission at Markyate Street, Herts, Jan. 23 to Feb. 2, by Mr. T. Goudier.

For a fifteen days' mission to be held in Accrington by Mr. King Lambert, to commence on Sunday, Jan. 23.

Rev. E. Allen, of Tiverton, completed on Tuesday his one hundredth year. He was ordained in 1822, and is believed to be the oldest clergyman in the Church of England. Close to him, however, comes Rev. H. Good, who was ordained in 1823, and is now in his ninety-eighth year.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—A good work constantly goes on in this large industrial centre by the agents of the City Mission Society. One of them writes to tell of many visits made to the people in their homes, of cottage meetings, temperance gatherings, addresses to factory girls, and open-air services. Much of the work is merely seed-sowing; but there are also manifest results and impressions made, that must in due season bear fruit in holy living.

Obituary.

MR. GEORGE PAULIN, IRVINE.

YEARS ago the writer of "Hallowed Ground" and other poems made himself name and fame as a rising poet. Born in 1812 at Horndean, on the banks of the Tweed, he was educated in Edinburgh, and after some literary experiences, became rector of the Royal Academy, Irvine. Some years ago he retired from duty, spending his days quietly at Kirkgate, where he peacefully passed away on the 11th inst. For half a century he was elder and session clerk of the Free Church. His poems are full of tenderness and strength. A collection was published in 1876 by James Taylor, of Edinburgh.

MR. R. W. WILKINSON, YORK.

This well-known leader among the York Presbyterians has passed away at the age of forty-nine. He was for many years an elder of the Presbyterian Church, and rendered most helpful service, being greatly loved. For ten years he was a teacher in the Hungate Mission Schools, containing 400 scholars, and for twenty years he acted as assistant-superintendent. He was also conductor of the Band of Hope, in which capacity he was a most earnest worker. He also took a prominent part in local friendly societies. His practical knowledge and attention to business for twenty-nine years in one firm won for him the approval of his employer, and he was also esteemed by his fellow workmen and the outside public with whom he was brought into business contact. In his steadfastness of character, his earnestness of purpose, his uprightness and integrity of life he set a high example.

MRS. LYDIA CLARIDGE, WEMBLEY.

This lady, formerly of 313, New North-road, was for over thirty years a devoted worker amongst the poor in connection with Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road (Pastor Philip Gast). Notwithstanding business duties, she devoted most of her time to work for the poor, ever ready to lead the way in the cause of the needy and suffering. All efforts for poor children or poor people had her fullest sympathy and most generous help. In the mothers' meeting under her care there were 250 of the poor of St. Luke's and Clerkenwell. During the last eight months she had retired with her family from business to Wembley to enjoy a well-earned rest—but not from her Master's service. She could not give up her loved work for the poor, and therefore, notwithstanding the distance, she came up every Monday to the mothers' meeting. Last Monday she came up as usual, and was returning. She was alighting from the railway-carriage at Baker-street, when, unfortunately, she fell and struck her head, and was carried to St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, where she lay for a few hours in an unconscious state, and then passed away to hear from the lips of the Saviour she loved so dearly "Well done, good and faithful servant."

MR. W. STODDART, EVANGELIST.

This brother, known to many in Scotland and the North of England, fell asleep at his residence in Edinburgh, on the 14th inst., in his sixty-fourth year. Between thirty and forty years ago he was associated as missionary with the late beloved Dr. H. Bonar, when Free Church minister at Kelso. Many will recall how in these early days Mr. Stoddart was used of God as evangelist, especially in the border counties. Coming to Edinburgh shortly after Dr. Bonar, he devoted himself to evangelistic work with much energy and faithfulness. To some his manner may have seemed peculiar, but all felt that he was a man of prayer and devotion to the cause of Christ. Possessed of a rich mind, fluency of utterance, powers of persuasion, and a deep knowledge of the Word of God, his ministry was greatly blessed to saints and instrumental in the conversion of many sinners. As late as the Sabbath before his death, he presided at the morning Bible-class for workers of the Carrubbers Close Mission. As an office-bearer in the Grange Free Church for twenty-seven years, an efficient open-air preacher, evangelist, and teacher, a warm friend, and a true man of God, he will be much missed. One of his sons is assistant to Dr. Macmillan, Free Church, Greenock.

MRS. H. J. SHIRLEY, FULHAM.

The Dawes-road Congregational Church, Fulham, has been plunged into mourning by the death of the wife of the pastor, Rev. H. J. Shirley, and daughter of the late Mr. George Harper, who was for many years a Wesleyan local preacher at Finsbury Park. Through a period of twelve years Mrs. Shirley had struggled heroically against disease, but succumbed at last to an attack brought on through a chill, and died on Saturday, January 8. Her bright and vivacious temperament, her active wit and keen judgment, her kind sympathy and interest in people, especially the young, endeared her to an ever-widening circle of friends. Her enfeebled physical condition during the period since Mr. Shirley was called to the pastorate of Dawes-road necessarily prevented her from taking that share in her husband's work which her mental gifts and tastes eminently qualified her for, but she took every opportunity which health permitted of touching the life of the congregation, and both at home and abroad she exercised a wise and genial influence upon those around her.

Letter to the Editor.

MORE VIVISECTION HORRORS.

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. Tinling, justly says, "On moral grounds we have a right to speak without any deference to physiologists." Not only have we a right, but it is our duty to protest against the prevalent invasion of our hospitals and asylums by vivisectors. The rage for experiment consequent upon the fascinating study of bacteriology and the introduction of various animal extracts in the treatment of disease, have opened up a vast field of research, of which the experimenter is certain to take advantage because of the apathy of all classes of the people in matters pertaining to medical education.

Our great hospitals are like the Chinese Empire—everyone who is strong enough and sufficiently daring seizes such territory as he desires for the purpose of his own advancement!

I called the attention of the Press a few weeks back to the incredibly cruel and murderous experiments of Professor Sanarelli, who recently carried out a number of experiments on healthy human beings in the quarantine station on the Island of Flores, near Monte Video, with the culture-germs of yellow fever. He injected the virus of this terrible disease into five persons, and they all died with the typical symptoms of yellow fever. I have been endeavouring to learn the names of these unhappy victims of science, but all I can discover is the following statement in the Monte Video Times, a paper which is very much annoyed at the popular indignation aroused by the exposure. It says that of the five victims—

"One was a condemned criminal who voluntarily submitted himself on condition that he should be pardoned if he survived, and that the others were incurable pauper lunatics who in a more advanced stage of civilisation, will probably be submitted mercifully to a lethal chamber!"

The writer continues that Sanarelli's alleged discovery "was quite worth the sacrifice of any number of animals, and even of some human beings."

The toleration of the vivisector in the hospital ward means the recognition of the right to experiment not only on the lower animals but on the persons of our poor brethren who are the objects of our charity, and should be of our loving solicitude.

To tolerate experiment in the hospital ward is to recognise the right to murder in the interests of science. The public do not consent to all this explicitly, but implicitly they permit it when they allow licensed, avowed vivisectors to prowl about our great cathedrals of healing.—Faithfully yours,

Jan. 10. EDWARD BERDOE, M.R.C.S.

General Booth and Commander Ballington Booth met on Saturday in New York, and had a brief interview in the presence of Dr. Strong and Dr. Hall. The meeting was marked by manifestations of affection on the part both of father and son, but no agreement was arrived at as to an amalgamation of the Salvation Army and the Volunteers. It was, however, decided that all public controversy between the two organisations should be ended as far as possible. No arrangements were made for a further interview, and another meeting is not likely to occur very soon. Several newspaper representatives submitted a long list of questions to General Booth concerning Commander Ballington Booth's withdrawal from the Army, and the General's alleged aversion to American institutions and national feeling. The General replied that an agreement with his son prohibited him from saying anything about the matter in newspaper interviews, and he added that in any case he would not care to answer the questions submitted.

The Young Women's Christian Association have received during the past year many appeals from India and other foreign lands for ladies willing to carry on Christian work among the large number of English speaking women in these places, and they feel that many of there sisters at home might be glad to know of such openings for service, which necessitate no new language. At this moment a lady is urgently required to join another in a work which is already had a commencement, one is needed who would be able either to go out at her own charges, or to contribute towards the expenses. The opening is an important one, and further information will be given on application to hon. secretary, Other Continents, World's Y.W.C.A., 26, George-street, Hanover-square.

Irish Notes.

THE Evangelical Alliance has appointed March 17 as a day of special prayer for Ireland.

Twenty years ago there were only fifty-four students in the Irish Presbyterian Colleges; now there are 154.

The third annual conference of Irish students, at which about 400 were present, including delegates from all the principal Irish Colleges, has been held in Dublin.

The Women's Missionary Association of Eakenhead Presbyterian Church, Belfast, raised last year for missionary purposes the creditable sum of £231, which they have divided amongst various organisations, as the Jewish Mission, Jungle Tribes Mission, and kindred institutions.

A band of seven young men, including Mr. J. Martin Cleaver, solicitor, are going out to Egypt in order to devote themselves to mission work among the Greeks, Maltese, and Moslems in the country. They intend to make Alexandria for the present their headquarters, and from thence they expect to branch out as the Lord opens up the way. They are not going under the auspices of any existing missionary society, and they have been led to give themselves to this work through special good received at the Keswick Convention and by coming in contact with Rev. Chas. Inwood. The party wish to be prayed for under the name of the "Egypt Mission Band."

Scottish Notes.

THE Scottish Union of the British Women's Temperance Association has lately formed several new branches in Edinburgh. It is hoped that by monthly meetings and otherwise friends may be led to take a deeper interest in the work.

Mr. Reginald Callender, B.A., has been conducting special services for young people, in Edinburgh, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. He had an interesting meeting with schoolboys on the afternoon of January 16.

A good work of grace is at present going on in one of the Edinburgh Poorhouses. A number of the inmates have professed to receive Christ as their Saviour. It is gratifying to report that some of the officials are in hearty sympathy with the work.

Archdeacon Sinclair, of London, preached before a large congregation in St. John's Church, Edinburgh, on the 16th inst., in connection with the Foreign Mission week in the Episcopal Church. On the evening of the same day he addressed an interesting meeting of students in connection with the University Students' Christian Association.

On Thursday, 13th inst., in the Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, 1000 poor men, women, and children were entertained to tea. Mr. Robertson, superintendent of the Mission, presided over the interesting gathering, and addresses were delivered by Mr. Ross, City missionary, and Rev. Dr. Cunningham. Testimonies were also given by some of the workers, one of whom had spent twenty-six years in prison before his conversion. The gathering was of a most impressive character.

Twenty-eight years ago the Edinburgh Working Boys' and Girls' Religious Society was founded, having for its object the elevation of the young, especially those employed in factories and workshops. The Society has done good work, the workers coming into sympathetic contact with the poor, often the degraded and vicious, and seeking to bring Gospel influences to bear on them. There are now sixty-nine services, with an average attendance every Sabbath forenoon of 6859 boys and girls. There are 776 monitors and officials, all voluntary workers. In addition to these services, there are Christian Endeavour, senior Bible classes, and evangelistic meetings. Such a work involves prayer, patience, and perseverance, and while there is much that is disappointing, the workers are cheered by seeing from time to time many young people surrendering their hearts and lives to the Lord Jesus.

The spiritual welfare of the soldier in the British Army is one which should interest all who have the well-being of the nation at heart. In Scotland, exclusive of the militia, there is an aggregate force at the various military depôts of 3860 men, to which falls to be added 526 women and 1051 children. The Army Scripture Readers' Society for Scotland employs eight readers, who daily carry the message of salvation to barrack-rooms, hospitals, camps, and prisons, as well as to the family of the soldier. During the past year some 21,438 visits were made to the barracks and hospitals, over 12,000 Scriptures read, seventeen Bible-classes conducted each week, 56,840 tracts and 1210 Bibles and Testaments distributed. The readers have been welcomed by the men, and the results have been such as to cheer and encourage those who carry on this arduous work. It is to be regretted that the operations of the Society are somewhat hindered by lack of necessary funds.

The Y.M.C.A.

A NEW Association has been formed at Aberavon, Port Talbot, South Wales.

The new dining-hall of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. Club was opened on Thursday.

Mr. M. Griffin, late of Sheffield, has been appointed secretary of the Northampton Association.

The annual conversazione of the East Grinstead Association was held on the 12th inst., when a large gathering assembled in the Grosvenor Hall.

The date of the world's conference of Y.M.C.A.'s, which is to be held at Basle, Switzerland, this year, has been changed from August to July 6-10.

At Winchester, on Jan. 13, a most successful function was held, taking the form of a New Year's conversazione. There was a large and representative gathering.

A new year's reception and social party at the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. was followed on Jan. 9 by an early morning devotional meeting conducted by Rev. J. F. Sherman, and a breakfast.

The Cardiff Association has started an excellent monthly magazine under the title "Enterprise." Between thirty-five and forty Associations have now monthly or quarterly organs representing their work.

The annual meeting of the Hertford Y.M.C.A., held on Jan. 10, was addressed by Mr. A. K. Yapp. The report presented by Mr. J. D. Hardie showed that the work had made considerable progress during the past year.

At the Wolverhampton rooms a large meeting took place in response to an invitation from the president, Mr. Alderman S. T. Mander, and addresses were given by Revs. J. W. Nixon, vicar of St. James's, and Dr. Berry.

The special crusade amongst the men of London against the evils of gambling, intemperance, and impurity was continued last week, on Jan. 11, 12, and 13, by large meetings in the Town Hall, Shoreditch. Amongst those who took part in the proceedings were Revs. G. H. C. Macgregor, J. E. Wakerley, Dr. Monro Gibson, Mr. C. Boardman, and Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P.

The annual New Year reunion in connection with the Bristol Y.M.C.A. held on the 10th inst. was attended by between five and six hundred. The venerable president, Mr. J. Storrs Fry, occupied the chair, and gave an excellent address. The secretary, Mr. Ralph Morphett, said all departments of the work showed exceptional signs of strength and vitality, and there were never more young men belonging to the Association.

The Lord is blessing the work of the Leeds Association abundantly. The Bible class for young men has now an average attendance of 154. During the year there have been many signs of the Lord's presence, many of the young men having given themselves up to the Lord, and Christians have been quickened. The mission band, formed to assist churches, chapels, and missions with special services, has been much blessed.

Reports are to hand of the public opening of new premises by the Kimberley Y.M.C.A., on December 17. The Association was formed in May, 1895, and has rapidly developed under the supervision of Mr. John Kent, general secretary, until there are now over 300 members; and excellent premises on a most eligible and central site have been placed at the disposal of the Association, chiefly owing to the zealous efforts of Mr. H. A. Oliver, a vice-president. There was a large gathering at the inaugural meeting.

The Mayor and Mayoress of Coventry (Dr. and Mrs. Webb-Fowler) gave an "At Home" in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. on Thursday last. Over 400 were present. The Mayor said he knew of no institution which was so important and necessary to the City. The young men of to-day would be the city rulers of the future, and it behove them to care for them. He congratulated the president and secretary on the excellent work they had accomplished.

General Horace Porter, Ambassador of the United States to France, presided over the twenty-ninth annual meeting of the Paris Anglo-American Y.M.C.A. (160, Rue Montmartre), which was held in the Philadelphia Hall, by permission of the McAll Mission. Part was taken in the proceedings by Revs. Dr. E. G. Thurber, Dr. H. E. Noyes, and H. Bramley Hart, Dr. J. J. Ryan, Lord Radstock, and others. An excellent report was presented by the secretary, Mr. Herbert E. Kinsley. The Association is having a most successful winter's work. The full members are most active. The testimonies recently given by many members are most encouraging.

Personalia.

Mr. Walter Notman has resigned the post of pastor and superintendent of the United Gospel Mission, Albert Hall, Nottingham, owing to ill-health on the part of his wife and children. Acting on medical advice, they are leaving for Brighton. Mr. Notman will resume his work in connection with the Evangelisation Society.

Dr. A. M. Fairbairn, principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, has accepted the Haskell lectureship, and will deliver a series of lectures on the Christian religion to educated English-speaking Hindoos in India. He hopes to arrange for the visit to take place at the end of the year. Indian missionaries of all denominations will be much gratified at this decision.

Rev. J. Chalmers, LL.D., of Hong Kong, has returned to this country under a heavy burden of sorrow in the death of his wife. He was now in the seventy-third year of his life, and the forty-sixth year of his missionary service, and, although he had been approached in reference to an honourable and prominent position in this country (the professorship of Chinese at Oxford), his love for the service impels him to return to China.

Miss Salmond is on the eve of departure for a field of service in Marash, Armenia. She is no stranger to the East, as she was for seventeen years engaged in mission work in Constantinople and Smyrna, and is acquainted with more than one Eastern language. She joins the American station at Marash, where a warm welcome awaits her from the missionaries. The Bowdon branch of the Friends of Armenia are generously taking the responsibility of her support in the field.

Mr. A. J. Arnold.—Our readers and all the friends of the Evangelical Alliance will hear with much regret of the serious indisposition of its esteemed secretary, Mr. A. J. Arnold. The strain of overwork in the interests of the Society has caused a breakdown in his health, with congestion of the lungs and other somewhat serious symptoms. Mr. Arnold has had to cancel all his engagements, including a series of meetings in the Riviera. We trust that with God's blessing on the means used he may be able to resume work in a few weeks.

"The Fellowship of His Sufferings."

"Himself bare our sicknesses."—Matt. viii. 17.

DID Jesus suffer mortal pain?
And shall a child of his go free?
Perish the thought! Lord smite again
If by this means I grow like Thee.

"I thirst."—John xix. 28.

Did Jesus thirst? Then may I know
A burning thirst for heavenly things,
As from the wilderness below
I urge my course on eager wings.

"Jesus wept."—John xi. 35.

Did Jesus weep, did burning tears
Suffuse his eyes and mar his face?
And shall I hear with stony ears,
Nor weep with Him a dying race.

"He humbled Himself."—Phil. ii. 8.

Did Jesus leave his throne on high,
To know no place to lay his head?
Then let me pass earth's honours by,
And in his footprints seek to tread.

"He died."—Rom. vi. 10.

Did Jesus die?—and shall I crave
To wait to meet Him in the air?
Nay, rather may I pass the grave,
And be partaker with Him there.

"Who offered up prayers."—Heb. v. 7.

Did Jesus leave his couch to pace
The friendless hill-sides of Judea?
And offer prostrate on his face
The incense of prevailing prayer?

"Reaching forth."—Phil iii. 13.

Then let me urge with burning will
My steps to follow where He trod.
To seek communion with Him still
And fellowship enjoy with God.

Girls' Letter Guild.—There is great need for lady correspondents for our Nonconformist girls at the Leeds centre, who have been waiting months for ladies to write to them. A simple friendly letter is all that is required. There must be many of our readers who could undertake this small work for Christ's sake. All particulars of the Guild will be given on application to me.—Faithfully yours,

The Book World

THE ARMENIAN TRAGEDY IN STORY.

It was inevitable that the Armenian massacres should be depicted in story, and we heartily welcome in this behoof the powerful pen of the author of "The Spanish Brothers" and several other religio-historical tales, in a volume entitled By Far Euphrates. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The object of the book is not to rehearse the horrors that filled the newspapers at the time, but rather to show the light of Christian faith shining persistently in days of persecution and darkness. The pages present a glorious picture of fidelity to Christ—men, women, and young people choosing death rather than denying their Lord. True to her high purpose, Miss Alcock is also safe in her facts. In the preface she says: "Every instance of faith or heroism given in these pages is not only true in itself, but typical of a hundred others"; and all who read the newspapers and official reports two years ago, must allow that she has kept well within the mark. We trust this striking story will be widely read, and have its effect, not only in stimulating to Christian heroism, but in securing material sympathy for the children of the martyred Christians. An appendix furnishes some of the facts and figures of Armenia's trouble in more prosaic form, and concludes by inviting the benevolent to communicate with the Association of Friends of Armenia, 47, Victoria-street, Westminster, in order to learn how they may help the starving and desolate remnant of the hunted people.

Some pleasing stanzas will be found in On the King's Service, a collection of poems by Mr. H. Kelly (1s. Shaw & Co.), dedicated to the Y.W.C.A., and containing lines of real merit.

Our Polly. By Mrs. Rouquette. (3s. 6d. Gardner, Darton, & Co.) In this most interesting and diverting autobiography of a venerable parrot youthful readers will find plentiful instruction in various branches of knowledge, not to speak of the delight of the story itself and the adventures of the narrator.

The Apples of Sin, by Coulson Kernahan, is one of the re-issued booklets composing his "Book of Strange Sins." Nothing more realistic in its awful impressiveness could well be imagined. A pretty allegory "for children from eight to eighty," called "The Garden of God," forms part of the booklet. (6d. and 1s. Ward, Lock & Co.)

Come, ye Children. By the late C. H. Spurgeon. (2s. Passmore & Alabaster.) A series of short addresses to Sunday-school teachers, marked by Mr. Spurgeon's strength of doctrinal statement and depth of conviction. He believes unfalteringly in the conversion of the young, and encourages teachers in their important task. Earnest workers will find much stimulus in these pages.

A story entirely good in substance and influence is At Last; or, Cuthbert Wins. By Catherine Shaw. (2s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) The pages show the danger of bad example, especially in the matter of drinking, and indicate the sure way to victory over the alcoholic crave. The story is eminently readable, and should prove to many a strong constructive appeal for the Gospel temperance position.

The Hyde Park services so long and vigorously maintained by Mr. C. Cook and his enthusiastic band, amid not a little opposition, have been the means of bringing many slaves of sin into liberty. The story of the work is rich with tokens of the power of the Gospel, and some of these cases have been of the most striking character. One such incident, woven into narrative form, under the title Enthralled! Enslaved!! (1s. H. R. Allenson), has now been issued by Mr. Cook. Its perusal must arouse fresh interest in the maintenance of the park services, which have been so much used of God.

The freshness and force that characterised Mr. Spurgeon's sermons as they were delivered, inhere very remarkably in the discourses as they are still published week by week by Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster. Last year's issues, as bound up in vol. xliii. of The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit (7s.), constitute a storehouse of spiritual reading, which will rejoice many an invalid, and greatly help preachers on the look-out for germ thoughts. We note that many of these discourses were preached as far back as 1884. While the supply of such sermons holds out, there is sure to be a large and ready demand.

Many will welcome the new and greatly-improved edition of the Illustrated Teachers' Bible. (Prices from 2s. 6d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.) The great feature of the book is the revised "Aids" and a series of monumental illustrations of the Scriptures, as edited with autotypes of antiquities and photographic views of important Biblical sites and objects, by Rev. C. J. Ball, M.A. This department is also enriched by photographic reproductions of manuscripts and versions, selected and described by Mr. F. G. Kenyon, M.A., of the British Museum. The whole of the illustrations are chronologically arranged, rendering them of special utility as an introduction to the study of Biblical archæology. These Aids cover a wide ground, so that this edition of the Bible is sure to be of great service to teachers and Bible students.

As a delineation of Welsh life, social and religious, it would be difficult to match To the Angel's Chair: A story of Ideals in a Welsh Village. By John Thomas, M.A. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). What with the intense interest of the tale, depicting strong Christian sentiment and vindicating the cause of true love, one would have thought little the less of the book if Gomer Williams, the miner, had never occupied the bardic chair, or attained to fame as a pulpit orator. Lucy Pennant, the squire's daughter, is also a noble character, no less nobly drawn; but to us the great value of the story lies in its powerful discernment of motive, and interpretation of thought and action. While the pages point many important lessons in parable, they give a grand picture of ideals, and help us to a due appreciation of some features of religious life in the Principality.

If, on the one hand, there is a danger of familiar truths being overlaid by new teachings, there is, on the other, a praiseworthy desire to present the old doctrines in modern terms and with up-to-date application. An example of this is found in Old Gems in a New Setting, a Layman's Researches in Divine Truth, by John A. Bowman. (6s. Partridge & Co.) In thirty chapters the author deals with law and grace, sin and salvation, justice and mercy, atonement and punishment, life and death. The "new setting" is in harmony with Scripture as to the seriousness of life, the awfulness of sin, and the judgment following unforgiven transgression. The book shows considerable independence in thought and treatment. It is not severely theological in style, nor is it precisely systematic; but it will undoubtedly serve a useful purpose as a popular introduction to the study of Christian doctrine.

Floral Fancies. By E. L. Williams. (G. Stoneman.) This booklet brings out some sweet lessons from familiar flowers.

Mr. John Thomson's book, Through China with a Camera, is to be published at once. A welcome volume at this stage of the Far Eastern question.

A useful household book is Marcus Ward's Housekeeper's Account Book, adapted for any year, and commencing at any time. (1s. Marcus Ward & Co.)

A large circle of readers will enjoy the recent work of Dr. Wallace, The Wonderful Century. He regards this period as altogether unique, initiating a new era.

The Tangled Skein: stimulating and comforting lines for the New Year, by Lady Coote, Ballyfinn House, Ireland, printed as a leaflet on toned paper. (R. Stewart, Dublin.)

The two books "crowned" by the "Academy" literary award for 1897 are Mr. Stephen Phillips' Poems, and Mr. W. Ernest Henley's Essay on Burns: the former receiving 100 guineas, the latter 50 guineas.

The National Protestant Church Union has issued Sacrifice or Sacrament? An inquiry concerning the nature of the Lord's Supper, by Rev. E. Seeley, of Leicester (2d.). We are thankful for its candid and spiritual tone.

The Life of Christ, by Dean Farrar. Messrs. Cassell & Co. complete, with part ix., "The Life of Christ," and commence, "The Life and Work of St. Paul." Together, the two will form a portly and valuable volume.

Through Tibet Unknown is the title of Captain Wellby's forthcoming book, describing his journey with Lieutenant Malcolm from Leh to Peking. In the light of recent development in the East this work will be of wide interest.

Time; Its Dispensations and its Rivers. By John Cox. (6d.) (Houlston & Sons.) A dispensational study, with diagram of the four rivers which issued from Paradise, as illustrating God's dealings with man. It will be of much interest to all students of prophecy.

The Cabmen's Weekly Messenger is a new paper, started by Mr. F. Parker. (Southern Publishing Co., Brighton.) Intended for circulation among cabmen and omnibusmen, it contains both Gospel and general matter, tersely put in a style these men will appreciate.

A new venture is the Welsh Pulpit, issued by Evan Rees, Bridge-street, Cardiff, giving sermons by leading Welsh preachers, and varied useful expository matter. Another fresh issue is the Newspaper Owner and Manager (Electric Publishing Co., Forest Gate), dealing with professional and technical matter.

Christian Endeavourers will welcome the Year Book for 1898, which has been compiled and edited by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, sec. of the National Council of the C. E. Union of Great Britain and Ireland. The little book is full of information, including topic thoughts for the entire year. (6d. Sunday-School Union.)

Temperance Notes.

THE practice of serving children with liquor "to be consumed off the premises" is said to be reviving in the Manchester district.

At an East End inquest last week, evidence was given that men earning thirty shillings a week are in the constant habit of spending from one third to one half of their wages in strong drink.

It is said that the introduction of a State monopoly of the sale of spirituous liquors which is shortly to take place will entail the closing of 353 restaurants and several hundred wine shops in St. Petersburg.

The Burnley Football Club is seeking to eke out its income by selling drink on the ground during matches. A full bench of magistrates has, however, refused to grant an application for a two-hour licence on match days.

In connection with the Jubilee of the Band of Hope, 10,000 sermons on the subject of Temperance were preached in this country and the Colonies. The efforts to obtain a million new adherents have been largely successful.

Following up the strong position he has assumed with regard to Sunday closing, it is announced that the Primate has consented to preside at the annual meeting of the London United Temperance Council on the 31st inst.; when stirring speeches in favour of this agitation for England are expected.

Rev. G. A. Bennetts, secretary of the Wesleyan Temperance Committee, is anxious that all the Churches should co-operate this year in a Sunday closing campaign. A gigantic petition movement is to be inaugurated. The effort is to be undertaken from the temperance and religious point of view.

The London Temperance Hospital, Hampstead-road, N.W., has issued a strong appeal for financial help. It is stated that during the twenty-three years of the Hospital's existence 12,809 in-patients have been treated, of whom only twenty had alcohol administered. The deaths have been 834, or 6·7 per cent. only.

During the year 1897 Mr. Tennyson Smith has conducted twenty-four temperance missions in England and Wales, and has secured over 11,000 signatures to the pledge, the record number at any one mission being 1653 taken at Llanelly, South Wales. A large number of drunkards have been reclaimed and led to the Saviour.

By direction of the Manchester Watch Committee a circular has been issued to the City Police Force warning all members of the force of the very grave views entertained by the Watch Committee with regard to the offences of being drunk, and of being in public or beer houses when on duty, or when off duty in uniform, and stating that a repetition of the offence is likely to be met by either an order to resign or summary dismissal.

On the afternoon of January 14 a New Year's temperance prayer-meeting was held by the Women's Total Abstinence Union at the Friends' Meeting House, St. Martin's-lane. Miss Borton, of Snaresbrook, and Mrs. Lorrimer delivered earnest addresses. Mrs. A. D. Philps also addressed the meeting, the keynote of which was "Forward." The attendance was good, and a deeply devout and fervent spirit pervaded the meeting.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily Telegraph writes:—Temperance cafés are about to be opened here by the Ligue Anti-Alcoolique, whose members have modelled their organisation on the lines of similar establishments in England. In some of the temperance taverns beer, wine, and cider will still be allowed, but spirits will be rigidly excluded. The temperance people are energetic in their new crusade against the excessive absorption of the brandy doled out in petits verres, and of the absinthe served in tumblers.

The Leeds Mercury remarks that, "During the present Assizes," said Mr. Justice Phillimore, "I have had it borne in upon me, and burnt into my soul, more than I had ever thought, to what an extent crime is due to drink." This is the kind of utterance that the public have heard from the lips of judges so often that to-day it passes almost unheeded. If every judge on the Bench were to be examined before the Committee now inquiring into the working of the licensing system, they would say, in the language of Mr. Justice Phillimore, that the connection between drink and crime had been burnt into their souls.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

Church of England.

The appointment of Prebendary Salmon as Archdeacon of Wells is highly praised.

The Church Army are taking steps to provide a motor mission-van to attend fairs.

The Bishop of Durham on Wednesday week entered upon his seventy-fourth year.

Rev. A. J. Showell, B.A., curate of Christ Church, Chelsea, has been nominated to the chaplaincy of Compiègne, France.

The Bishop of Worcester has chosen as one of the subjects for discussion at his Ruridecanal Conference, "The Attitude of the Church towards Nonconformity."

The British and Foreign Bible Society is likely to receive over £30,000 under the will of the late Rev. E. Norman Pochin, the recently-deceased vicar of Barkby, Leicestershire.

The Archbishop of York, in a pastoral letter, says there is at the present time a restless seeking after something new, in the vain hope that religious life will be promoted under altered circumstances and by different means.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man has barely escaped a fatal injury. He was watching woodcutters felling a tree, when it unexpectedly came down, one of the branches striking the bishop on the shoulder, inflicting severe bruises.

The Archbishop of Canterbury preached at St. Saviour's Collegiate Church on Friday in connection with the Head Master's Conference. On Wednesday he visited the London Hospital, in connection with the London Hospital Christian Association, and delivered an address to the students.

The death of Rev. C. E. S. Collingwood removes one of the most distinguished alumni of Durham University, a man of great culture, yet singularly unassuming and devout. For over thirty years he devoted himself to the hard task of reaching Southwick parish. He never abandoned his Evangelical principles.

Congregational.

Bishopsgate Chapel has been renovated and reopened for service.

Rev. Aubrey Matson has been recognised at Shipdham, Norwich.

Mr. Joseph Osborne, B.A., has been ordained at Bethesda, Runcorn.

At Chadwick Mount, Liverpool, an increase of fifty members is reported for last year.

Sir Robert Henry Symes, Mayor of Bristol, one of the new knights, is an "old boy" of Taunton Independent College.

Square Church, Halifax (Rev. E. A. Lawrence) reports 499 members, of whom twenty-eight have been received during the year.

Rev. Harry Scott, of Enfield, formerly of New Guinea, has been appointed assistant home secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Greenfield Church, Bradford (Rev. T. Rhondda Williams), reports 406 members, as compared with 207 at the commencement of the present pastorate nine and a-half years ago.

A series of sermons to young men is being given on Sunday evenings in his chapel at Islington by Rev. W. Hardy Harwood. At the conclusion of the service a social hour is given in the lecture hall.

In the first six months' work at Paddington Chapel of Rev. J. Ossian Davies, about sixty new members have been added, and hold is being gained of an increasing number of young men.

The people's class, Ipswich, conducted for many years by Mr. D. Ford Goddard, M.P., reports that the average Sunday afternoon attendance was 150 last year, the highest attendance being 630.

Principal Cave, presiding at the meeting of the Congregational Board at the Memorial Hall on Tuesday, thanked the ministers for electing him deputy-chairman, an honour which they conferred upon him ten years ago, so that he had the privilege of visiting the Queen as their representative in the two Jubilee years. He then delivered an address on "The Need of the Holy Spirit in the Church and in the Christian Life."

Calls.—Rev. Andrew Leggatt, of Great Yarmouth, to Albion Chapel, Hull; Rev. R. D. Wilson to Stockwell Green, S.W.; Rev. W. Reason to New Southgate; Rev. J. McMillan, of Barrow-in-Furness, to Newton Heath, Manchester; Mr. B. G. Theobald to Chorley Old-road, Bolton; (accepted) Rev. John Thomas, of Clevedon, to Dursley.

Resignations.—Rev. Jonathan Evans, of Buckley; Rev. S. Bonds, of Walls, Shetland; Rev. R. Ridler, of Albion-road, Tunbridge Wells.

Baptist.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon has been staying for a few days at Eastbourne.

Forest Fold Chapel, Crowborough, has been re-opened after extensive improvements.

A new chapel is being erected at Tunbridge Wells for the congregation of which Rev. J. Mountain is pastor.

Upton Vale Church, Torquay, reports 588 members, of whom fifty-three were admitted during the past year.

Ilderton-road, Bermondsey, reports a membership of 172, of whom fifteen were received into fellowship on Jan. 2.

The Pioneer Mission has issued The Pioneer Review, edited by Prof. A. McCaig, giving, as organ of the mission, details of the work and workers.

It is thought possible that Rev. Charles Joseph will accept the call to St. Andrew's, Cambridge. At all events, he has resigned his pastorate at Luke-road, Portsmouth.

Dr. Maclaren's Annual Sermon to the Young at Manchester was so largely attended that an overflow service was conducted in the lecture-hall by the co-pastor, Rev. J Roberts.

A farewell meeting has been held at Salem Chapel, Cheltenham, to bid God speed to Miss Jennie Beckingsale, who is leaving for China in connection with the work of the Zenana Society.

Rev. A. J. Edwards, who has for the last eleven years been preaching and doing missionary work in South Africa, has returned to this country with the view of engaging in settled pastoral work.

Calls.—Rev. G. Howard James, of Nottingham, to Wycliffe Chapel, Birmingham; Rev. W. H. Davies, of Grantown, N.B., to Queen-square, Brighton (accepted); Rev. A. Corbet, late of Greenock, to Lansdowne, Bournemouth (accepted); Rev. W. L. Tweedie, to Northcote-street, Stockton-on-Tees; Rev. W. A. Mursell, of Blackburn, to the Coats Memorial, Paisley.

Methodist.

Rev. Owen Watkins, now chaplain at Malta, has been appointed to accompany the British troops up the Nile.

The Wesleyan Missionary Society is arranging a missionary exhibition for March next, in the Memorial Hall.

At Southwark-park chapel a P.S.A. has been commenced, and a band has been trained, which proves very attractive.

Mr. W. Sampson is holding a good mission at Surrey Chapel. Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has had a serious attack of influenza.

At Cardiff on Sunday week Rev. W. R. K. Baulkwill gave the right hand of fellowship to 121 new members as the result of a mission conducted by Rev. E. Jenkin.

The spiritual work at Ridgway Gates Chapel, Bolton, is making quiet but steady progress under the Rev. C. W. Andrews, and meanwhile steps are being taken for the erection of the new mission-hall.

At last week's meeting of the London Wesleyan Council special attention was called to suburban needs. Plumstead, for example, with a population of 40,000, has only one church, and chapel accommodation for 1200.

Rev. Arthur T. Cape, a missionary student, who has had some experience of Army work in connection with the London Garrison during the past twelve months, has been appointed military chaplain among the troops in the North-West Provinces of India.

The sixth report of the Bermondsey Settlement shows that the efficiency of the work has steadily increased. The young men and women who make the Settlement their home are finding it a training ground for various spheres of social service. The religious aspect of the work tends to grow in importance.

Presbyterian.

Rev. T. G. Molyneux, late of Sydney, has been inducted to the pastorate at Vauxhall-road, Liverpool.

Dr. Jackson, Moderator of the American Presbyterian Church, has received a hearty welcome on his visit to this country.

Rev. W. M. Christie writes that he and Dr. Piper have got the mission to the Jews at Aleppo fully organised, and are prosecuting it with great vigour in peace and quietness.

The induction of Rev. George Hanson at Marylebone church is fixed for February 8. Rev. William Park of Belfast, will introduce the new minister on February 13.

The St. John's Wood congregation (Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson) have this year given £681 in aid of the Sustentation Fund. The Sefton-park congregation contributed about £600.

Rev. Archibald Lamont, who has returned from Singapore after eight years' missionaty work among the Chinese there, has been asked to supply the pulpit at Westbourne Grove for two months during the absence of the pastor.

Rev. W. Johnstone, of Clapton, preaching on Sunday, made feeling allusion to the death of Miss M'Alpine, a member of the congregation, who met her death in the Dunbar railway accident while on her way to Scotland to attend the funeral of her father.

Calls.—Rev. Henry King to West Stanley; Rev. W. E. Shaw, of Swansea, to Roath Park, Cardiff (accepted); Rev. J. M. Ferguson, of St. Andrews, Woolwich, to Southend (accepted); Rev. A. Lowe, of Glasgow, to Newcastleton; Rev. Iverach Munro, of Edinburgh, to Canisbay, Caithness; Rev. Joseph Hibbs, of Leslie, to Kilmarnock; Rev. B. Evans, to Penybont, Radnor.

Fallen Asleep.

At Keyingham, near Hull, Rev. EDWARD WRIGHT, formerly of Spalding, in his eighty-eighth year, the oldest minister in the United Methodist Free Churches, his ministry dating from sixty-two years ago, when it commenced at Liverpool.—At Oldham, Mr. JOHN STREET, of Manchester, aged seventy-nine, for long years a friend of the late Richard Weaver.—At the Vicarage, Dalton-in-Furness, Rev. J. M. MORGAN, for forty-nine years vicar of the parish.—At the Vicarage, Tunbridge Wells, on 10th inst., Rev. LEWEN STREET TUGWELL, vicar of King Charles the Martyr, Tunbridge Wells, formerly of the C.M.S. in Metlakahtla, founder and for many years director of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society, aged sixty-two. At the Vicarage, North Finchley, on 9th inst., Rev. HENRY STEPHENS, M.A., for eight years curate-in-charge and twenty-six years vicar of Christ Church, North Finchley, aged sixty-two, deeply regretted.—At Bradford, aged eighty-two, Mr. JOSEPH CLIFF, ironmaster and earnest supporter of Christian work.—At Bournemouth, Mr. THOMAS KITWOOD, J.P., a prominent leader among the Wesleyans.—At Grimsbury, Banbury, while conducting the service in the mission-room, Mr. JOHN MOUSER, who for some years had the oversight of the mission.—At Stannary House, Stainland, Mr. EDWARD WALKER, for sixty years a worker among the Methodists.—At East Cowes, Mr. W. DREDGE, a generous supporter of Christian work, and one of the longest farm tenants of Her Majesty the Queen.—At South Petherton, Mr. W. B. HEBDITCH, who took a deep interest in Christian and mission work.—At Mountmorris, co. Armagh, Mr. LEONARD MCCORKELL, an earnest worker in connection with the Methodist Church.—Rev. JOHN V. B. SHREWSBURY, a prominent Wesleyan minister, and some time a member of the "Legal Hundred," suddenly, on Friday, at his residence, 12, Balmoral-road, Nottingham, at the advanced age of seventy-two; he was an able preacher and an excellent pastor.

Stockwell Orphanage.—The last Sunday in January being the anniversary of the death of C. H. Spurgeon, it is the custom of some Sunday-schools to bring the lessons of his life before the scholars, and to take up a collection for the Stockwell Orphanage, which is so beautiful a memorial of the beloved founder. The president, Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, and the Board of Management are most grateful for the help thus received toward the support of this home and school for 500 fatherless children, who are selected from the most needy applicants without votes, and without regard to class, creed, or locality.

Lighthouse Keepers.—The keepers of our lighthouses and lightships around the British Isles and in the Colonies seem to have more claim on our Christian regard. Many of the men occupy positions of danger, and all have a good deal of leisure time on their hands. Acting on behalf of the Council of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, Miss L. E. Holden-Pike, Winchmore-hill, London, N., is sending through the post to these men reading of a Christian and recreative kind, and will be glad to hear from friends who are interested in such service, or who are willing to aid it by contributions towards the expenses.

A Bunch of Golden Keys.

KEYS are the emblems of authority, privilege and power, and with these Bible keys we can remove every barrier of difficulty, open every door of blessing, every way of life, and every avenue of service. But in order that our young friends may understand these keys clearly, we will place them together in the following order.

1.—THE KEY OF KNOWLEDGE.	Light (1 John ii., 20).
2.—THE KEY OF BLESSING.	Prayer (Matt. xxi., 22).
3.—THE KEY OF LIFE.	Power (Phil. iii., 10).
4.—THE KEY OF SERVICE.	Love (2 Cor. v., 14).
5.—THE KEY OF PATIENCE.	Hope (Col. 1., 27).

The key of knowledge is the light of the Holy Spirit, and by this light we may know our own evil hearts—Jesus as our Saviour, God as our Father, and Heaven as our home. This verse (1 John ii. 20) is the key to all the great secrets of a present salvation. In the third chapter of John's epistle, we see how much we have in Christ Jesus. "We know that He was manifested to take away our sins" (v. 5). "We know that we have passed from death to life, because we love the brethren" (v. 14). "We know that He abideth in us, by the Spirit which He hath given us" (v. 24). "And we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him" (v. 2). The key of prayer can open any lock, and deliver any Peter from prison, and bring any needed blessing (Matt. vii. 8). The key of power is needed every day, and to get into touch with Christ is the only way to be happy (Phil. iii. 10). The key of service is love, and this makes all the other keys work easily and well. It is most useful for fellowship, for testimony, and for service, and the key of patience will help us all through our trials and difficulties. Let us get them all, and use them well every day, then the Master will be glorified in our lives.

Winchester. C. EDWARDS.

East London Tabernacle.

THE annual gathering of the church and congregation of the East London Tabernacle was held on Monday evening, and the goodly attendance showed that the people have held together well since the retirement of Pastor Archibald G. Brown nearly a year ago.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. G. W. OVENDEN, one of the deacons, and from his address it appeared that some step towards calling a minister may be taken at a meeting of members called for Monday next. A spirit of prayer binds the workers together, and, under the blessing of God, there is every prospect of a great future for the Tabernacle.

Mr. R. PINNEY, another deacon, made a statement on behalf of Mr. W. Hossack, church secretary. There are at present 2326 members in full communion, some eighty members having been received during the past twelve months. There is a Sunday-school of 1100 children. Mr. Pinney announced that the orphan homes founded by Mr. Brown would be continued as institutions of the church. Hearty addresses followed by Pastors W. Cuff and A. Douglas Brown.

☞ As it is found that infidels and others send papers to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers should be CAREFULLY READ before being given away.

Happy Valley Mission, Ceylon.—There is at Happy Valley an Orphanage for Waifs and Strays, a Reformatory for lads convicted by magistrates, and several village schools. There are other village schools worked from another centre eleven miles away. Evangelistic work is being carried on in the villages. To help in this work a friend has given me a good magic lantern and lens, but without slides. Any friends who can help us in this way may send slides (either old or new, sets or odd ones, all will be gratefully received) to Mrs. Miles, 26, Stanbury-road, Queen's-road, Peckham, London, S.E.; or direct to Rev. W. H. Rigby, Superintendent, the Happy Valley, Haputale, Ceylon.—Yours sincerely in Christ

FREDERICK JAS. MILES.

DONATIONS
Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, January 17, 1898.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

TREASURER—Alfred Fowell Buxton.
SECRETARY—W. H. J. Hatch.
OFFICES—10, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

This Society exists to develop the INDUSTRIAL ELEMENT in Missionary Operations by associating Manufacturing, Agricultural, and other Industries with the ordinary work of Foreign Missions—financially separate, but linked in close fellowship.

If capital can be Safely Invested in Missionary Industries, it may be reasonably inferred that Christian Capitalists will give the preference to such investments. For further information apply to the Secretary.

LADY MISSIONARIES WANTED.

The Committee of the SOCIETY for PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION in the EAST are anxious to secure the services of several ladies for Japan, India, etc.—Zenana Mission Work, Village Mission and School Work, Classes for Women, etc. Personal piety, love for souls, and good health are indispensable. Private means or friends to help advisable in some of the cases.

Apply by letter, giving the name of a Referee, to Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE & HOME,
WHITECHAPEL, LONDON, E.
ESTABLISHED 1876.
Patron, HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

The primary object of this Institute and Home (which, since it was founded, has had upwards of 6000 Lads in Membership with it) is to supply a counter-attraction to the low Music Halls and other East End resorts for the young, which are so fatal to their social and moral well-being. The need for this class of work among the working Lads of London was never greater than at the present time.

Orphans and Lads from the Country are specially cared for.

The Institute was specially designed and built for the work. The accommodation is very extensive, comprising in addition to Reading Room, Gymnasium, and Swimming Bath, a large Lecture Hall, Twelve Class Rooms and Workshops, Two Dormitories with 34 Beds, and Three Residences for Officers.

The Committee earnestly appeals for the necessary funds to carry on this Practical, Preventive, Productive Philanthropy, the Institute being entirely dependent upon voluntary subscriptions for its support.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

OUR reports will show that the mission being conducted in London by Rev. J. McNeill is answering the most sanguine expectations as to the numbers who flock to hear the Gospel from the lips of this prophet-preacher. We trust and believe also that the blessing given on the Word is real and widespread. Next week the second fortnight's work will begin, with afternoon meetings at St. James's Hall and Exeter Hall; friends in London are specially asked to make known these afternoon gatherings to ladies resident in the suburbs. The evening meetings will be at Westminster Chapel.

Last week the Wesleyan Methodist ministers of Manchester held a "Quiet Day," at which there was some useful consideration of things affecting the minister's own religious life and his efficiency for service. Rev. R. Waddy Moss dealt with the subject of "Heart Culture," and said that ministers need a calm, solid, personal consciousness in themselves that God was with them. He believed that a great opportunity was coming to faithful Methodist preachers, because the change in the theological attitude of the Neo-Anglican party in the Church of England would create a great outcry for strong, hopeful, Evangelical, and experimental preaching. We believe that the opportunity will be open to all who preach Christ and Him crucified with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

It has been announced that the Welsh Nonconformists of London intend to celebrate St. David's Day in future by a great united service in the City Temple, at which some of the leading ministers of the four denominations will take part. This is a return to a long-discontinued custom, and a welcome alternative to the formal "feast" or annual dinner of recent years. It will emphasise the national ideal in its religious aspects, and form another link in the reunion movement, which is needed more in the Principality than in any other part of the Kingdom. There is no centre round which Welsh sentiment can rally more fitly than the Cross of the Redeemer, for there is no land under the sun where its influence has been more profoundly felt or more clearly acknowledged.

What a pity some of our friends cannot get to understand how long prayers kill a prayer meeting!

So spoke the chairman at a recent assembly for special prayer for London, when a mistaken brother had been praying meanderingly till everyone's attention and patience were all but exhausted. The principle of a gathering for prayer should be a short petition to the point on some special matter from everyone present, that each may have the support and sympathy of all in its united presentation. It is highly desirable that only one point should be dealt with at a time, though the same person might pray more than once if occasion offered. Long prayers are for private devotions, and are sadly out of place in public.

The "dull preacher" receives severe treatment in Joyful News, from the pen of Mr. Champness. He attributes much of the failure of Church and School to this type of individual. What is the secret of dulness? There is no excuse for it in the subject which preachers have to deal with. Their message is ever a Gospel of "good news." It is a Divine proclamation—a mystery unveiled, a secret revealed, a promise, and a hope. The reason must lie in the preacher himself. He is either concerned with the truth as a mere system of theology or as an ancient story, or he is himself outside his own message, and tells it as "a tale that is told." The man who has passed the truth through the crucible of his own life and thought, who has tested it, and appeals to others to do so, cannot be dull, however poor his abilities or limited his range. "We speak that which we do know, and testify that which we have seen"—this is the secret that will banish dulness from the pulpit and inattention from the pew.

The British Weekly has instituted an inquiry on the question "Do Christian Endeavour Societies help the Churches?" and has published some of the answers of correspondents. These answers, as may be imagined, are of a very mixed character. Collectively they suggest that the Endeavour, like other societies, are very much what their leaders make them. If the religious enthusiasm and loyalty of the young are wisely directed and encouraged, there should be no question whether they do or do not tend towards strengthening the ministry and the Church life. If run independently, they may finally develop into an indifferent, if not practically hostile, organization. The Guild, or Y.P.S.C.E., or Christian Band which does not naturally recruit the membership of the Church from its own, is not fulfilling its unction.

The strife of political life is often enough keen and selfish, but politicians sometimes teach marvellous lessons of unselfishness and magnanimity which it would be hard to equal in any calling in life. The late Father of the House was a man who could excel in great-heartedness. Cobden wrote of him :—

I know him well, have watched and probed him for eight years, and am ready to swear by him as a true man. I love and venerate him more than he is aware of. I have felt for him what I could not express, because my esteem has grown out of his noble self-denials under trials to which I could not allude without touching a too secret chord. I have trod upon his heels, nay, almost trampled him down, in a race where he was once the sole man on the course. When I came into the House I got the public ear and the Press (which he never had, as he deserved). I took the position of THE Free Trader. I watched him then; there was no rivalry, no jealousy, no repining; his sole object was to see his principles triumph. He was willing to stand aside and cheer me on to the winning goal; his conduct was not merely noble, it was god-like.

We hardly know which to honour most—Villiers, who could so readily acknowledge the value of co-workers; or Cobden, who so frankly admitted the worth of a predecessor. Happy would it be if all Christian service were carried out in a similar spirit.

The autobiography of Joseph Arch, which has been edited by the Countess of Warwick, contains some vivid pictures in the life of that "village Hampden" (Hutchinson and Co.). Particularly beautiful is the insight the volume gives of the intense religious character and the spiritual sentiment of the man. Mr. Stead has touched with a sympathetic pen, in the pages of the Contemporary Review, this side of the agricultural labourers' hero, who says :

I know that it was the hand of the Lord of Hosts which led me that day; that the Almighty Maker of heaven and earth raised me up to do this particular thing; that in the counsel of his wisdom He singled me out, and set me on my feet in his sight, and breathed of the breath of the spirit into me, and sent me forth as a messenger of the Lord God of battles. ...I was but a humble instrument in the Lord's hands.

A hundred men of similar faith could "remove mountains" of crime and vice and oppression still.

Canon Gore's wise words in the Christian World Pulpit contain a home thrust for all who are financially profiting by well-paying companies. The humanitarian, not to say Christian aspect of labour, demands more healthy consideration on the part of shareholders in an age of "limited liability" companies like this. The Canon remarks :

When you are demanding the services of people you are contracting obligations which are also moral. ...That obligation you escape not from, though the employment be indirect. You have taken your shares in some company...and you get your dividend; and by that very fact you are in some measure responsible for inquiring whether those who are employed in that place are being paid a wage on which they can decently live, a wage some way in reasonable proportion to the dividend which you are getting from that generally exceedingly profitable sort of business.

Developments of conscience are always interesting to trace, whether they are seen in individuals or communities; and a book giving a chapter of the history of the Liverpool Slave Trade (Heinemann, London) carries us back again to the change that took place in the mind of John Newton and in that of the nation at large. As for Newton, he came to admit that "custom, example, and interest" had blinded his eyes," but as he followed the light that shone within," custom, example, and interest" could not hold him. He passed into the liberty of a true consistency. There are some things which are now commonly accepted as justifiable from which perhaps we also have to be emancipated. In needs a long look and a clear look and an honest look to tell where custom, example, and interest influence us in a wrong way. It is a hopeful sign when we begin to examine ourselves.

The Irish Roman Catholics evidently think that now is their time and opportunity for pressing for a University in which their faith shall be taught by men of their own creed. They have held a large meeting in Dublin of delegates from representative bodies and public meetings all over the country, as well as of leading citizens of that city. Mr. Lecky, the historian, wrote expressing, among other things, his conviction that—

If they accepted the principle of united secular education, as they appear to do at Oxford, and as they did over a great part of Catholic Europe, there would not be the least difficulty in providing Roman Catholic professors to teach them their own theology and their own ecclesiastical history, and to superintend the performance of their religious duties. In his own opinion such a solution would be incomparably the best, but he fully admitted that this is not a question for Protestants, but is one on which the opinion of Roman Catholic laymen of the class he had indicated ought to be supreme.

Mr. Lecky argued at great length against a sectarian University, but bowed, as we see, to the will of the majority, and the meeting unanimously called on the Government to proceed without further delay "to deal with this important and urgent question." Governments have a way of not being urged when they don't want to do a thing, and of acceding when they do. Time will show their bent.

The Vatican authorities still thirst for worldly rule, and every now and again some intrigue against the kingdom of Italy comes to light. The latest "paper constitution" is a programme for a cantonal republic on the Swiss model, with the Pope at its head. It is published as an article in the principal organ of the Jesuits, Civiltá Cattolica, and is probably semi-official. Though, in the light of history, and in view of human waywardness, there is no saying what may happen in any country, it is certain that the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope would be disastrous to the freedom and well-being of the people of Italy.

Better is little with the fear of the Lord, than great treasure and trouble therewith.

Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith.

These words of the inspired writer found forcible, if painful, illustration in the Tatton-Sykes case last week. It was a sad revelation of incompatibility in married life, of the helplessness of wealth to ensure home-happiness, and of the disastrous effects of the gambling mania, especially when women are among its devotees. The only salutary aspects of these legal exposures is the warnings they contain. Where natural affection and the true sources of joy and peace in the home fail, the door is opened to the most terrible evils. The monotony of a loveless life here led to the excitements of gaming, and these to the evils of deception and forgery, ending in disgrace and exposure. The poor often envy the rich; they would sometimes do so less if they had more knowledge.

Lord Wolseley told the "Old Boys" of the Newport Market School of Refuge, Westminster, at their annual dinner, that the Army was the "noblest profession in the world." This is a sweeping statement from any point of view, and becomes startling in the light of the reason brought forward in proof. If Lord Wolseley were asked to advise any lad as to what was the best thing he could do, he should conscientiously advise him to go into the Army, because it was the only occupation within his knowledge in which a young fellow could look forward to obtaining before he was forty years of age a pension which would be a support to him more or less through life.

This is pretty low ground to take, in view of the claims usually advanced in favour of a military life as to its fostering self-denial and other virtues. If self-interest is to be made a prime motive the moral advantages to a lad in joining the Army are less than ever.

If the School Guardian is correct in a recent statement, we have another danger to our system of elementary education. It has been held for the past twenty years, that School Boards should supply the deficiency in school accommodation in their districts; and that applications for grants for new voluntary schools should not be made unless the School Boards declared that such schools were required. But

This interpretation of the law is, we believe, now completely set aside by the educational authorities, so that Voluntary schools may be built wherever there are people ready and willing to provide the funds, whatever the amount of school accommodation may be which is supplied by the School Board.

Here is a direct inducement to multiply schools needlessly, to waste public money, and to keep alive and extend religious differences in every parish in the country. But how would this work if the Free Churches were also to exert themselves to build schools and safeguard their children from Romish teachings? Would the grants be withheld from them and given to the Romanising schools? This looks like another attempt to capture British children for Rome with the money taken from the citizens' pockets.

A curious experiment in education is reported from Mexico, where an American millionaire is starting a small community for the "extirpation of sin." His method is ingenious, but it has the fatal flaw of ignoring an essential factor. He has collected twenty-four children from the highways and byeways, from city slums, from negro shanties, from adhobe huts, on the principle that though their bodies are of all colours, their souls are yet all "white"; and they are to be brought up under good influence and in innocent ignorance of all evil, in the hope that they will become men and women "pure in spirit, perfect in health, and the progenitors of an ideal race to be." This proceeds on the theory that sin is entirely a matter of environment. It ignores heredity, and particularly the spiritual taint of the race. It is, therefore, doomed to failure. We do not come into the world with "white souls." There are fallen tendencies in all; and if this supreme fact be forgotten, there can never be an "extirpation of sin." It is not in education, but only in redemption, that that hope can be realised.

As the days pass, it becomes more and more difficult to dissociate the Dreyfus mystery from the Anti-Semitic feeling which is growingly prevalent in France. The perplexities of the pitiful business have been enlivened by a remarkable act of heroism on the part of M. Zola, the novelist. In his passionate revolt against the inhumanity of the proceedings, he has courted prosecution in order to force an open trial. With M. Zola's writings no lover of purity could have any sympathy, but his action in offering himself as a martyr on behalf of public justice is a noble one. Whether he will succeed in his purpose, or bring open disgrace on his old age, no one can tell. Just now the whole nation is in a rage against him. But public opinion in France is notoriously fickle, and those who now shout him down may presently be making a hero of him for his courage and magnanimity.

Cretan Christians seem to be in a desperate condition. Pillaged and oppressed so long, the outlook for them is hopeless unless swift help is sent. The Metropolitan of Crete makes a piteous appeal on their behalf in the columns of The Daily Chronicle:—

The homes of the peasants in all the Christian villages round the three towns — about eleven thousand houses in all—have been destroyed or burnt. The orange and olive trees, the main wealth of the country, have been cut down. The vines have been devoured. Nearly all intercourse between the country and the markets in the towns has been stopped.

Let British Christians devise measures for sending succour to these sorely-tried brethren of our common faith? A responsible committee has been formed for collecting subscriptions, which may be sent to Mr. M. Corgialegno, Lombard House, George-yard, Lombard-street, E.C.

A Royal Commission Report has just been published as to the condition of the native races in Fiji. It brings to light forcibly the mixed results of the impact of the civilisation on the native character, and shows that so far the effect of missionary teaching has not resulted in pure benefit. But the remedies suggested are to be carefully noted. The Commission makes some wise hints, such as the abolition of the communal system, sanitary reforms, and other readjustments of social relations. The one adequate remedy, however, does not seem to be noted. The evils complained of are due to an incomplete acceptance of a higher ideal; their abolition will be secured only by a wider and deeper reception of it. Precisely the same is true of our own land. Half-hearted Christianity does not save; it is a "savour of death unto death." A more vigorous missionary crusade—this is the remedy for Fiji, and for all heathendom.

A London vicar established a club where the poorer of his charge could find evening relaxation. A morning paper supplies its readers with the following description of it:—

There were reading-rooms and rooms for chess, draughts, and card-playing. There was a billiard-room, a concert-hall, a skittle-alley; and in a convenient corner there was fixed a snug little bar, with a large-sized beer engine, and a cheerful array of bottles containing the usual restoratives.

For a time, it appears, the club flourished, over 300 members being enrolled. But we are not at all surprised to find, upon the vicar's statement, that—the loafer and the betting-man, of which class there is an appalling number in North Kensington, upset everything...there were some shocking scenes, and finally it got so bad that I was compelled to close the place up.

The place is now remodelled, and although the bar is done away with, "sillt there is no restriction as to the number of drinks." All the games are played on Sunday as on other evenings, "after church hours." Comment is needless when such things are sanctioned under the ægis of the Church of Jesus Christ, in spite of the vicar's assertion that drink was not responsible for the disturbances.

The comparative purity of our police service is a frequent source of self-congratulation with us in view of certain revelations made recently in America and elsewhere. We shall have little reason to indulge in such panegyrics if the exposures at St. Albans of the relations between the liquor trade and the police are repeated elsewhere. It is disquieting in the extreme to hear that at three public-houses they "put out a bottle regularly for the policemen," and that at a certain brewery there is a "certain free tap" from which policemen were always welcome to help themselves. These charges have been found by the Watch Committee to be only too well founded, and the City Council have been obliged to tender their thanks to the minister who drew attention to the matter of "free drinks to the police." The trade interests are behaving somewhat scurrilously in the matter, but they have utterly failed to rebut the charge.

The Last Judgment.

IV.—THE INFLUENCES OF THE JUDGMENT.

By Rev. W. B. Russell Caley, M.A.,
Vicar of Watton, Norfolk.

Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be?—2 Pet. iii. 11, 14, 17.

THE terrors of God are meant to influence for good; fear may prevail where love will not. The thought of an infallible, inevitable judgment, by an All-wise and Holy God, is intended to exercise a very practical influence on our hearts and lives.

God having in infinite mercy not left us in ignorance of this judgment to come, and the character of it, let us consider some of the consequences which should result from this knowledge.

I. It should be Restraining (ver. 11). In worldly affairs, the certainty of detection is one of the surest preventives of crime; how much more should it be so in view of eternal verities!

"All these things shall be dissolved," lit. "are being dissolved." The confidence of the worldling is crumbling beneath his feet, every refuge of lies (Is. xxviii. 15) shall soon be detected. What a restraining thought should this be!

II. It is Purifying (1 John iii. 3). The Word of God reveals the purity of God, it gives us a Divine standard of purity, it shows us God's just requirements, and therefore is intended to have a purifying effect. An old writer says: "It is no more wonder to see a man profane who neglects the word preached, than that he did see his hands foul who never washed them" (cp. John xv. 3).

III. It is Edifying (2 Pet. iii. 14). "Be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace." Aspire after what is lasting and good. The thought of judgment should teach us to value most what will then be most valuable (Heb. xii. 14, 15).

Men often aspire to be great, but not so often to be good. There is sadly little emulation in holiness. People jostle one another on the road to glory, or wealth, or position, but on the way of holiness anyone may go first. Now we envy happiness, not holiness; then it will be reversed. In the light of judgment, holiness is synonymous with happiness.

IV. This thought is Humbling, v. 17. How easily we are led astray! How soon we get deceived! How little will our notions and actions bear that holy investigation! What revelations, what disclosures! Then, "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear" (1 Pet. iv. 18)?

V. This fact is Inspiring (2 Pet. iii. 14. "Be diligent." Lose no chance of doing good, or getting good. Remember omissions will be judged, as well as commissions (Matt. xxv. 26, 27). There will be reward and recognition of work done, and "loss" for neglected opportunities (1 Cor. iii. 14, 15).

VI. It is an Alarming thought. Be wakeful and watchful lest the last great trumpet call find you asleep (1 Thess. v. 6, Rev. iii. 3; xvi. 15; cp. Lk. xxi., 34, 35). A man once said killing a soldier asleep was only leaving him as he found him. Is there not a solemn thought here for Christian workers?

God grant these thoughts of judgment may have a sanctifying influence upon all our lives!

When from the dust of earth I rise
To claim my mansion in the skies;
E'en then shall this be all my plea,
Jesus hath lived and died for me.

Songs in the Night.

THIS key-note was sounded not long ago in the "Daily Homily," and is one of the many strengthening and beautiful watchwords that we have owed to this source during recent years. It has dwelt in my heart and vibrated there, and gradually the motif came, and harmony, and the glorious refrain, "Songs in the night from our God!" May I speak a little more about them? During 1897 there have been many of God's children, footsore and belated, who have looked up to darkened skies. With them it has not merely been a night of which they could count the hours and watch for the morning, but, like St. Paul's experience, only in a more heart-stricken sense, there have been many days wherein no sun or stars appeared. Mrs. Browning was right when she sang;—

Is ever a lament begun
Which, ere it endeth, suits but one?

When night is spoken of as illustrating various forms of trial, are there not many readers who will long to find some words to touch his or her special burden? It may be the keen edge of disappointed affection that cuts deep, and leaves a rooted sorrow that no human hand can pluck from the memory—earthly love, that seemed as secure as the everlasting hills, uprooted by some mysterious visitation, perhaps of mental disease; children tenderly nurtured only to become instruments of torture by misconduct and ingratitude.

Surely any songs in this darkness must be sung in the minor key; but even then they may be sung—first, in chastened gratitude if our conscience, after careful review, acquits us of direct blame; if, in face of disappointments and blights, we can humbly make the appeal to Him who "knoweth": "Lord, I did honestly and prayerfully try to do my best; this great calamity has not come, I hope, through recklessness and neglect, but by thy distinct permission." There are also those who, when lover and friend have thus been put away from them, have felt a Presence in the darkness unspeakably comforting, and have been conscious of the Divine whisper, "Fear not, for I am with thee," and there was even though it did not become vocal on the lips.

The night of bereavement sometimes brings for the time—in its overwhelming sense of loss and anguish—total eclipse to all human joy. But in a season like this I have known one who stood outside the closed doors of a room from which the light of her life had gone, and the cry went up to heaven from a well-nigh broken heart, "Lord Jesus Thou must comfort me, or I cannot bear it!" And though she could not say how the comfort came, it did come, so unmistakably that an intensely grateful "Thank You!" was her song in the night, breathed into the ear of her faithful Lord.

There is the night, too, of disappointing toil; how many earnest workers are wearily looking for the first faint gleam of sunrise! They have toiled all night and taken nothing; they have sowed, but "the rock" has repelled them. They began their work so confidently, but one failure after another has well-nigh taken all heart from them, and they have been seized by the terrible paralysis that is caused by doubt of God. Undeniably there are mysteries in this matter of apparently unsuccessful work that can only be explained in Eternity, but we must also take into account God's supreme care for the character of the worker, and many a delayed harvest may have the same explanation as St. Paul's thorn in the flesh, "lest I should be exalted above measure."

We can sometimes gain much help from the experience of others. Mr. Moody has said that whenever he was discouraged he always read again the story of Noah and his long patience. The Bible is full of preparation work, both in grace and in nature. One thing is as certain as the truths of God, and that is that no genuine work for Him is ever lost. And if hitherto there has been no song in this dark night; if our harps have been kept hanging on the willows hopelessly mute, let us be of good courage; the morning cometh. The same Jesus who came to the poor tired fishermen of Galilee will stand on the shore of our life, and point out to us the right side for casting the net. It may even be when the dawn of Heaven breaks, for many a saint is thus honoured in his death; but, however it may be, let those who are still in the darkness of apparent failure be quite sure that

THEIR REWARD IS WITH GOD.

There is no grove in which God's nightingales sing so sweetly as in the closely-planted one of Providential deliverance. Many a gloomy night has come to the saints here. In a world so full of fluctuation and uncertainty fortune, prospects, friends, health, are all held with a trembling hand, and God's people are in no wise exempt from the common lot of reverse and sore straits; nay, it sometimes seems as if the stirring up of the nest came oftenest to them. But with a wonderful proviso. One of the Psalmist's strong utterances sums up the whole matter. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." They are his lesson books in the school of faith.

The night may be rayless, but one star of promise always shines. "Call on Me; I will deliver." Was ever cheque presented at any bank more sure of payment than this! Which of us has not proved it so? Let that good farmer testify, whose lambs to the value of £25 were worried in one of his fields, leaving the ground bedabbled with their blood. He called on the Lord to deliver him from a deficiency in his rent at Martinmas, and then calmly trusted, despite the gloomy predictions of friends and even of his own wife. The song was given when one morning in August that scene of carnage was dazzling in its whiteness, bearing a crop of mushrooms so abundant, in a season of peculiar scarcity, that it was sold for £70!

The night of death might well be songless, for the valley of this shadow seems no place for music; and yet ever since the Royal singer marched through it with his joyous chant, "I will fear no evil, Thou art with me," it has been vocal with praise and victory. There is no time when the mother's touch is so tender, nor her voice so sweet as when she stoops over her tired child with a good night kiss and blessing, and many a little one is left crooning itself to sleep in the utter content of such mother-love. And God has taken even this loveliest of earth's relationships to illustrate his tenderness. "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." So we may be quite sure about the good-night's comforting when life's day is over and the night has come. Then "the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs."

The Dearth of Conversions.

THERE has been some discussion recently about the dearth of conversions in our churches. This is a very solemn and urgent subject. Is it not the case that in many congregations a decided conversion is a very rare occurrence, and in many more it is never heard of?

Would it not be well for every minister, as he prepares his sermon, seriously to ask himself if it is really the conversion of his hearers that he is aiming at; and if there should be any anxious seeking ones present, hearing it may be for the last time, could they clearly learn from it the way to be saved? Many sermons are not of a kind from which you can reasonably expect conversions. Indeed, the conversion of souls seems to be about the last thing some ministers are thinking of. They seem to assume that all their hearers are a very large and dangerous assumption, surely. The sermons are all truth, but there is a great want of what is strictly saving truth.

The great truths of sin and atonement and the work of the Spirit, instead of being kept prominently to the front, are allowed to fall into the background and to remain out of sight, and when that is the case the preaching must be poor and powerless. The words do not take hold. It is peculiarly the preaching of "Christ crucified," Christ "the Propitiation for our sins," that God blesses to convert and save souls; and may not the dearth of such preaching be one great cause of

THE DEARTH OF CONVERSIONS?

I have been long in the ministry, and it is my deep-growing conviction that the urgent need of our day is a revival of earnest, fervent Gospel preaching, and speaking to the conscience and heart. When Mr. Spurgeon once addressed the Free Assembly in Edinburgh, just before he rose, the time-gun went off at the Castle close by, leading everyone to look at his watch. He said, "That is just how I wish always to preach—in such a way as to lead everyone to look in and see how matters stand with himself."

We need far more of that pointed, searching preaching. The example of Christ and Christian living are much insisted on, and rightly so; but it should ever be kept in mind that we must each, first of all, have to do with Christ as the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," before we can be in a position to take Him as our Example. There must first be Christian life in union with Christ, or there can be no Christian living. And thus things never can be right until there is what has been well called

"THE RETURN TO THE CROSS."

True, the people of God must be fed, but "Christ crucified" feeds, and every ministry ought to be more or less evangelistic. Men must be regarded and spoken to as needing to be converted and saved, and, to a large extent, preaching should have that as its great object and end. The late Professor Smeaton, of Edinburgh, used to say to his students: "Gentlemen, reckon your ministry a failure unless souls are converted to Christ." Richard Baxter's words are as awfully true now as when he spoke them, "You must be converted or condemned." We must have a deeper sense of eternal things, and of our solemn responsibility as set to watch for souls; and far more full and faithful and urgent preaching of Christ. Then there would be less cause to complain of the dearth of conversions.

THE MYSTERIES OF THE KINGDOM.—I.

The mystery of all this unintelligible world.—John Keats.

It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. xiii. 11.

THREE thousand years from Adam, the Preacher was inspired to declare that "the thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun" (Eccl. i. 9). The wisdom of later experience has enshrined the same truth in the aphorism, "History repeats itself."

Another three thousand years have elapsed since the Preacher lived, and there is a considerable consensus of conviction that we are drawing near the close of the present order of things. If this be so, and if halfway back to Adam it had already been revealed that there was even then nothing new under the sun, no new element to be introduced into the complex system of the physical, moral, or spiritual world, then in neither department should the world be an absolutely unintelligible mystery.

If the ancient and widespread theory be true, then the present order of things will have run its course in six working days, accounting a thousand years as one day, then five days and nine-tenths are past, and the close must agree with the general antecedent trend; the crisis must be the outcome of the preceding course of events. Consistently with the past, the coming crisis

MUST BE A CATASTROPHE.

For every crisis in history, national, or local, or individual, has been the filling up of iniquity, and the judgment of God upon the sinful community, or nation, or person. This principle was declared by God, the Great King, the Judge of all the earth, when He said to Abraham his friend: "In the fourth generation thy seed shall come hither again: for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full" (Gen. xv. 13-16). The principle was manifested in action when the flood swept away the inhabitants of the former world; when at Babel God confounded the language of all the earth; when Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed; when Israel was sent captive to Babylon; when Nebuchadnezzar was driven from men to eat straw with oxen; when Jerusalem was destroyed and the Jews were scattered into the four corners of the earth. And the sure prophetic Word informs us that Satan (whom Jesus foresaw like lightning fall from heaven as the result of his atoning death) shall be cast into the bottomless pit for the thousand years; and after a brief respite, in which he proves himself shall be cast into the lake of fire.

In addition to these data, which all (except the last, referring to Satan) are accomplished and indubitable history, we have the character and destiny of the Jewish nation described in history and foretold in prophecy; we have the rise, decline, and fall of the Gentiles (during "The Times of the Gentiles") depicted (1) from the point of view of the Gentile monarch in Nebuchadnezzar's dream; and (2) from that of God's prophet in Daniel's vision of the four mystic, composite wild beasts, which strove on the Great or Mediterranean Sea—the fourth monarchy being in each case succeeded by the kingdom of the Son of Man (Dan. ii., vii.; Luke xxi. 24).

The Son of Man Himself foretells the condition of the world when He comes. In the question, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" He implies what the state of his professed followers in the main will be. And in plainer terms he declares the condition of the world by comparing it to the days of Noah and the days of Lot (Luke xviii. 8; xvii. 26-30).

We learn from the conference at Jerusalem, that God, during this period between the first and second coming of our Lord, is taking from among the nations

A PEOPLE FOR HIS NAME.

Jesus shows in the fundamental parable of the Sower, that the seed by which this is effected is the Word of the kingdom; and in the two triads of explanatory parables which follow, He outlines the character of this his Church from without and from within, just as in the Book of the Unveiling the epistles to the seven churches exhibit the worldly spirit in the church, and the subsequent portion shows the Church as Christ's witness in the world, in the past, the present, and the future (Matt. xiii.; Acts xv.; Rev. passim).

The apostle Paul says that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith through the hypocrisy of those who speak lies; and that in the last days perilous times shall come, when "Men shall be lovers of their own selves," with all the pernicious results of this; "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof." Peter foretells that scoffers will ask "Where is the promise of his coming?" while, again, Paul speaks of a Man of Sin, a Lawless One, one in whom the ancient lie, "Ye shall be as God," reaches its final consummation, when he "sits in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God" (1 Tim. iv. 1-3, 2 Tim. iii. 1-5, 2 Pet. iii., 2 Thess. ii.).

Whether this final manifestation of fallen humanity be the Papal system, or the coming individual Antichrist, we need not discuss. Rome Pagan and Rome Papal have contributed, with Mohammedanism and every form of ancient and modern heathenism, to form the stream of anti-Christianism, which culminates in the Man of Sin, of enmity to God and usurpation of his throne. Nor can anti-Christianity be confined to the evil systems we have named. Its elements exist wherever man is found; for in its last analysis the real Antichrist is Self—the self-will of man led captive by the devil at his will.

But though Satan and man have usurped, God has never abdicated the throne. Nor has his Spirit ever left the earth. The seven lamps of fire, which are the sevenfold Spirit of God, have ever burned before the throne. The seven horns of power and the seven eyes of wisdom, which are the seven Spirits of God, have been sent forth without ceasing into all the earth. And since the justifying death and resurrection of the Son of God have made it possible for the Spirit to be outpoured without measure unto men, the river of life has flowed from the throne of God and of the Lamb, that whosoever will may take the water of life freely (Rev. iv. 5, v. 6, xxii. 17).

With all these varied prophetic and historic data before our eyes, we ought not to be satisfied to speak, with the dying poet, of "the mystery of all this unintelligible world." It is given unto us to understand the "mysteries of the kingdom of heaven." "Every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth out of his treasure things new and old."

The next paper will be an endeavour to show how we may become scribes instructed unto the kingdom of heaven and of God.

God's Methods with Man:

Past, Present, and Future.

BY REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

III.—THE COMING OF CHRIST.

ALL Christian people are looking for the Millennium. It is an integral part of the creed of the Church of Christ that Jesus shall reign where'er the sun

Doth his successive journeys run.

While all agree as to the fact of the great future event which constitutes the hope of the world as well as of the Church, yet there are differences of opinion concerning the time and conditions of its accomplishment. My one desire is to point out what I sincerely believe to be the teaching of the New Testament concerning this most interesting part of our study. Probably the most popular view in current theology is that the world will be won for Christ by the preaching of the Gospel; and that, after a thousand years of perfect earthly blessedness, Christ will come to judgment. Some two hundred years ago, however, that view had no existence, for it was generally believed in Christ's Church that the Millennium will be ushered in by his coming.

Turning from both past and present theology to the Word of God, we find in Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians, i. 9, words which describe the Christian attitude in his day, "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven"—the believer's position, with regard to the past, the present, and the future. This embraced repentance toward God, and a consistent Christian walk; while, shining in beauty upon the daily path, there was that bright hope which maketh not ashamed. On account of the source from which it comes, Professor Denney's book dealing with the Epistle to the Thessalonians is perhaps one of the most remarkable among recent contributions to the theological discussion of our subject. Therein he emphatically declares that the hope of the Church in Paul's day was most unmistakably grounded in the near return of Christ; and that when such hope was lost, from Christian character. Thousands of God's people to-day have turned from idols and are serving the living God, in the measure which is possible when the waiting for the Son from heaven is either forgotten or denied; but, alas! has not the Church of Jesus Christ, as a whole, lost the bright hope of his coming?

THE BLOOM PASSED AWAY

Without attaching undue importance to figures, we may notice in passing that the New Testament has no less than 318 direct references to the coming of Jesus Christ; and one verse in twenty-five bears upon that blessed hope of the Church. In these two letters to the Thessalonians, as the portion of the New Testament which specifically deals with the subject, one verse in four has direct relation to the return of the Master.

Something must here be said as to the authority of the New Testament in this connection. A man of undoubted culture and spiritual devotion told me that the return of the Lord is only a beautiful dream; that Paul believed it when he wrote to the Thessalonians, but that absence of direct reference to the subject in his letter to the Galatians shows that he had since outgrown the belief—an appalling position with regard to the inspiration of the New Testament! Now, all Paul's Epistles were called forth by the necessities of local circumstances, and in the instances referred to he sought, in the one case, to correct false views of the Lord's return, and in the other to counteract enslavement to Judaism. My friend might as well contend that, had Paul lived ten years longer, he would have outgrown his view of Christian liberty, as declared in his letter to the Galatians! Even when death seemed imminent, the apostle still lived in the belief that his Master would come again.

Amid the embarrassing richness of a many-sided subject, let us turn to the seven parables of the kingdom in Matthew's Gospel. Do any or all of them show that this dispensation is one in which the whole world will be gathered into the kingdom of God? Careful examination affords evidence that such is not their teaching, whether we take them singly or collectively. The first four parables which deal with outward manifestations in this dispensation were spoken to the multitude, two being afterwards explained to the disciples; the last three view things from a Divine standpoint, and can only be fully understood by those who are linked by life to the King, and so were spoken to the disciples alone. In the seed sowing of the first two parables, fruit-bearing and failure, mixture and separation, are clearly marked. By the mustard seed growing to a tree, we are simply taught that Christendom becomes a great power of force; and I offer it as a point of personal conviction that the fowls of the air are indicating the corruption of even Christendom itself in this dispensation.

Much stress has been laid upon the parable of the leaven as teaching that Christianity must gradually win the whole world to Christ; but this parable runs parallel in its instruction with the preceding ones. The symbolism of the Bible is never self-contradictory; and leaven is, in Scripture, uniformly typical of evil. It can scarcely be called fanciful interpretation if we say that the woman who uses the leaven represents the whole system of ecclesiasticism, with its corrupting and evil influence upon the entire Church of Jesus Christ as a manifestation of the Kingdom in this dispensation.

Of the three parables spoken to disciples alone, the second may be taken in conjunction with the first. The man buying a field, and the merchantman seeking goodly pearls, are commonly regarded as pictures of the sinner seeking Christ; but this view is sufficiently contradicted by the fact that no purchase on man's part is possible in connection with God's scheme of redemption. Christ is the divine Merchantman who emptied Himself of his glory, made Himself of no reputation, and purchased us with his own blood; and, wonder of wonders, mysterious grace, He only can understand wherein the Church is his pearl of great price. Not only has He bought the hidden treasure; but the whole world, the field in which it lies, is his by redemption. In it He has other victories to win; though his special work in this dispensation is, as we have seen, to GATHER OUT HIS HIDDEN CHURCH.

In further illustration of this latter point, see the last of the parables spoken by Christ to his workers, concerning the great Gospel net which is to enclose both good and bad until the time of separation at the end of this age.

The foregoing rapid sketch leaves much for prayerful meditation. The main thought, however, is that our age does not issue in the conquest of the world for Christ, but in the gathering out of an elect remnant, leaving for a succeeding era another divine work full of significance and of blessedness. The symbolism of our chart, in red, gold, purple, and divided tongue of fire, has been already explained. And now what wait we for? The return of the Lord Himself.

In 1 Cor. xi. 26, we have the phrase that bounds the table of the Lord; and as we sometimes sing:

Thus that dark betrayal night
With the last advent we unite,
By one bless'd chain of loving rite,
Until He come.

The conflict of the Church and of the believer is to last until Christ's appearing, or Epiphany—a word used only by Paul. How long is patience to have its perfect work? "Unto the coming of the Lord" (James v. 7). How long am I to serve? "Occupy till I come" (Luke xix. 13). When am I to be crowned? The Apostle Paul says at the Epiphany (2 Tim. iv. 8). When shall we enjoy re-union with departed loved ones? When "the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout" (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17). Whatever you think of as characteristic of Christian life and service in this age, you find to be bounded, in the New Testament, never by death, always by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. No man knoweth the hour of Christ's coming, save the Father only; but the one bright hope of faithful Christian hearts is ever this—

THE LORD HIMSELF SHALL COME.

Paul's first Epistle to the Thessalonians marks a most distinct difference between the hope of the Church, or the coming of Christ for his people, and the apocalypse of Christ, or day of the Lord—the coming of Christ with his people. Chap. iv. 16, 17 is a passage which no one can possibly confound with the thought of death. It is not death to which we shall go, but to the Lord Himself, who is to "descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." The next chapter begins, "But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write to you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." Here is a very distinct difference between the "coming" and "the day" of Christ. True, the day of the Lord is, in one sense, begun by his coming; but it is a whole period which stretches out beyond that coming, the Millennium itself being included in the phrase.

After the resurrection the disciples asked Jesus "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" and He replied, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons." This expression is no haphazard one, but, in the mouth of Jesus and from the pen of the apostle, refers to the whole providential arrangement marked out by God from beginning to end, and upon which this present dispensation is certainly there is no measurement for the latter in Scripture. Continual pushing on and pulling back of dates has done more than anything else to bring this blessed truth into discredit. The duration of this age being known only to God, his redeemed ones are to be ever living according to his will, with eye upon its consummation—the coming of the Master.

The people of Thessalonica misinterpreted Paul's first Epistle, thinking that, because they were in tribulation, the day of Christ had come. He, therefore, writes a second letter, wherein he corrects this error, showing how that day must be preceded by certain signs, and that the Church, waiting for her Lord, will not pass through the tribulation. In the opening verses of Chapter ii. (R.V.) is a further wonderfully clear and concise distinction between the "coming" and "the day" of Jesus Christ. Before that day dawns, the final apostasy is to be inaugurated by the revealing of the Man of Sin—not a system, but an individuals Paul tells us that this "mystery of lawlessnes. doth already work: only there is one that restraineth now, until he be taken out of the way." Surely, to make Rome that restraining power would be setting evil to hinder evil. No, it is the Holy Spirit of God who is restraining and checking the individualisation of lawlessness. But when the Church shall be withdrawn from among men, the Holy Ghost will depart with it; and then shall the unchecked mystery of iniquity be manifested and focussed in one who will assume the very place of Christ in God's temple.

My simple aim has been to set forth Christ's coming as for which his Church should look. I stay but a moment to deal with a common misrepresentation of the truth. Some will say, "God is being beaten, inasmuch as comparatively few are gathered into his Church." That is a very short-sighted view. Men may not realise that their passionate desire for the dawn of a golden age is excited by the preaching of the Gospel; but in order that this longing of humanity may be satisfied, the Church must be taken away to allow of sin working out its full and most fearful manifestation. Then shall Christ appear with his people, to destroy Antichrist by the brightness of his coming, and to set up his golden reign upon the earth.

Lessons from Dust.

BENEATH the surface of the commonest objects and facts can be found—by him who digs sufficiently deep—a profound lesson. We may expect this: the God of Nature is also the God of Grace. For that very reason nature continually illustrates grace.

Look at those ragged fellows sweeping up the refuse of the streets. This word "refuse" denotes its supposed uselessness. Until science came to our aid, we too supposed those sweepings to be of no value. Yet the thoroughfares of Spitalfields are brightly illuminated with electricity generated by that which has been "refused" as rubbish, as worse than useless.

In every man there is the wing as well as the hand. The vilest, the most degraded, the most abandoned, has something of the divine in him. He has a soul which grace can reach, powers which God would use, and a face which the Saviour's love can transform. Perhaps the sweepings of the streets to-day may to-morrow be used to bring light and salvation to dwellers in darkness. In some animals there is what is called a rudimentary wing. When salvation comes to a sin-laden heart, it finds a soul capable of, made to receive, the Saviour, and the rudimentary pinion is developed into the strong and yet stronger wing which shall bear its glad possessor upwards.

A respectable artisan invited me down to his cellar-workshop. He was a gold-chaser. On every side lay scattered delicate instruments for embossing the precious metal. It resembled the laboratory of an alchemist.

"I always burn my aprons," said he.

"And why?" I asked in astonishment.

"The gold sticks to them. They get full of it. No washing, or shaking, or brushing would get it out. So we put them into a crucible. The gold sinks to the bottom."

There is gold dust in the dirty apron. No other method avails to separate it but fire. The heavenly crucible must receive us. The Fire of God alone can disentangle the precious from the useless. We might so easily be mistaken, and despise, fling away, and pass by what needed but the grace of God to reveal as possessing pure gold within it.

For many weeks the running sore in a man's leg refused to heal. It resisted all home remedies, and a doctor was called in. He saw a grain of dirt had crept into the wound. This had set up irritation, and until it was dislodged there could be no permanent cure.

Single small sins bore like gimlets into the spiritual life, and suffer it to leak away drop by drop. And, in time, from a very minute hole, as surely as a larger opening, the fluid contents of the largest vessel will escape.

A man with a strange sort of stand tramps our neighbourhood. For a long while I wondered as to its use. He generally took up his position near the butcher's shop. At last I caught him at work. On the top of his stand is fixed a vice, which firmly grasps the butcher's saw, while my friend sharpens its teeth. Specs of steel fall from his file, and the saw lost in material what it gained in real usefulness.

The butcher tried it.

"That 'ull do," said he. "Now give t'other one a toucher up. They gits blunt so soon."

We do. God uses us, and we are lifted up. Pride blunts the once keen edge. The file of small trials and troubles is necessary if we are not to be thrown aside as useless.

"Authority in Religion." is the subject of a short course of lectures to be delivered by Rev. T. H. Darlow, M.A., at the Friends' Institute, Bishopsgate-street. The syllabus includes such burning questions as the Authority of Revelation, of Scripture, of the Church, and of the Spirit.

Great Social Evils.

IN connection with the special crusade now being carried on in London against these great evils—Drink, Impurity, and Gambling—a largely-attended demonstration was held on Thursday evening, in the Paddington Baths Hall, W., arranged by Mr. W. Wild, of the Bayswater Y.M.C.A.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN, who presided, said that the object of the meeting was to reach those who are more or less under the influences of those great enemies of body and soul, impurity, intemperance, and gambling—the great evils which peculiarly beset young men. He wished to urge emphatically that a man who gives way to any of these sins does himself incalculable injury. Upon this practical view of the case he insisted strongly, while he also took the higher ground that those who yield in these respects sin against God and wrong their own souls.

Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR appeared to raise a protest against that great national evil—intemperance. It could not be denied that the hold drink has taken upon our people is a tremendous calamity. The number of deaths directly due to drink is about 60,000 per annum, but it is safe to say that at least as many more are due indirectly to intemperance. This vice is also responsible for widespread misery; for while poverty is one cause of drink, drink, on the other hand, produces poverty. Intemperance is both a national evil and a national disgrace, and this the speaker proved in a series of glowing passages, burning with righteous indignation. After some bits of personal experience in Scotland among the slaves of this habit, he urged all present to take the only safe and manly course—to give it up once and for all, and take the Lord Jesus as Saviour and Keeper. Committed to Him, lives now ruined by sin will be transformed into a joy and a blessing.

Dr. MONRO GIBSON maintained that, while drink is the most open and apparent evil, and impurity a loathsome demon of the dark, gambling (on which he was asked to speak) is the most insidious of the three. While possibly (although he himself was a total abstainer) something might be said for certain use of strong liquor, for gambling and betting nothing at all could be said with any show of reason. The whole system must be swept away, root and branch. If any doubted this, let them think of the river of life and fortune poured into this abyss of ruin. It is, he showed by startling facts, a folly amounting almost to imbecility. Moreover, gambling is a sin against God in every phase of it. No one can gain one penny in this way without wronging his neighbour and violating the law of God. After showing that it is a breach of the sixth and tenth commandments, the speaker proved that it really breaks every one of the Ten Commandments. In this he included gambling on the Stock Exchange just as much as on the racecourse and in bazaar raffles. He would make it a criminal thing for bookmakers or newspaper editors to aid and abet any form of betting and gambling.

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE felt that the delicate theme entrusted to him could only be properly dealt with in the light of the Word of God. Hence he read Eph. v. 3-5, showing its searching and unflinching character, and indicating the horror of certain loathsome vices. Dealing with impurity, he drew an appalling picture of the ruin inflicted on the weaker sex. A startling instance of this he had met with during the past few weeks. From this he passed to the positive side of the question—the joy and glory of being "pure in heart," abhorring evil and rejoicing in good; and closed with a passionate appeal for the acceptance of Christ in whom a man is "a new creature," and may learn "the practice of the presence of God," and discover "the expulsive power of a new affection." To enslaved ones he would say, "Brothers, there is One who can give deliverance. Will you have it from Him?"

Aged Christian Blind Men and Women.—The Southend branch of the Homes for aged Christian blind, which is now being established for the blind and their guides, the partially blind, and those who work on their behalf, will be opened the last week in April. To free the property from all liability the sum of £550 is still needed. We are intensely anxious to raise this amount before the day of opening. During the last year forty of our inmates were taken down to our temporary Home for change, with the most gratifying results.

Ipswich United Meetings.

THE monthly meetings for the deepening of spiritual life in Ipswich have, through good report and ill, been regularly held for a year and a half. The many tokens of good done, both directly and indirectly, fill our hearts with thankfulness for the past and hopeful expectancy for the future. The convener of the meetings, Mr. Clarkson Piper, is careful to secure the services of men who have a definite message to deliver. Visits have been paid by the Rev. F. B. Meyer, C. G. Moore, Darlow Sergeant, R. Middleton, W. Houghton, and Dr. Harry Guinness, and clear and timely were the messages they brought. Many Christians have been noticed listening with the eagerness of hungry men, and, as the deeper significance of the old truths dawned upon them they have realised a new joy in living and a new power for service.

We believe a breath of new life is stirring our churches in Ipswich. During the "week of prayer" the prayers seemed more pointed and definite. May not this have some connection with the faithful dealing with Christians month by month? And also with the large "Prayer Union"? Although many still hold aloof whom we yet hope to see with us, yet a real unity is manifest, and all sections of the Church of Christ are represented. The last meeting was taken up mainly with God's work among the Jews. Rev. S. H. Wilkinson gave testimony of things he had seen and known during his fourth visit to Russia. God's purposes in this ancient people will henceforth be more earnestly and intelligently followed by all who had the privilege of listening to Mr. Wilkinson. T. A. C.

Expectans Expectavi.

Ps. xl. 1, 2.

I would be thy good child, Lord,
Tranquil-hearted, patient, still,
Waiting till I hear thy word,
Till I know thy will.

Once again the path is lost,
Blackest darkness covers all,
Storm-seas near are wildly toss'd,
Storm-winds, mocking, call.

Lord, I cannot turn me back,
All the past is wholly gone,
Yet no faintest, glimmering track
Leads my footsteps on.

What will please Thee, Lord, the most?
Shall I move, or meekly stand?
Thou above the shining host
Viewest all the land.

I am in obscurity,
Earth and sky are closely veiled—
O, dear Lord, enlighten me,
Other lights have failed.

Thoughts for Parents.

The fruit of the Spirit in relation to child-training.

The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance (self-control)...If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.—Gal. v. 22, 23-25.

Do not teach your child that he is a body and has a spirit. Teach him, rather, that he is a spirit and has a body.

LOVE.

Love is of God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love (1 John iv. 8).

Love is always self-surrender and sacrifice.

Human love, however sacred, may perish. Parents see that you feed that flame of love which God has kindled between you and your children; warm your home with the fire of love.

Unkind words, harsh judgments, issuing from parents' lips, poison the sweet waters of home life.

Seek to maintain the rule of love as a principle, not fitfully, as instinct suggests.

Do not be afraid of telling your children that you love them. Some would die for them, but would not tell them so with loving sympathy.

By your love draw your children to God. Love inspires, and inspiration is the secret of training.

Watch and pray against every sign of a selfish or unloving spirit in your children, as a seed which will bear bitter fruit.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, January 30.

"And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon Me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn."—Zech. xii. 10.

THE fulfilment of these words is evidently future. A time is undoubtedly coming when the Jews shall recognise that Jesus is their brother. That scene in Joseph's palace, when he made himself known to his brethren, and they looked on him whom they had cast into the pit and mourned with bitter tears, shall be literally enacted before the eyes of the world. The prophet tells us that this great reconciliation will take place, when their foes will be in the siege against Jerusalem; from which we infer that they will be restored to their own land in unbelief, but will be led to recognise Jehovah-Jesus when He comes to their relief. "Behold, He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him." (Rev. i. 7.)

But the interesting point for us to notice is the precise place in which their mourning breaks out with its exceeding great and bitter cry. It is after they have been saved, after they have been engirded with strength, after their foes have been destroyed (7-9). Then the sluice-gates of sorrow are opened, and the bitter tears gush forth. They look on Him whom they pierced, and mourn. This is the true place of penitential grief. It was when the woman had been already forgiven that she loved much, and covered the Lord's feet with tears and kisses.

Do not chide yourself if your sorrow for sin is meagre and belated. This is quite likely to be the case, until you have deeper experience of the love of your dear Lord. But the more you know Him, and understand what your sin has cost; the more you see it in the light that streams from his dear face; the more you gaze on the piercings of his heart, the more you will mourn, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn. Pour on me this grace, O Lord, and give me this brokenness of heart!

MONDAY, January 31.

"Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of Hosts: smite the Shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered."—Zech. xiii. 7.

There is no uncertainty as to the application of these striking words. On the eve of his death our Lord appropriated them to Himself. To his troubled disciples, was He not the shepherd, and they the little flock? (Matt. xxvi. 31).

He was a shepherd, true, steadfast to his Father's charge. There is a special emphasis in the pronoun my: since the Father had given over to his care a number of souls, who were his, but whom He committed to the Son with the charge that He should lose none, but raise all of them up at the last day.

But He was more than shepherd. He was Jehovah's fellow, in all the plans of creation, providence, and redemption.

My shepherd, saith the Almighty; and my fellow. But, O my soul, stand still and wonder: He who was all this became also a man! What an astonishing combination: "The man that is my fellow." The mediator between God and man was Himself man.

But listen to that appeal to the sword of Divine justice. It had slept. Even since the sin of Eden it had remained quiet and unavenging. The pledge of the Son to come in the fulness of time, met all its demands. But, when He came, it awoke. He was made sin for us: He bore the penalty of our transgression: He was led as a lamb to the slaughter and slain. And now, O sword of Divine Justice, thou hast returned into thy sheath, never again to awake against thy flock.

TUESDAY, February 1.

"In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, Holiness unto the Lord; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar."—Zech. xiv. 20.

Horses were forbidden under the Jewish law, because of the temptations they presented to pride and war; but they would become dedicated to God, and their furniture or trappings would be emblazoned with the same sacred words that shone of old from the high priest's golden frontlet. So, the commonest utensils in the Lord's house would acquire the sanctity of sacred vessels.

Such a day ought to be our everyday experience. Holiness to the Lord should be written on our commonest and most ordinary actions. The holy emotions and intentions that thirst in our bosoms on the Lord's day and in the Lord's house should always characterise us. Whether we eat, or drink, or whatsoever we do, we should do all for the glory of God.

Many bells ring in our lives hour by hour: for awaking from our sleep, for meals, for work in the school or factory, for our attendance on those who employ us. There is the bell of call for the surgeon, the minister, the man of business. Let us look on each summons, from whatever quarter, as being the call of God, as much so as the recurring duties of the priests in the temple of old; and let us regard each opportunity as a sacred bowl, from which we may pour out some holy libation to the glory of God. We can only live like this when we have consecrated ourselves absolutely to God, and regard our entire life as being marked out in all its details as a sacred plan. It is good also carefully to observe our priestly office, and to remember that we are a holy nation, as well as a royal priesthood.

WEDNESDAY, February 2.

"Present it now unto thy governor."—Mal. i. 8.

Malachi's special work was in stirring up the priesthood to their duty, for the proper maintenance of the temple services. They were very careless of these, and treated their holy duties with great contempt. "The table of the Lord was polluted, and his meat contemptible." Such unconcealed irreverence and greed could not pass unrebuked. They are asked to compare their service to God with their service to man; their sacrifices in the temple with their gifts before their governors and rulers.

Professing Christians might sometimes be addressed in the same terms. When they slip a copper coin into the collecting-bag, which they would not think of offering to the butler in a friend's house; when they give more to the revenue officer than to the Church or poor; when they give to the Lord's work whatever they can spare without loss, and, indeed, are glad to be rid of; whenever they spend more time and strength on public duties than on the calls of Christianity—at such times we might fairly bid them "present it to their governor."

In verse 10 (R.V.) God is heard asking for someone to close the doors of the temple, rather than be mocked by such heartless rites; as though He would rather that no prayers were offered, no services maintained, no holy hymn sung, than that there should be such perfunctory and heartless worship. Let us beware of this, and when we kneel before God, let us give Him what we can of our best.

THURSDAY, February 3.

"My covenant was with Him of life and peace; and I gave them to Him...The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; He walked with me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from iniquity."—Mal. ii. 5, 6.

These inspiring words, especially the last clause, might well hang in the secret chamber of every servant of God. This covenant dates back to the righteous zeal of Phinehas for the honour of God (Num. xxv.). How well God remembers such things, and writes them in ineffaceable characters on the tablets of his memory! But what a contrast between that noble ancestry and the degenerate successors of Malachi's days!

Do you want to turn many away from iniquity? The way of doing so is clearly marked out here. You must walk with God, hourly, constantly, in blessed and intimate fellowship, learning from Him—whom you are to approach, what line you are to follow in dealing with them, and the message you are to deliver. You must expect to come into collision with them: they are coming in one direction, whilst God and you will be going in just the reverse. But go on walking with God: the result will more than compensate. It was Levi's walk and converse with God that was chiefly instrumental in producing this wholesale reformation.

FRIDAY, February 4.

"He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and He shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver."—Mal. iii. 3.

If you are just now in the fires, dear soul, be of good cheer. It shows at least that you are silver, and that you are capable of performing more acceptable service in God's Holy temple. If it were not so, God would not take so much pains. He chastens those whom He loves, and prunes the branches that are already bearing fruit.

What a comfort it is that He surrenders this work to no other hands than his own. He may give his angels charge concerning us when we are in danger, but He keeps our purification beneath his special superintendence. Ah, sufferer, the Lord Himself is exercising on thy case all his pains; do not fear, all that Divine wisdom and tenderness can do will be done.

But notice that He sits. Ah, what patience is here! However many years thou mayest have to lie on that couch, He will sit beside thee. The nurses will go off duty, but He never. Love may faint and be weary, and nod into light slumbers, but He never slumbers nor sleeps. Those that were most frequent in attendances may drop off, but He will sit, night and day; when the soul is lonely, and when the room is filled with cheery voices; when the pain is almost unbearable—reach out the hand, you will touch His; breathe the softest whisper, He will answer, "I am here."

And the process will be continued until the scum has passed away, with its rebellion and murmuring, and his dear face shines, sweetly mirrored in its every outline and lineament. Then the fires will die down, and He will bid thee arise to reap the full reward.

SATURDAY, February 5.

"Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings."—Mal. iv. 2.

At the end of the Old Testament it is meet that the sun should break out. The morning that broke on Paradise was clear enough. It was without clouds. But the sky soon became darkened, and at last veiled, with only here and there a chink of blue sky left. All through the dark succeeding centuries there have been gleams of sunshine to let men know that the sun was shining still. Every precious promise, every solemn type, every holy life, that was bathed in supernatural beauty, was like a shining forth of the sun through the bars of human darkness and sin. But evidently more was in store than Old Testament saints had dreamed of, and the time was coming when the reign of type, symbol, and parable, would be succeeded by the clear vision of the face of God.

We live in the days of open vision. Hath not Jesus rent the veil, and brought us into the most Holy Place? Hath not the Spirit come to reveal what prophets and kings longed to discern, but in vain? Hath not the light been growing on the Church lately, with the rapid increase of an Eastern dawn, when the sun seems to leap up into the sky.

Let us go forth and exult. As the young calves of the early spring manifest their exuberant life in caperings and gambols in the pastures, so let us give expression to our joy. Exult because of the clear shining of God's love: exult because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth: exult because He is coming again, as surely as He came once. Wake up, my soul; take psaltery and harp, and sing! The Bridegroom is at hand.

The London Mission.

In closing our last week's report of the opening meeting of Mr. McNeill's mission, we hazarded the remark that he appeared already to have gained the ear of London. Every meeting held since has justified the statement. "'Tis better further on," might have been adopted as the motto of the gatherings of last week, so far as numbers went. As the evangelist remarked one day, he was having the privilege and responsibility of addressing some 7000 persons a day. These may be roughly distributed thus—2000 in the City Temple at noon and 5000 in the Metropolitan Tabernacle at night. That, of course, is only a fleabite, so to speak, compared to the mass of London's population. But there must be a limit to the size of buildings and to the effective reach of one human voice. Assuming that these audiences vary very largely from day to day, we have the blessed fact that many thousands of people are being brought face to face with God and his salvation on those days of the week when, as Mr. McNeill says, the world is apt to have all the say and all the way with us.

The thankfulness wrapped up in such a big fact is very sensibly increased when one thinks of the character of Mr. McNeill's preaching. Nobody can truthfully say that he plays at his work. In the first place, he will give no more meagre measure of minutes than forty at midday, and sixty or perhaps more at night. Yet the people seem wonderfully willing to endure it. Such a thing as a person or persons remembering that they have an important engagement elsewhere when the sermon is three-quarters done apparently does not happen in these meetings. At any rate, if it does, the quality of Mr. McNeill's talk banishes the suggestion, and keeps everyone glued to his seat till the benediction is pronounced.

But above the quantity of the preaching we place the quality of it. It is true that Mr. McNeill's irrepressible native wit and humour will break out. But even then, if the speaker compels us now and then to relax our gravity, close on the back of it he equally compels the unsealing of the fount of tears, and the quickened heartbeat that betrays the upstirring of the whole nature of the listener. It is all so beautifully natural and homely. Above and beyond all, there is such a lifting up on high, to the admiring affection of the inmost soul, of Jesus Christ, because of what He was, and did, and suffered; what He is, and does, and gives; what he is to be increasingly to all who trust and obey Him. Having listened to Mr. McNeill for a number of years, we do not think he has ever revelled with such abandonment of adoration, in the glory and goodness and gifts of his Divine Lord as he is doing now. Is it any wonder that the common people hear gladly the servant who so magnifies his Master?

THE BUSINESS MEN'S MEETINGS.

It is rather a misnomer to describe the noon assemblies in the City Temple as meetings of business men. The balconies have contained from day to day about as many women as there have been men on the floor of the house. Business women they must be in a real sense. For the preacher has meant business every time, and no listener, man or woman, could escape the contagion of his straightness and zeal. The themes dealt with in these mid-day meetings have not differed greatly from those of the evening, when the congregations were more mixed and general. As a rule, Mr. McNeill has picked out some Scripture incident or narrative and made it live again in modern phrase and setting, with applications as keen and as appropriate as they are novel and unexpected. Of a verity this expounder brings out of the treasure house of sacred story things new as well as old. Among the City Temple audiences there have regularly appeared many other preachers of the Gospel, clerical and lay, who can hardly fail to have caught up something of the spontaneity of the utterances to which they have listened.

Though the evangelist is taking many topics that were made the theme of pulpit consideration in his Regent-square days, the treatment is considerably altered, and fresh illustrations are used to light them up. One day at the City Temple he took up the second part of the story of David in the Cave of Adullam, respecting the adherence to the exiled king of all those in distress, in debt, and in discontent. On the first point he related this incident of his Australian visit:—

I will never forget (he said) being in Melbourne two or three years ago, in the very depth of the commercial depression. Men had lost millions of money at a stroke. We had meetings in the Town Hall, in the centre of the city, holding 2500 people; to my surprise that great building was crammed to the roof. There were judges, magistrates, merchants, members of Parliament, and men of other ranks in society. Not a few ministers told me that if I had come before the financial depression I would probably not have had more than 300 people. It was amazing to see how they crowded in five days a week, for four weeks in succession, to hear the Gospel. The most touching thing of all was this. When I would be lifting up Christ as a Helper for depressed, broken-down men, over and over again a storm of cheering would break over the house. I never saw it before or since; to me it was a valuable testimony that the Gospel does get a hearing when men are down.

THE EVENING MEETINGS.

These have been simply grand, whether as to attendance, as to evident interest, or as to undoubted impressions made through the preaching of the Word. For the latter meetings of the week the great Tabernacle at Newington Butts was filled from floor to roof—a most inspiring spectacle. Each night the evangelist seemed to rise to the occasion, and poured forth a torrent of red-hot speech; now bursting out into scathing rebuke and withering sarcasm; now expatiating with unspeakable pathos on the tenderness and compassion of the Saviour; and anon clenching home the truth by some homely but vivid and speaking illustration not to be forgotten for many a day. The address of Tuesday evening, on "Christ knocking at the door of the heart" of Laodicean saint and sleepy sinner, was one of specially impressive power. Other discourses were on "Awake! Arise!" (Eph. v. 14); the Conversion of Zaccheus; and "Looking to Jesus." This last topic, expounded on Friday evening, the evangelist said he took up because it was a very easy one, and he was feeling tired at the close of his week's work. No wonder, after the strain on mind and head and heart. A brief, but interesting, account of the conversion of the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, on hearing a sermon from this text, was given, and if Mr. McNeill was tired he certainly showed little of it. At the close of a simple but powerfully convincing appeal to "Look and live" he gave in the after-meeting an account of his own spiritual decision—"How the light came to me." The evening after-meetings have been varied in the form they took. Christian workers were urged each night to "fish for souls" among those around them, and on some occasions the preacher invited outward expressions of soul-concern or soul-decision. The addresses generally were so full and exhaustive that it almost seemed as if further speaking by any human voice or voices would be more puzzling than helpful to any who were groping their way towards the light.

LAST SABBATH'S MEETINGS.

Another remarkable day, both as to attendance and interest. The atmosphere was a repetition of the previous Lord's Day—foggy and damp; but the spirit of hearing the evangelist is now so thoroughly awake that such a mundane matter as the weather receives no consideration.

The audience that faced Mr. McNeill in the City Temple in the morning overflowed even into the spacious pulpit, whither a number of ladies and gentlemen were glad to betake themselves. The City Temple service is a somewhat elaborate one from a musical point of view—very pleasing to the ear, but scarcely congruous, it seemed, to the unconventional style and methods of the evangelist. The sermon was based on the incident of the woman afflicted for twelve "weary wasting years," who was healed by her faith-inspired touch of the tassel of the Saviour's garment. Such a narrative, displaying the marvellous power of Christ, is like waters to swim in for Mr. McNeill; the wealth of comment and personal application that he brings out of it as to the cure of spiritual ailments, is truly surprising.

To a crowded company in St. James's Hall in the afternoon the evangelist gave an address on the cure of the paralytic man at Capernaum, who was brought into the immediate presence of Christ by four friends, after persistent ingenuity and endeavour. The great lesson deduced from the story was the power of love in bringing blessing to men; the churches of to-day are so powerless and feckless, Mr. McNeill thinks, because they manifest so little self-sacrificing love towards the lost and the erring.

The meeting in the Metropolitan Tabernacle in the evening cannot be in any way adequately described, even if sufficient space were at command. We should think that very seldom in its long and illustrious history has the building been so "crammed and jammed" as the evangelist would tersely put it. Platforms, passages, pulpit stairs, and the rooms behind (the windows of which were thrown up) were all packed with an audience numbering between 6000 and 7000. Reckoning the congregations of the morning and afternoon at 2000 each (a very moderate computation), the preacher must have had from 10,000 to 11,000 auditors during the day. To this evening multitude he preached with great power from Rev. xxii. 17—the last Gospel invitation to "Come" and take of the water of life freely. No verbatim report of the preacher's words could transfer to print the discourse in its totality of weight and warmth, or the impressions evidently produced. It was an evening to be long cherished in the memory with thankfulness, and must stand out, we think, in the record of this remarkable mission.

The weekday meetings for the second week have begun most auspiciously. To the largest company, perhaps, that has met in the City Temple at noon, Mr. McNeill spoke on Monday on the prayer of the Pharisee. It was the boldest and most searching utterance the evangelist has yet delivered in the course of the Mission. The sham and hollowness of mere formalism and ritualism, the deadliness, in God's sight, of self-righteousness and self-glorification and self-advertisement in religious matters, were exposed and held up to the most scathing condemnation. The power of the big purse as a bribe to soft treatment and special privilege in Church connection was dealt with very faithfully. Altogether it was a most uncomfortable hour for any modern Pharisees who may happen to have been present.

At the evening hour, in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Mr. McNeill had another vast audience, filling the building. Some very pathetic requests for prayer were presented, especially one from a young man who was intending to be present, and who said he was contemplating suicide because he had appropriated moneys not belonging to him. The preacher not only offered earnest prayer for this and the other cases, but made reference to them in the discourse, urging this young man not to think of fleeing from his difficulty in such a sinful and cowardly way, but to be reconciled to his God, who would send him help. The address was on working out salvation by the power of God working in us, and was most impressive. It lasted a full hour, and there was no after meeting.

Rev. J. Humble Yet Mighty.

THE LATE THOMAS CLARK, MISSIONARY EVANGELIST.

MANY are the biographies which have been written of the leaders of the Lord's hosts, of the talented and the great who by reason of their position and gifts are seen and known to all by pen or voice.

But there are no doubt many who, like the above faithful servant of our Lord, through their reticence, their humility, and their self-forgetfulness are known to few beyond the immediate circles where they have laboured; yet such have frequently been marvellously used and greatly honoured by the Lord whom they so much adored, and whom they so faithfully served.

Thomas Clark was no brilliant speaker, though his ministry was much appreciated and owned, nor did he occupy any high position in life, though all acknowledged him as one of nature's noblemen; but in character few surpassed him.

Brain may outrun muscle in the struggle for life, but character outweighs brain in the Christian life, and tells in the long run.

Born in 1827, he was born again in 1857 under Dr. Horatius Bonar, whilst living as valet to the late Duke of Roxburgh in Scotland. On informing the Doctor of his conversion, the worthy divine said, "Indeed! and who have you told about it?"

The young convert replied, "I have told my fellow-servants, and I have written to my relations."

"Ah! that's good," said Dr. Bonar. "I knew if it was God's work, and not mine, you would not be able to keep it to yourself."

On leaving the Duke he entered the service of the late Dowager Marchioness of Exeter as house-steward, and remained with her till her decease. His character was soon seen when, having to pay the bills of the large establishment, he said to one of the tradesmen who offered him a liberal commission: "Thank you, but I cannot accept it; you cannot do Lady Exeter justice and at the same time afford to give me this money. If I were to take it, I could not speak to you of the Lord Jesus and the value of your soul." He once said to the writer, while living with Lady Exeter: "I just live right up to my income, and shall trust the Master to provide for my future." He was in the habit of giving it nearly all away in the Lord's work.

He was in very close association with Mr. Chas. Cook, of Hyde Park Hall, their acquaintance dating back to 1868; he was at almost the first meeting in Hyde Park in 1872, was at the opening of the hall in 1874, and also at the first meeting held in the Metropolitan Music Hall a year or two later, and was advertised to be at the opening of the new Metropolitan Theatre this month.

He has also accompanied Mr. Cook on many of his prison journeys—Italy, Greece, Egypt, and Austria Hungary having been thus visited in their Bible distribution tours. Among other good works in which he was engaged was the Servants' Mission, under the care and guidance of Mr. James Goodchild, and his presence was always looked for and his words appreciated by the workers at Sloane-terrace. Mr. Goodchild's testimony is, "I never expect to find a truer friend than Thomas Clark."

For the past twenty years he was the "Lord's freeman," taking wages of no one, though often ministered to by the Lord's people. Sharing his small annuity of £30 (which he bought with money left him by Lady Exeter) with a poor relation, he did his Master's work and went on his Lord's errands.

About fourteen years ago he began to help Miss Bell, of Park Hill, Upper Tooting, in visiting and helping the poor of that neighbourhood, through that lady's benevolence, and since which time he lodged and lived at the Bell Coffee Tavern when not abroad, or not travelling with or staying with his friend Mr. Cook. Miss Bell will find it difficult to fill the place of the deeply spiritual man who has passed to his reward.

But his great work lay in the villages. Wherever he heard of a village destitute of the Gospel there would he go. Here is a sample case. In a prayer-meeting he heard a young girl praying the Lord to send some one to a village in Herts. In a few days he arrived there, and was presently heard singing a hymn, and then, standing alone, he told out the story of a Saviour's love. This was nearly eighteen years ago, and ever afterwards he revisited this village at least twice a year, and many were the souls he there won to Christ. A few years later God led him to Takeley, in Essex, and here a similar work of grace was seen through his visitings and preaching. He entered these different villages a complete stranger, and, having won the hearts and confidence of the Lord's children, began to work in earnest for the souls of the unsaved. A third village in recent years which should be mentioned was All Cannings in Wiltshire, where again signal blessing was soon seen. Miss Bell was the cause of his being sent down here, and the Wesleyan Chapel was always placed at his disposal.

He was pre-eminently a man of prayer. He was also a great lover of the Word. He read and re-read his Bible. When travelling, whilst others read other books, he invariably read the Book. He knew it thoroughly, and if asked where a certain passage was, could generally give chapter and verse, and though a great reader, and of great intelligence, and having much knowledge of things in general, he loved, and prized, and carefully read and studied the Scriptures.

But he shone pre-eminently as a holy and a humble man; courteous in manner, gentlemanly in behaviour, stately in appearance, he reflected the life of his Divine Master wherever he went, giving to Him all the glory and the praise when success attended his labours.

He was seventy years of age last year, and on Christmas Eve he had arranged to go down to Wadesmill, where many of his spiritual children expected him. He left the Bell Coffee Tavern on Christmas Eve, and was some two hours getting to Liverpool-street Station by reason of a thick fog. It was intensely cold, and after a wait of nearly an hour for a train, and an hour and a-half's journey to Ware; he then had to hire a trap for Wadesmill, some two miles away. He arrived at the village during the evening, and said: "I have never in all my life so felt the cold as to-night; I ought not to have come." On Christmas morning he complained of a pain in his chest, a poultice was brought him, and hardly had it been applied when he looked up, and was "absent from the body" but "present with the Lord."

His body was interred in Wadesmill Churchyard, the vicar giving an address in the church, and his friend Mr. Cook preaching over his grave.

It was a pathetic scene—old folk weeping over the friend they had lost, young people crying bitterly at the grave of their spiritual father, and notably several notorious sinners who had been won to Christ by his faithful pleadings. The vicar closed with the words: "I thank him for his labours; I thank his God for sending him to the villages here and elsewhere." Thus he was called to a higher sanctuary, raised to a nobler service, borne to a larger world.

Mr. Cook says: "Through all the thirty years we laboured together there never was the shadow of difference between us; it was unbroken fellowship in the Master's service, and I have never known so true a friend, and shall never mourn so faithful a worker."

The lady with whom Mr. Clark was associated in work for fourteen years has testified of his unfailing faithfulness, and, above all, his humility and Christ-likeness. More than most men, he knew "how to be abased and how to abound." To ask Mr. Clark to do a thing was enough to know that it would be done, and his loving ministrations in many a home will be dreadfully missed.

"I Sleep, but My Heart Waketh."

LAST night, my Lord, I dreamt I saw thy hand
Stretched out to me—that hand so firm and strong,
And yet so tender—that dear, pierced hand,
And at the sight my longing heart arose
With one great, overwhelming rush of love;
And, quick as thought, I reached my trembling hand
And laid it in thine own, which closed on it
With firm and loving grasp; while, low and sweet—
O, passing sweet—I heard thy gracious words,
"My own dear child—yea, mine for evermore."

. . . .

I wakened. O'er the pillow at full length
My arm was stretched; the hand lay closely shut;
And, with returning consciousness, I said—
"'Twas but a dream, Lord: make it more than that Hold Thou my hand, and keep it fast in thine,
That none may pluck me from thy mighty hand."

The Lord's Coming.—A conference is to be held in Lansdowne Hall, Lansdowne Hill, West Norwood, on Feb. 1st, 2nd, and 3rd. Subject: "The Coming of the Lord in its relation to Spiritual Life." The speakers include Pastor Fuller Gooch (convener), Revs. W. Houghton, H. G. Thwaites, E. Brewer, Dr. White, Dr. McKilliam, Revs. J. Wilkinson, R. Middleton, and A. G. Brown.

Home Missions

A Manifold Mission.

FAR East I found myself the other evening, in the thick of a mob of good-humoured, but noisy and boisterous, unkempt and unconventional work-girls, mostly from the great match factories hard by. Between themselves, they seemed ripe for any mischief—to me, they were perfectly respectful. A few years ago it would have been the height of folly for a stranger to venture (unaccompanied by some recognised worker) amongst such lasses. What has wrought the change? Simply earnest Christian effort and tireless patience. Two devoted women have been content to live on the spot, among the pitiful scenes and sounds of Bow Common, to bear and forbear, if thereby they may win some. And this is but one of a network of agencies carried on at Somerset Hall, while Somerset Hall itself is but one of the various branches of the North-east London Gospel Mission.

The Earlham Hall, Ball's Pond-road, N., is the centre of the Mission. Here a large amount of earnest evangelistic effort is carried on among the working-class population who crowd the streets surrounding Dalston Junction. In connection with this hall there is a Sunday-school, and a ragged youths' night school, for that wild, wayward class denominated by a recent writer as the "Hooligans of London." Not far off is Kingsland Gospel Hall, where similar work is going on with tokens of blessing.

"MOTHER WANTS TO SEE MR. CHORLEY," announced a young girl one Sunday. Some twelve years previously this poor mother attended these services occasionally, and now that she was dying she had sent her young daughter, from where she was now living, to seek the superintendent. As he entered her room, the poor troubled one burst into a paroxysm of grief, saying, "Oh, Mr. Chorley, I am not forgiven—my sins are not forgiven!" The earnestness and anguish of her expression told, together with the exhaustion that immediately followed, that he was in the presence of a soul face to face with eternity without hope, and who felt the reality of eternal things in very truth. God used the faithful word spoken, and the rejoicing woman lived long enough to bear bright testimony to the power of Christ.

THE HAPPY SWEEP

who lately passed to his rest was, before his conversion, a poor, wretched drunkard, with a miserable home. Earnest effort was the means of winning him; he became changed in every way, and soon earned the sobriquet of "Billy Bray"—for he was always singing, and singularly simple in his trust in God. A humble sweep, he earned a precarious living by calling through the streets of poor tenements around Kingsland. Often he had to go out in faith to earn a few coppers before they could purchase their breakfast. His simple faith has often proved a stimulus to many. "Put the kettle on, mother," he would say as he left home; "Father will be sure to send something in my way to get a bit of tea and sugar."

"Was it you I heard singing?" inquired one who employed him, in a surprised tone; "I never heard a chimney sweep sing hymns before." "But I am so happy," said Job; "a Friend has died and left me some freehold property, and I am going to take possession of it soon. Oh, yes, and the lawyers cannot do me out of it!" The lady's curiosity was now awakened, and she tried the singer with many "hard" questions, but the happy sweep exclaimed that Christ was his Friend, and continued singing—

He is fitting up my mansion,
Which eternally shall stand,
And my stay shall not be transient
In that holy, happy land.

[76]

But, in fact, Mr. Chorley has many such stories to narrate, and leaving them I must hasten on.

BOW COMMON HALL.

In Devon's-road, Bow Common, an old warehouse was secured a number of years ago, and opened as a mission-hall. Here Gospel and Gospel Temperance services are carried on with considerable success, attracting, as they do, the poorest classes. The work among the factory girls has gone on nearly all the time. Rough though they be, "the girls avail themselves of the institute, and the numbers keep up to an average of forty each evening, or about 100 on the books. The surroundings are so very inimical to everything tending to spiritual good that the few who have come out for the Lord's side have found it well-nigh impossible to continue in the factory, the persecution they have to endure is of so violent a kind. The institute affords a 'door of hope' and a refuge on the wild and stormy shores of this sin-flooded quarter, and as such we fain would keep its doors open and let the light shine out from across the main." Much work is also done among the poor children of the district who sorely need such loving helpers.

IN THE ISLE OF DOGS.

Still further East—in the Isle of Dogs—a good work has been done for years in the Assembly Hall, Glengall-road. This is now under the care of Mr. W. C. Hopkinson, an experienced evangelist, whom God has greatly used. The varied efforts associated with the other branches are also in full activity in Cubitt Town. Large and encouraging Gospel meetings have lately been held, and not a few have been convicted of sin and led to Christ. A few Sundays ago a notorious backslider was cut to the heart and compelled to cry aloud for mercy, fearing he had "sinned away his day of grace." At length light broke, and to all appearance he has been joyfully restored.

It should also be noted that relief work is now in full operation—there is much suffering, many labourers and others have been out of work by reason of the grievous engineers' strike, and all possible is being done for them in the way of soup kitchen, free meals, and clothing. "We are," says the director, "constantly in touch with in three or four very poor centres of poverty-stricken and destitute people hidden away in the slums and back streets of Kingsland, Bow, Bromley, and Poplar. Nothing in the way of boots or garments can well be too old, especially bedding and boys' and men's apparel."

Growing out of all this, there are the Homes of Rest at Lancing-on-Sea, for poor men, women, and children, ground down by "the sweater," or by that cruel monster, an appetite for drink, till home, wife, and little ones are all crushed and mangled upon the wheel—these enfeebled, enervated forms, who have lost all rhythm, find at Lancing fresh inspiration, and strength rekindled.

If this outline of an important work should lead any to inquire as to its extent, character, and issues, they will do well to secure the latest report from the director, Mr. W. Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N., and look into the matter for themselves. It is full of interest, and tells of a useful and fruitful work in very poor corners of the Metropolis.

PEARL FISHER.

Jews in East London.

WITH a Jewish population twice as large as modern Jerusalem, the East-end of London is the sphere of much mission work among God's ancient people. One of the agencies of evangelisation in the midst of the 60,000 Hebrews of London is the mission at 15, Fournier-street, Spitalfields, connected with the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, an organisation having a grand record of about sixty years' work and testimony for Christ in various lands. The mission-hall in Fournier-street is the centre of many good influences. There the weary foreigner may find good books and comfortable quarters, away from the worry and noise of the world; and there also he may find a friend, one of his own people, able to sympathise and help, also desirous to bring him to the knowledge of the great Rest-giver of souls.

The Jewish refugee in London is, to begin with, a man full of prejudices, and these are largely the outcome of sad experiences. In Russia and other Continental countries he has been illtreated in a heartless manner, and this by people who profess the Christian name. Therefore, not knowing that there is Christianity and Christianity, the foreign Jew is wont to distrust those who would be his friends in England, thinking it likely that kindness proffered on their part may be but a trap to involve him in loss, and trouble, and sorrow. Therefore, it is of the greatest importance that the Christian missionary should inspire confidence by his very address and bearing, and those who know Rev. M. Nachim will admit that our popular and genial friend does this in an eminent degree. When he goes on to speak and act, he affords abundant and conclusive evidence of the good-nature and sincerity to which his countenance bears witness. With helpers of like spirit, Mr. Nachim carries on his loving work, with alternate disappointment and encouragement, knowing that blessing comes from the Lord.

The Gospel preaching in the mission-hall is followed up by house-to-house visitation. As is right, the well-to-do Jews are not overlooked, and by these the worker is highly respected. Calling our attention to this well-established mission, Rev. Aaron Sternberg, deputation secretary of the Society, writes:—"The present awakening and restlessness among the Jews offer grand opportunities for bringing the Gospel of peace and goodwill to them; unsettled in their religious convictions, they become a prey to infidelity and agnosticism. Is not this the very time when all our forces should be employed to bring them under the Divine influence of the Gospel of the grace of God, and thus make them heirs of salvation through the merits of our blessed Saviour? No mission can be carried on without funds to spread the Gospel to the ends of the earth. A special gift of £5000 from the Christian Churches would put our beloved Society upon a sound financial basis. We need £3000 for a reserve fund, and £2000 to balance our present accounts, in order that our missionaries' salaries may be paid regularly, and the work carried on efficiently."

The offices of the British Jews Society are at 96, Great Russell-street, W.C., Rev. John Dunlop, secretary.

State Supervision of Convents.—A petition on this subject, signed by 336,250 women of the United Kingdom, and which the late Duchess of Teck expressed her willingness to present to the Queen, has at length been laid before Her Majesty by the Secretary of State. Signature was limited to women only. The petition shows that, with all the growth of feeling in favour of religious toleration, the immunity from public control permitted to conventual institutions is essentially unpopular.

Plain Peggie.

"OH, I do wish they would come! I'm so curious to see what Cousin Peggie is like," exclaimed Ruth Dickson, as she went to the window and looked out for about the twentieth time that afternoon. "I don't even see our machine in the distance," she sighed, as, sitting down beside her mother, she tried to fix her attention upon a piece of fancy work. "If Peggie had only sent me her photo, I would have been saved the trouble of trying to picture her to myself. I do love to have the photos of my friends who live at a distance, for, when I receive their letters, I seem to see and hear them speaking. It is so absurd of Peggie not to wish to be photographed! I fancy she must be a plain, old-fashioned-looking little creature, shy and timorous; yet I like her letters immensely."

Ruth was the eldest daughter of a wealthy captain, who lived in a large house in the suburbs. She possessed great personal beauty, and formed the centre of attraction wherever she went. She was kind-hearted and impulsive, and proud of the influence that wealth and beauty enabled her to exercise over others. Although the two cousins corresponded regularly, they had never been allowed to visit each other. At length Ruth's girlish curiosity became so strong that she received her parents' consent to invite Peggie to spend a long holiday with them in Scotland.

The day of Peggie's arrival had actually come. Tom, Bessie, and Henry had gone to meet her at the station, while Ruth remained at home beside her invalid mother. Mrs. Dickson had listened quietly to her daughter's impatient remarks, and was about to reply when the sound of wheels was heard. Ruth rushed downstairs just in time to receive her cousins, whom she almost smothered with caresses. Peggie Cowan was quite overcome by the loving welcome given her by all her friends in Ivy Lodge. Ruth was far more beautiful than Peggie, but by-and-by Ruth was astonished to find that Peggie was as much loved and honoured as herself.

"Just fancy," she exclaimed, with a frown upon her face, "when Aunt Kate was leaving yesterday she said to me: 'I'm glad I have met your cousin, and hope you will become like her some day, my dear.' Wasn't it too bad of her, Tom?" "Perhaps Aunt Kate has discovered

THE SECRET OF PEGGIE'S CHARMING WAYS.

If I were you I would ask Peggie how she succeeds in captivating people, and not grumble about her," replied Tom.

About three weeks after this, the two cousins sat talking together until Ruth became so sleepy that she rose, saying, "I must really go now; I'll soon tumble into bed, and be off to dreamland in a few seconds. Good-night, Peggie, dear." They exchanged good-night kisses, and, while holding Ruth's hand, Peggie asked, simply, "What is the last thing you do, before you tumble into bed?" "That's a droll question to ask; why, I often smuggle a story-book upstairs to get to the end of it, but generally I arrange my hair. What do you do last, you little Puritan?" asked Ruth, trying to look wideawake.

"It is right to attend to the wants of our bodies," answered Peggie, "and I'm quite sure God means everyone to appear neat and tidy; but we ought to attend to the wants of our souls as well. We do not know when God may call us to himself, and I should feel vexed if I awoke in heaven, and had not prayed to Him the last night I lived on earth. So every night, before I go to sleep, I love to think of Him and hear what He says to me,"

"I really can't understand you," sighed Ruth, "you are two years younger than myself, and though you are so plain-looking, and seem much happier. Good-night again, I'm off."

YOU ARE EVERY BIT AS JOLLY,

Peggie Cowan's holiday passed, and the last week came. While walking in the garden, Ruth surprised Peggie by saying, "I want you to come with me to-morrow to have your photo taken." Peggie was distressed, but all her remonstrances were in vain. Next afternoon the two cousins, neatly attired, made their way to the photographer's studio. In due time the proofs came, and everyone pronounced Peggie's photo to be a first-class likeness.

"It does not flatter you, as you feared it would," said her uncle, "but is just like what you are every day." Despite the time spent before the large mirror, Ruth was dissatisfied with her proof, and declared she must be taken a second time. Whenever Peggie and she were alone she exclaimed, "Oh, Peggie, I trembled that day lest you wouldn't come out nice. Whatever were you thinking about?"

"I had very pleasant thoughts all the time, but I'd rather not say what they were; you wouldn't understand." Said Peggie, about having my photo taken, so I searched the Bible to see what it said about the subject." Ruth looked quite shocked, but Peggie continued: "The teaching of the Bible is not against any lawful pursuit. The danger lies in people thinking more of their own work than of God." Opening her well-used Bible Peggie pointed to the seventeenth verse of the 90th Psalm, and asked brightly "What do you think of that verse?"

"I DID FEEL VERY NERVOUS

Ruth read, "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us."

"Why, Peggie, I don't remember having read about beauty in the Bible before. However do you manage to find out all these things?"

"God gave us the Bible to be our guide: but we cannot prove its value until we use it. We learn a great deal about beauty in the Bible. No matter what our position or occupation in life may be, we ofttimes meet with temptations and sorrows; but the Bible affords the guidance and comfort we specially need if only we seek it. It is indeed a treasure," added Peggie, with enthusiasm.

Ruth Dickson felt that she had discovered the secret of her cousin's happy influence. Peggie was greatly surprised when, on the evening previous to her return home, Mrs. Dickson said, "We have all greatly enjoyed your visit, and you must come back soon. I have had two beauties instead of one lately; and I wish to tell you that we are as much charmed with your beauty as you were when first you met Ruth."

Next time Peggie saw Ruth she thought her more beautiful than before, and was overjoyed when she learned the cause.

"I cannot forgive myself for thinking you plain-looking," said Ruth, "for I soon perceived that you possessed a deeper beauty than mine, and I wished to have it too. I began to use my Bible as you do, and now I value it too. Your example has led us to Him who is the Altogether Lovely. And," added Ruth gratefully, "we might never have even wished to possess the inward beauty of heart and life, if it hadn't been for you, our dear, plain cousin Peggie."

Personal.

I have received a nice parcel of things from two of my nieces, who must have worked hard during the Christmas holidays. A kind friend has sent a large packet of cards for distribution, and some more blotters and pincushions have come in.

ALINE BAZETT.—Am glad you have been so interested in Mr. Arrowsmith's services. Hope the tea was a success. MABEL CRAIG.—Your competition paper was not condemned because of the writing, but on account of the questions being not so fully answered as most of the other papers. GERTRUDE F. GREEN.—Do not write your answers on scraps of torn paper. CLIFFORD TATHAM.—Please give your age with each paper. GLADYS SHARP.—Your answers must not reach me later than the first post Thursday morning. You really must write better. RUTH TAYLOR.—Note-paper is allowable, but I find answers look far neater when written on lined paper. DORA ELLEN WALLACE.—Many thanks for your letter. LILA K. HUGHES.—Try to write your paper more neatly; lined paper might help you.

Several in last week's "Searcher" did not fully answer the questions. I must repeat again that references are not sufficient, and in future I cannot count a paper as correct if the answers are not written out. Whenever reference is only are required it is always clearly stated.

MR. MOODY'S COLPORTAGE.

MR. MOODY'S influence as an evangelist goes far beyond his preaching. He has set so many other men and women to work, and is continually adding to their number. And the impetus they receive in the Bible Institute at Chicago, and in the Seminaries at Northfield and Mount Hermon, continues to influence them when they become pastors of churches, teachers in schools, missionaries at home or abroad, secretaries of religious institutions, and, what is not least important, in business occupations and in private life. And this influence is in constant antagonism to the practical Unitarianism and to the self-appreciation of man, which are two of the salient features of the present age. It is in perpetual defence and affirmation of the fundamental truths which from the beginning of the Gospel until now have characterised the true apostolical succession—the preachers of "Jesus and the resurrection."

Here in Salt Lake City I cannot refrain from the remark that D. L. Moody has never used his force of character and his administrative powers to dominate the conscience or the judgment of others, or to substitute a spiritual serfdom for an independent individuality.

Mr. Moody is increasingly and enthusiastically interested in the spread of

and the results that have been achieved by his young men and young women (under the skilful superintendence of his son-in-law, Mr. Fitt) in the sale of hundreds of thousands of Gospel books are phenomenal. To give one instance of tact and perseverance: A young woman, seeing a child in the street, asks her name and where she lives. The child names Mrs. Brown, and points to a cottage, at which the young lady calls. "Have I the pleasure of speaking to Mrs. Brown?" "Yes." "I thought you would like one of Mr. Moody's books." "Oh, certainly." "Who is your next-door neighbour?" "Mrs. Jones." The lady proceeds to the next house. "Mrs. Jones, I believe?" "Yes, that is my name." "Would you like one of Mr. Moody's books? Only 15 cents." "Yes, I will take one." The name of the next neighbour is asked and given. The proceedings are repeated, with the same result; and finally at every house but one in the street some of the books have been purchased.

I have before me a bundle of letters from some who have co-operated with Mr. Moody as president of the Bible Institute Colportage Association. They show from many points of view the untold advantage of this method of distributing the truth.

A PASTOR writes: "I have 25 copies of your publications in circulation as loan books. They are doing good, inspiring to better living, and bringing comfort to despondent hearts."

S. H. S.—"The books were well received and read with interest by the prisoners in our county gaol. Two young men especially, condemned to be hanged (one was hanged, the sentence of the other was commuted to 25 years), said the little book, 'Nobody Loves Me,' prepared them to see that God loved them. Both professed to have received Christ."

M. A. T.—"I sold over fifty books in one day, and a father told me, with beaming face, his little girl was converted through reading a book I sold him last year."

To encourage the students to sell the books during their vacation, Mr. Moody had offered a prize of a hundred dollars to the one who sold the largest number. Last year the prize was won by Miss Jessie Marriott, who gave the following account of her experiences:—

I took for my motto Mr. Moody's words to the Association, "Sell all the books you can, to all the people you can, by all the means you can, in as many places as you can, as long as ever you can, and as quickly as ever you [illegible] before September 30, 1897."

[illegible] was won last year by one who sold 6000 books. [illegible] my work on selling 10,000 books. Ever since [illegible] started for the prize, each morning before I [illegible] was his will to help me [illegible] books, and to put it [illegible]

[illegible] ed city, but two [illegible] nated the books [illegible] y imagine my going there [illegible] ever, I was able to place [illegible] books there. I sold 1403 books at fifteen cents a copy, you will see the commission was enough to keep me. I also sold no books myself for seven cents.

I sold 1020 books in Chicago before I left. On June 25 I had only sold 2225, and I thought that another would surely get one hundred dollars. July 26, I had sold 4325; Sept. 5, 6375; Sept. 15, 8375; and I bent all my energies in the last few days to complete the 10,000.

I used one of Mr. Moody's plans of work—that is, interest everyone you can. Of course I went not only to Christian people, but also to outsiders. I also sold to 561 Catholics and to 242 Episcopalians at one place. Father O'Malley, the great temperance priest, took the book "Temperance" at fifteen cents, and said "God bless you!" Some Catholics were very interested in the work, while others, after seeing Mr. Moody's name on the books, did not want them. After the priest had read the book, he said it was a book everyone should read.

When I left Chicago I wrote to every friend I had, and told them I wanted them to help me sell the 10,000 books. I got answers from many of these. Some enclosed cheques for ten dollars; so you see that was quite a lift. My expectation was from Him. He has answered my prayers, and everyone knows the joy in one's heart when God answers our prayers, and I feel so happy to know to-day the surety from Him.

I went to a town in Wisconsin and left 200 books there. At that time there was no church or mission, no minister, there was nothing; no place for me to go had I stayed over Sunday, but fortunately I left Saturday afternoon. At one place it was planned to have a Bible-class back in the woods, and at this meeting it was decided that each member should read the book "Pleasure and Profit in Bible Study." One society placed a fly-leaf in the back of one of the books, and when anyone came who was not a member of the church, they were asked to take the book home and read it, and write their name and address in it. This was done until every member had read it.

So the work has gone on and on, but I have asked the Lord that I may live to see the time when in every town in the United States there might be some of these books. After the people were truly interested in the work I had no trouble whatever.

Mr. Moody remarked upon this that Miss Marriott must have made 500 dollars in the four months = 1500 in a year, and thought she should keep at it.

My last extract shall be from a pastor who is candidate as missionary in a South American Society:—

I first visited this place with the colportage books, and a harder and drier place it would be difficult to find; but now it is a garden of the Lord. Considerably over a hundred have found the Saviour in a village of 500, and many of the hardest cases are now the brightest and clearest in their testimony and lives. This is the witness on every hand.

There are plenty of people to buy novels, and with the era of popular education has come an era of light and fictitious literature. But if pure and Christian literature is to be spread among the people it must be given in the form of tracts, and booklets, and periodicals, or of cheap books carried to their doors by colporteurs. It would be impossible in England for a colporteur to earn a living in country districts; therefore, those Colportage Societies which conscientiously confine themselves to Christian literature imperatively require Christian support.

R. COPE MORGAN.

The Cry of a French Priest.

A YOUNG French priest in an out-of-the-way place in the mountains, where he finds himself without anyone with whom he can talk on serious subjects, writes to Abbé Bourrier, who has lately come out of the Romish Church:—

"What a miserable foundation the primacy of the Pope has been grounded on; and how many other dogmas undoubtedly there are, which, like it, have no better foundation than the blind ignorance and fanaticism of men!

"Your experience and study have led you to the rational conclusion that the Romish Church has corrupted the Gospel, and you have come out of her. I have long wished to do the same, but have not the courage. And again, what can one do without means, and unable, from the defective education that we have had, to take up any other work? Besides the disgrace of it, and all the mass of stupid, unfair, tyrannical prejudice against a priest who leaves the church, all seeming made on purpose to prevent one getting one's liberty. Anybody else can change his profession if he finds he has made a mistake; but a priest never. 'Thou art a priest for ever,' we are taught.

"You know better than I do the wretched arguments that are brought forward, but in spite of their being false and ridiculous, they have for ages moulded public opinion, and this barrier of prejudice is insurmountable. And, then again, there are the poor peasants of this village, who would be so shocked if I were to take such a step. What can I do? Where can I go? What is to be the end of it all? I must just stop where I am, in bondage, in misery, stop here and die. Perhaps if I could have seen you, you could have helped me with some advice; but in this out-of-the-way village, far away from every body and everything 'il faut se résigner à moisir et à mourir' (one must mould and die)."

Many other priests write in the same strain. It is to help men out of this state of despair that the work presided over by Professor Bertrand, 86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly, Seine, has been founded.

Moslem Atrocities.

BY DR. ROBERT KERR (Central Morocco Medical Mission).

Rabat, Jan. 5, 1898.

MOROCCO is a country hopelessly gone to ruin, through the jealousies of the European Powers. We have heard and read much of the "Horrors of War," but nothing can surpass the fiendish cruelty of the Moslems to their prisoners. To-day all the military circle were early astir in this city—Rabat—preparing to receive the arrival of 500 prisoners from Ai-ash, M'Zab. When the Sultan made the raid on the M'Zab all their movable property, women, children, slaves and cattle were carried away by the troops.

I happened to be in the Suaka when the procession moved past, and, contrary to anything I have witnessed before, the prisoners were paraded through the principal streets. I never saw such sickening sights, and pray I may never again. A large number of the prisoners were so weak and emaciated that they had to ride on mules, and even then they had to be held on.

As the procession moved past each sight was more revolting than its predecessor. Dead prisoners were thrown in any way into the panniers—naked. Others were sitting in the panniers, holding up their gangrene hands—resulting from cutting, salting, and burning. Each company numbered from fifteen to twenty, in heavy chains; and the soldiers of the Khalifa kept up a continuous rapping over the heads and backs of the rapidly-dying prisoners, ordering them to call out, "God give victory to the Sultan!" Some old men had the courage to call out,

"GOD GIVE VICTORY TO THE TRUTH!"

There was a continuous cry from the poor prisoners: "Give us water, give us water! We are dying from thirst—we are starving!" In the Suaka a mule fell with its burden of two prisoners. One was able to remount; the other was so weak that every time he tried to get up he fell down, while the cruel inhuman brutes of soldiers kicked and beat him. I felt the tears trickling down my cheeks; I could fain have helped him. At last the poor prisoner cried like a child, and implored aid; but all in vain. In the end, not to delay the procession, he was thrown like a sack on the mule's back.

Many respectable Moors turned away their faces, pale and sick, saying, "What have been their sins that they have merited such punishment?" Bringing up the rear was the Khalifa of Rabat in his flowing robes and a large number of Government dignitaries. It is not expected that a fourth of the prisoners will survive another week. God have mercy on them, poor people; and God have mercy on the responsible heads of Europe, who by their jealousies are to blame for all this misgovernment and manslaughter!

January 10.

Since the poor prisoners came here they have been exposed to drenching rain night and day. The Sultan's camp is about 120 miles from here, and during the journey some eighty prisoners died from exposure and hunger, and since their arrival five or six are dying every day. Oh, that people at home were led to realise the helpless and hopeless condition of this benighted country! When we think of our own land—what the Gospel has done for it—we ought to be more in earnest; for the Gospel which brought blessing to us will bring blessing to them.

Destitute Pastors in Armenia.—Rev. Krikor Behesnilian has recently received letters from several native pastors in Armenia, who had during the disturbances been left alive, and who have now been endeavouring to comfort the remnant by the Word of God. These earnest workers and their families are in a most pitiable state, as well as their bereaved and plundered flocks. The letters describe the heart-rending distress which has still been existing in the country. Communications regarding this matter may be addressed to Mr. Behesnilian, care of Exeter Hall, Strand, London, W.C

Mission to Foreign Navvies.

WE are now such a nation of travellers that it surely cannot be difficult to interest any English people in the welfare of the poor foreign navvies who toil year after year, exiled from their homes and exposed to accident and sudden death, in order to open to us new scenes of grandeur and of beauty. Long ago one large-hearted lady pleaded the cause of English hearts and hands, and the results of that labour of love have been great and far-reaching. The condition of the English navvy to-day is widely different from that in which we found him, although doubtless very much remains to be done; and the poor Italians have also hearts as well as hands, and have a strong claim upon our sympathy and help.

The Société Evangélique de Genève has not been indifferent, and we hear that the needs of the thousands of men soon to be employed on the Simplon Tunnel will not be forgotten. But there are almost countless places where these men are employed in larger or smaller numbers, and it is to try to stir up the interest of English travellers that this little mission has been started. For some time a quiet work has been going on at Lucerne, where a railway was being made. The men appreciated the room opened for their benefit, and Miss Symes laid herself out in every way to befriend them.

That particular work has closed, and Miss Symes has to seek a new place; but just now the Government docks in course of construction at Gibraltar present a most interesting sphere of work. Seven thousand men are there employed, and through the kindness of Mr. Todd Osborne, who has for many years done a grand work among the soldiers on the Rock, we have found the right man to place there. Mr. C. Cambridge is English, but quite at home in Spanish, and seems to prosecute his work with zeal and tact, and with true love for the souls of the men and their families.

His report is that 3000 are Spiritualists, about 1000 Freethinkers, and it is a rare thing to find one man who will profess himself a Roman Catholic. But he speaks of an increasing interest in hearing the Word of God read and explained, of meetings quite uncomfortably crowded, and of evident signs of blessing. Mrs. Garnett, of the English Navvy Mission, is deeply interested in this work, but her heart and hands are already full to overflowing; so all communications must be addressed to the hon. sec., Miss G. M. Maynard, Hawkhurst, Kent, who will gladly supply further information.

Blankenburg in Thuringia.

DR. BAEDEKER (Weston-super-Mare) writes: "For the continuance of the Lord's work in Blankenburg a larger hall is urgently required. The conference of last year drew together a larger number of Christians of various denominations and nationalities than ever before, and a hired hall holding 300 people scarcely sufficed to hold the guests. In all probability the number of conference guests will be greatly increased for the next meeting at the end of August, 1898. It is proposed, therefore, to build a hall which may hold about 600 people, the estimated cost of which, site, structure (wooden), and fixtures, will be about £450.

"Miss von Weling would be grateful for any free-will offerings for this purpose. The conference at Blankenburg has been hitherto the only conference on true Alliance ground in Germany, and it has been the centre of life and blessing for wide circles both in Germany and in other lands. It is most desirable that the building should be begun very soon."

Communications to Miss von Weling should be addressed, Allianzhaus, Blankenburg, Thüringia, Germany.

Soldiers on the Indian Frontier.

MAJOR LIEBENROOD, writing from Prospect Park, Reading, says: "In the frontier force, now in winter quarters, there are many men who would gladly ead Gospel books if they were placed within their each; end there must be many whose hearts are softened through their recent dangers. Will some of your readers, who are interested in the spiritual welfare of our soldiers, help towards this good work, by forwarding donations to Miss Perks, the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, who has kindly consented to forward parcels of good books to as many regiments as the generosity of your readers will enable her?"

From Livingstone's Grave.*

JUST a card from the bleak plains of Ilala, where the good man rested from his labours. All the land is covered with a dark pall, the grass fires having swept over the Savannahs. Canoeing it all day up the river—the Luapula, that is, a bankless maze, and rushing like a torrent—we ground at last in Ilala, darkest, low-lying bit of God's dark earth. The sun goes down like a ball of fire over the Lamba country; dogs in the fishing hamlet bark, bark; bitterns bump, bump; and even the myriads of frogs, chiming in with croak, croak, combine to make the scene both sepulchral and weird. But the grave is not reached yet, for three days of marching lie ahead; first, along the uncertain quantity called Luapula, for a day; then, cutting inland over the plains for two days, until the stagnated stream Luwe is reached, water dark brown colour and lethal. Here, a long way up the right bank, the good Livingstone camped with his boys for the last time under the then sprightly Mupundu tree; here, too, his heart lies buried; and just here, likewise, round the faggots, as night comes down, we break the silence of twenty-four years, and tell out Livingstone's Gospel to a crowd. Thought of him sick and dying; and, cartography forgotten now, wanting so badly to preach for a last time, but unable. So we tried to interpret these last sacred thoughts of his.

Children of India.

WAZIRABAD, Punjab, is, spiritually, a desert. Its outcast people have shown a remarkable readiness for accepting Christianity as a religion, but we feel that very much will be needed before we can call them Christians.

I have just had the pleasure of welcoming into camp Mr. Herklots, of the Children's Special Service Mission, who has very kindly addressed the people several times by interpretation, and taken generally a great interest in them. Before leaving he was so good as to let me take notes of his impressions as to our greatest needs.

He said: "I think you should at once organise schools all over the district, and erect buildings for assembling the people in, and when the people can read encourage Bible-reading and hymn-singing by giving prizes." How great is the need of all this How gladly one would organise the schools and erect the buildings and give the prizes! But where is the money?

There is a great work possible among the children here. Several times I gathered little boys round my tent door and spoke to them the words of eternal life. It is very difficult to keep their attention. It is startling in making reference to Satan to see by the blank look on the children's faces that they do not know to whom you refer. I long to see these dear little ones loving the Saviour. But our work is crippled by want of means. A suitable building could be put up for £14, and a Christian teacher supported for from £6 to £10 per annum, according to efficiency.

If anyone is willing to do anything for these outcast children, or for their older brothers and sisters, they may remain satisfied that their money will be well invested, for the return will be souls of men.

T. GRAHAME BAILEY,
Missionary, Church of Scotland.

Wazirabad, Punjab, India.

The Berlin Christian Mission, superintended by Mr. Fritz Schaaff, carries on an interesting work, with the special endeavour of reaching the Social Democrats and young people who have grown up under their influence. The work is very hard, and Mr. Schaaff finds it very difficult to raise the necessary funds for its continuance. There has seldom been a meeting during eight years of the Mission's existence at which there has not been a disturbance. To continue his monthly Gospel paper and meet his other expenses, the director has gone considerably into debt. His unremitting labour, carried on for the past two years without recompense or reward should commend him to the sympathy of those who are concerned for Gospel effort in Berlin. Mr. Schaaff's address is 36, Adalbert Strasse, Berlin, S.O. (Germany).

Oxford Letter.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

TWO helpful gatherings of workers have been held in connection with St. Peter-le-Bailey and St. Aldate's respectively. Rev. E. W. Moore addressed the former gathering, and Rev. F. W. M. Woodward the meeting in St. Aldate's Rectory Room. Both dealt with the work of the Holy Spirit. It was a season of refreshing in each case.

There is a marked growth in the missionary interest in the Evangelical churches in the city. On Thursday evening the members of the Gleaners' Union gathered in Hannington Hall for their annual tea and meeting. Rev. H. W. Fox gave the address.

The members of the Oxford branch of the British Women's Temperance Association held their annual gathering on Tuesday week. The report revealed a steady growth in the Association.

It is much to be regretted that the Lyric Hall, Cowley-road, has been opened for Sunday evening concerts. The music is presumably "sacred," and the audience, it is said, were quiet and reverent. The concerts, which begin at 8.30, do not interfere with the regular services, but they are a pandering to the taste for Sunday amusements.

Old Oxford men, and especially old members of "The House" the whole world over, will hear with regret of the death of the late Dean of Christ Church, Henry George Liddell. He will long be remembered as a great and good man.

The Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot Rice is to be congratulated on the erection of handsome new schools in his parish. They are to serve also as a mission-room for parochial gatherings. The buildings were opened on Friday by the Bishop of Oxford. The Principal of Wycliffe was among the speakers. There is a debt of nearly £500, which it is hoped will be paid by June.

"Of the 3000 cases that had gone from the home, they could show that over 95 per cent. were doing well, and when they considered their past history they would admit that that was a work upon which God had set his seal, and had given his most abundant blessing." Such was the testimony given at a meeting on Friday in the Town Hall on behalf of Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home. There was a large and influential gathering. The mayor (Alderman Gray) presided.

Sermons on behalf of the Wesleyan Home Missions were preached on Sunday in the Wesley Memorial Church. On the same day sermons were preached by Alderman Hart, of Birmingham, in the Methodist Free Church, New Inn Hall-street, in connection with home and foreign missions. Speaking at the annual meeting on Monday, Rev. G. Whaite, of Birmingham, asked how was it that men were so enthusiastic for gold and for pleasure (52,000 attended a football match at Birmingham on the previous Saturday), while those who professed to love Christ were sometimes as cold in his service?

The Princess of Wales and the Poor.—From the balance of the fund raised at the Mansion House during the last Mayoralty, at the instance of the Princess of Wales, for providing a dinner for the poorest of the poor in London, in celebration of Her Majesty's Jubilee, a donation of £150 has been sent by Sir George Faudel-Phillips to the Destitute Children's Dinner Society, £105 to the Children's Country Holiday Fund, £100 to Mr. Alderman Treloar towards the expenses of the recent entertainment to ragged and crippled children in the Guildhall, £50 to the Factory Girls' Country Holiday Fund, £50 to the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage, and £262 13s. 2d. to the Prince of Wales's Hospital Fund.

A Protestant Exhibition.—On Easter Monday (April 11) we intend holding a Protestant demonstration in the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, including an exhibition of Romish instruments of torture, etc. Throughout the day meetings will be held, one taking the form of a lantern lecture for children, and a large public meeting at eight o'clock will conclude the day's proceedings. All proceeds, after paying expenses, will be devoted to Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Should any reader feel disposed to contribute towards this undertaking, contributions can be sent to the hon. sec. of the Bow and Bromley Branch of the Protestant Alliance. Articles suitable for the exhibition will also be thankfully received on loan, by Mr. G. H. Nash, Hon. Sec., 20, Dewberry-street, South Bromley, E. G. H. N.

The Evangelistic Field

MISSION IN LEITH.

Mr. Hill, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a series of meetings, from January 9 to 23, in the town of Leith, in connection with the Ebenezer U.P. Church, and the results, as far as is known, have been satisfactory. It is interesting to report cases of a brother, like Andrew of old, bringing another brother, who, deciding for Christ at the close of one of the meetings, sailed for China the next day rejoicing. It is hoped he may be a good missionary on the way out. Another night one of the members of the congregation, a soldier, brought a soldier friend with him, and the latter was led to enlist under the great Captain of our salvation. There are other cases known, and no doubt some unknown to the workers, which call for praise.

Mr. Hill conducted Bible-readings each day of the last week. These were very helpful and instructive. He is a veteran, having been nearly forty years preaching the old Gospel, first as one of the early workers of the Carrubbers Close Mission, and for many years now one of the best known evangelists in Scotland. He possesses a wide grasp of Bible truth, combined with an exceedingly homely and crisp style of preaching.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Thompson rendered good help in the singing. The solos sung by the latter must have helped to send the message home to many hearts. We are sure Mr. Hill's visit has been a means of refreshing to minister and workers in a congregation, and we trust there may yet be fruit after many days. Nemo.

MISSION AT THE BELFAST Y.M.C.A.

During the past fourteen days Mr. J. B. Wookey has been conducting an evangelistic mission under the auspices of the Belfast Y.M.C.A.

The services were held in the new Association hall. A special feature of the services was the large number of young men present from night to night, who seemed profoundly impressed by the striking illustrations drawn from the evangelist's personal experience in the work of the Lord in many parts of the kingdom.

The Sunday meetings naturally attracted the largest attendances; indeed, on both Sundays included in the mission the doors of the great hall had to be closed half an hour previous to the hour announced for commencing. It was a remarkable and soul-stirring scene, and the evangelist seemed to be specially impressed by the solemnity on every hand prevalent. His discourses were marked by great earnestness and pathos, and many in the audience, from time to time, were unable to hide their emotion.

In addition to the ordinary Gospel services, he also addressed the Y.M.C.A. Sunday-morning Bible-class. On both occasions many hundreds of young men were present, and evinced the deepest interest in the special subjects to which the preacher directed their attention.

On the concluding night of the mission a mass meeting for men only was held, when the principal hall was again thronged with men. Mr. Wookey delivered an address on the subject of "Social Purity," and at the close of an impassioned appeal for the treatment of all women with respect and true chivalry the vast audience broke into loud cheering.

Mr. Wookey, accompanied by a band of Dr. Barnardo's boys, will now proceed to various cities and towns throughout Ireland in the interests of the Barnardo Homes. At the Belfast Y.M.C.A. two special meetings were held on behalf of the "Homes" at the conclusion of the Mission, and a sum of £100 was realised at the collections.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. W. D. Dunn, who for the past seventeen years has acted as pastor at Anniesland Hall, Glasgow, will resign the pastorate in May, purposing devoting himself to evangelistic work. Those who know Mr. Dunn, and who note the signs of coming blessing on evangelistic effort, will sympathise with the decision.

Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a mission at East Knoyle and Hindon. The attendances at Hindon were very encouraging, and much interest was shown in the meetings, and there were those who willingly testified that they had received blessing.

Most successful evangelistic services have been held by Miss Shannon, in Donaghmore Methodist chapel. A similar mission has been held by Rev. John Good, at Mallow, co. Cork. In each case several persons professed to decide for Christ.

Mr. Thomas Payne has recently conducted a mission in St. Alban's, Bevington. The power of the Holy Spirit was felt, and many cases are reported of sinners coming to the Saviour, of backsliders restored, and of believers being refreshed and quickened in their spiritual life.

A fortnight's evangelistic service has been held by Rev. John Burnham in the Baptist Chapel, Harston, Cambs. The meetings were well attended, both on week nights and on Sundays. The Holy Spirit graciously used these services to the quickening of the Lord's people and the conversion of sinners.

Mr. Moody has held in Carnegie Hall, New York City, a series of special meetings for the deepening of spiritual life. Care was taken not to let the meetings clash with the services in the different churches, and when they opened in the afternoon a large number of pastors from neighbouring churches were present on the platform.

Mr. Philip Cohen, for several years on the staff of the British Jews Society, is open to receive invitations to preach the Gospel to Jews and Gentiles. He is at present conducting a mission at Cambridge. Mr. Cohen's list of references includes the names of Revs. J. Dunlop (British Jews Society), J. B. Barraclough (Lambeth), and J. Flanagan (Southwark). His permanent address is 193, Jubilee-street, Stepney, E.

A most interesting mission to boys was held in Exeter Hall last week under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. From 500 to 700 lads attended each evening, and the talks were given by Mr. G. Goodman, of the Children's Special Service Mission. After meetings were held to which a number of the boys remained, and there were not a few hopeful decisions for Christ. Among those who attended night by night were companies of the Boys' and Church Lads' Brigades from different London suburbs.

Mr. Ned Wright, Devonport. Feb. 5-22.

Mr. J. J. Sims, City Hall, Glasgow, to Feb. 20.

Mr. Josiah Nix, Middlesbrough, Jan 30-Feb. 7.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz, Liverpool, in February.

Mr. George Clarke, Putney, 16-31; Torquay, Feb. 1-15.

The Weaver Brothers, Holderness-road, Hull, Feb. 6-18.

Mr. J. Bennett Anderson, to Feb. 3, New Quay, Cornwall.

Gipsy Smith, Banbury, 22-31; Reading, Feb. 5-14; Batley, 19-28.

Mr. E. P. Telford, Hendon, Jan. 30-Feb. 10; Dudley, 13-24.

Mr. Charles Inglis, Grays, Essex, Feb. 6-11; Barking, 13-24.

Mr. W. R. Lane, Peckham, Jan. 30-Feb. 4; Southampton, Feb. 6-17; Dartford, 20-25.

Mr. F. C. Spurr, Coventry, 29-Feb. 13; Feb. 17 to Easter, Penzance, Falmouth, and Truro.

Mr. Monro Collings, Margate, to Feb. 1; Feltham (United Mission), Feb. 6-20; Enfield, Feb. 23-March 8.

Sergeant Pullinger, Odd Fellows' Hall, Maidenhead, Jan. 30; Soldiers' Home, Winchester, Feb. 6; The Forge, Forest Hill, Feb. 9.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Visit to U.S.A.—Kansas City, Feb. 1, 2, and 3; St. Louis, 4, 5 and 6; Baltimore, 7-10; Washington, 11, 12 and 13; Philadelphia, 14 and 15; Brooklyn, 16 and 17; Rochester, 18-22; Cleveland, Student Volunteer Convention, 23 and 24.

The Evangelisation Society.—The following missions, amongst many arranged by the Society, commence on Sunday next:—Downton, R. Williams; Derby, C. Lazenby; Waltham Abbey, J. Lovell; Plumstead, G. Tuffin; Chitton, S. Vivian; Fort William, D. Bayne; South Bank, A. Clark; Rhyl, J. Shields; North Frodingham, G. Pell; Hamilton, R. Hill; Radstock, H. Bray; Walton, J. Simmonds; Emsworth, S. Bryant; Brockford, J. Harris; Ardrossan, T. Canning; Glasgow, J. Moodie.

Requests for Prayer.

For six days' evangelistic services at Adlington, by Mrs. H. Johnson, commencing on Sunday.

For prayer that the Lord would raise up a faithful pastor for the flock at Trinity Chapel, Hackney.

For blessing on a mission in Orange Hall, Raphoe, by Rev. John Ross, commencing February 1.

For special meetings for the upper classes, to be held in French, at 23, Rue Royale, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays in February, at 4 p.m. Will Christians pray much for thousands living without God and without hope, that they may be reached and blessed?

Praise for one who has been restored from backsliding, and prayer that God will bring all such back to the paths of obedience and peace.

The Home of Industry.

At the workers' monthly meeting on Wednesday week Miss Macpherson introduced quite a large party of boys and girls now in the Hackney Home, training for the "land of plenty." These she commended to the prayers of her friends, as also the thousands already sent out to Canada—many of whom are now witnessing for God in various lands. Sympathy and prayer were asked for the whole East-end work of the Home.

After a season of waiting on God, and the mention of various matters for prayer, the address of the evening was given by Rev. Charles Inwood, who began by reading Joel ii. 28, 29 (the Old Testament promise of Pentecost), Matt. iii. 11 (the forerunner's prediction), Luke xxiv. 49 and Acts i. 5 (the Master's own promise), and Acts ii. 1, 2 (the fulfilment). He dwelt on witness-bearing. God wants witnesses. The Apostles Peter, John, Paul called themselves witnesses, the Holy Spirit is referred to by our Lord as a witness, while Jesus Christ Himself is termed "the faithful and true Witness." There are at least three qualifications for witness-bearing—that one should have something to tell, that he is willing to tell it, and that he is content to tell the truth—nothing more, nothing less. So we have to bear witness to what we know of Christ. Only in so far as we know Him as a personal Saviour, a full Deliverer, and a mighty Keeper can we declare Him to others. But for this we need power, and the Holy Spirit is ready to supply our need. He will make Jesus real to us, his faith fresh to us, his name precious to us, that we may set Him forth as real, fresh, and precious, and that our feeble testimony may glorify Him. After bringing home in passages of great intensity the believer's personal need for this power, and the possibility of our obtaining it, Mr. Inwood brought the whole to the practical point: Do you really desire to be filled with the Holy Spirit? Will you definitely commit yourself to Christ for this filling? Will you do it now?

Bishop William Taylor has returned to the United States from South Africa, where, since the last general conference of his church in 1896, he has been engaged in evangelisation. It is understood that his infirmities forbid extended labour, and that his African work is practically ended. He is now seventy-seven years of age.

Theatres and their Fruits was the subject of a stirring sermon preached by Rev. G. P. McKay, in Devonshire-square Church, Stoke Newington, and published in the Stoke Newington and Islington Recorder of January 14. Mr. McKay outlined the story of stage-acting, and indicated the attitude thereto of Christianity of various types and in different times. He quoted from Mr. Clement Scott's recent utterances, as given in an interview in Great Thoughts, and concluded by maintaining that, judged by its fruits, the theatre is an institution not to be countenanced or encouraged by Christian people. "For them, the outside of the theatre, like the outside of the public-house, must be the best side. The 'man of the world' may be expected there. It is his place; for the theatre is 'of the earth earthy,' horribly earthy; but it is no place for the professing Christian. He has meat to eat that the other knows not of, and need not hanker after the fleshpots of Egypt. And, oh, that the worldly-minded would remember noble and diviner things! "The world passeth away, and the lusts thereof.'"

The Welfare of the Blind.—A tea for blind workers and blind pensioners was given on Friday evening by the Association for the General Welfare of the Blind, 258, Tottenham Court-road. A concert was provided by the visitors, and the blind people appeared thoroughly to enjoy the entertainment. The association was founded in 1856 by the late Miss Gilbert (herself blind), daughter of Bishop Gilbert, of Chichester, for the special purposes of teaching trades to the adult blind, of giving them employment in the workshops of the association and at their own homes, of providing them with material, and of ensuring a market for the sale of their work through its retail shop. Seventy-nine men and women are employed in the workshops and at their own homes, and fifteen who are no longer able to work are receiving small pensions. The trades taught are basket and brush making, chair caning, sash-line and mat-making, and wood chopping. No blind worker is ever discharged except for misconduct. An appeal is being made for help, both by subscriptions and the purchase of articles, the committee having been obliged to draw upon their capital owing to the cost of new buildings.

OUR FATHER'S CARE.—Matt. vi. 24-34.

GOLDEN TEXT:—He careth for you.—1 Peter v. 7.

IN verses 19-23 Christ warns the wealthy against making a god of their riches. In 25-34 He warns the poor against worry as to how the future is to be provided for, i.e., making a demon-god of their poverty. In verse 24 we have the statement that no man can serve

TWO MASTERS.

The rich try to serve God and their wealth. The poor divide their attention between God and care. Cannot serve two masters who issue opposing orders. Test as to the ruling motive in our hearts—see it in almost every action.

Illustration.—If I tell a lie to gain a five-pound note, I sacrifice God for gain, and Mammon is my master. If I suffer poverty for the sake of right, I am ruled by God.

Mammon—Syriac word for riches. Here it means any earthly possession.

DON'T WORRY.

"Take thought" meant in 1611, when the A.V. was published—being anxious—worrying yourself. It was said at that time "Queen Catherine Parr died rather of thought." This was their method of expressing the belief that "she died of a broken heart." Care for present duty is good. Worry about future difficulties is bad every way.

WHY WE SHOULD NOT WORRY.

It prevents us from doing the work of to-day. It is the bit of grit which stops the machine. Busy people worry least.

Illustration.—Throw a stone into the stagnant pool, and its forehead breaks up into a thousand wrinkles of care. Cast a stone into the swiftly flowing river, and the water rushes on forgetting the momentary obstacle.

WORRY DOES NO GOOD.

You cannot add one cubit to your stature (27). Healthy discontent with the past which makes us work all the harder is a good thing, but no one ever grew taller physically, morally, mentally, or spiritually by worrying. Growth depends on quite another condition.

OUR FATHER'S CARE.

This is Christ's great argument. Two edges to his argument.

(1) If God cares for the greater, He will also care for the less (25).

If God gives us life, He will surely provide us with meat to sustain that life.

If God gives us a body, He will also give us raiment to cover that body.

We look to God for guidance and blessing in all the great crises of life—marriages, sickness, deaths—but we cannot believe that He cares for the little things. Christ assures us "the very hairs of your head are all numbered."

(2) If God cares for the less, He will also care for the greater (26, 28).

Fowls (birds) which cannot work are fed by God; therefore He will not neglect those who are trying to help themselves.

Illustration.—No father would feed his fowls and starve his children. The flowers can do nothing to clothe themselves, yet God clothes them. Therefore we may be sure He will help those who spin to provide raiment (28).

WHY WE WORRY.

Because (1) We have so little faith. We are afraid that God will not or cannot keep his word.

> I know not where his islands lift
> Their fronded palms in air;
> I only know I cannot drift
> Beyond his love and care.

This is just where we are always afraid of drifting to. Small faith dishonours God and robs man. "According to your faith so shall it be unto you."

(2) We put Second Things First.—Our order is business first; religion second. God reverses this (33). Let God's law rule in us and around us, and other matters will come right in due course.

Illustration.—Life is a picture puzzle—the pieces are in chaos; we have to put them right. Put the religious piece in position first, and all the others will fall into their proper places. Omit this, and you will never get the complete picture.

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS MANN, TROWBRIDGE.

One of the ablest Congregational ministers in the West of England has passed away, in his eighty-third year. Early in 1839, on leaving college, he was ordained at Trowbridge, and there he worked for nearly sixty years. For more than half a century he was secretary of the Congregational Union for Wilts and East Somerset, and his efforts on behalf of rural Nonconformity were constant and indefatigable. He was an enthusiast for foreign missions. During his pastorate at Trowbridge he was the means of raising in his own district, for which he acted as secretary, upwards of a quarter of a million sterling. Every year he travelled hundreds of miles both for the British and Foreign Bible Society and the London Missionary Society.

REV. G. MARTIN CLARIS, BATTERSEA.

This useful servant of Christ, the first vicar of St. Barnabas', was taken home on the 15th inst., before he reached forty years. In the midst of successful work, with a united parish and a new church rising, life seemed opening out before him, and he looked forward, doubtless, to years of fruitful toil for the Master he devotedly loved. No one who was present is likely to forget his last two sermons, preached on the first Sunday in the new year. Loved by his brother ministers of all Evangelical denominations in the neighbourhood, he will be sorely missed. One of the last of his works was caring for the Week of Prayer held at Battersea Rise, when he showed his love for his Christian brethren, one of whom told his people that he felt he had lost a brother beloved.

MR. CHARLES STEINITZ, CAMBERWELL,

This veteran worker on behalf of poor children passed to his rest on the 15th inst., mourned by all who knew his worth and genuine devotion. He began Sunday-school service in 1857 in Union-street, Blackfriars. Two years later he joined Camden Church, Camberwell, and threw himself into the Sunday-school, where for twenty-two years he laboured as teacher and superintendent. In 1872 Canon Fleming started the Kimpton Ragged-school Mission, in a poor corner near Camberwell Green, and Mr. Steinitz undertook the superintendence, which he held for nearly a quarter of a century. He joined also the R.S.U. Council, of which he was chairman in 1893, and devoted himself specially to the Home for Cripples and Holiday Home movements. Moreover, he was constantly engaged in conducting Gospel services in City factories and in other forms of Christian activity. His departure is a serious loss to the R.S.U. as well as to other Christian societies.

DEAN LIDDELL.

The death is announced of Dr. Henry George Liddell, ex-Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, in the eighty-seventh year of his age. The son of a clergyman, he was educated at Charterhouse and Christ Church, including among his companions in study many men who afterwards attained to fame. Holding aloof from the ecclesiastical controversies of his time, Dr. Liddell devoted himself, with the late Dean Scott, to the compilation of the Greek and English Lexicon with which for upwards of half a century their names have been associated in the minds of scholars and students throughout the world. Dr. Liddell filled several posts in connection with the University, and was for nine years head master of Westminster School. He was Dean of Christ Church from 1855 to 1891, also for a time Vice-chancellor of the University. He was Whitehall Preacher and an Hon. Chaplain to the Queen. He published in 1855 a "History of Rome," in two volumes, from the foundation of the city to the year 30 B.C., which has often been re-issued.

MRS. MARTHA DEBENHAM WALTON.

After many years of suffering, the beloved mother of W. Spencer and H. Eliot Walton entered her rest on Thursday, January 14, after a period of much weakness.

Her constant thoughts were upon the coming of the Lord, and this "blessed hope" shone forth in her daily life, ways, and actions. She was a great Bible student, and during the last few years of her life she gave considerable time to the study of prophecy and the teaching from Ezekiel's temple.

She was a woman of earnest prayer, and many used to write or call upon her, to ask her to pray about certain matters of difficulty or for the healing of a sick one; and she had the joy of knowing that many of her prayers were answered. Shut up in her room for months at a time, she always made an effort to write a word of comfort to those in sorrow, or to encourage others that came to see her. Though kept away from the active work around, shewas "unknown yet well known," her influence reaching out to many through those who had been in personal fellowship with her.

A loving, devoted mother, "her children arise up and call her blessed." Those of her family occupied in Christian work were much strengthened and sustained by her sympathy, help, and prayers. When they went forth to work or to hold a special mission, she often sent a message of warning to the unsaved, and a word of encouragement for the believer, e.g.: "Remember, God's greatest blessing came out of his thickest cloud, and marvellously showed his love to the sinner."

The most precious hour of the week was on the Lord's Day, from 11 till 12 o'clock, which was spent in prayer and the reading of God's Word with her beloved physician, Dr. Eugene Cronin, who had attended her for many years.

The home-call was sudden, and her last words were "God knows." She then smiled, and gently "fell asleep."

MRS. WIGHTMAN, SHREWSBURY.

The widow of the late Prebendary Wightman, a true and devoted helpmate in his fifty years' life-work, has passed to her rest. She had much force of Christian character, and great energy and zeal in the promotion of Evangelical religion. Her efforts in the cause of temperance caused her to be well known all over England, and her book, "Haste to the Rescue" and others, had an enormous circulation. It was always Gospel temperance which she espoused. What she aimed at was to get men's hearts right with God; then, for Christ's sake, to give up strong drink, because it is the enemy of all righteousness. And in her remarkable crusade forty years ago her object was always to get at the men. From six to ten o'clock every night she was searching out the men, and having earnest and straight talk with them about their souls. In the first year one hundred and eighty-seven men professed conversion to God. About fifty went back, but the majority stood firm, and many women joined their ranks.

Aided by the profits of her books, she built the working men's hall, which will long prove a standing memorial of her devoted labour. But her energies were also devoted to other efforts. She and her husband rebuilt St. Alkmond's Vicarage, and took a chief part in erecting St. Alkmond's Schools. To them the town is largely indebted for a Home for Friendless Girls, and for an excellent institution for furthering rescue work amongst young women. Mrs. Wightman's knowledge of sacred Scripture was quite a feature. Her friends loved to hear her expound some deep passage or explain some unaccomplished prophecy. Christ's word dwelt in her richly. She "fell asleep in Jesus," on Friday, January 14, aged eighty-two years.

Children, Rich and Poor.

DEEPLY interesting is the work for poor bairns which the "Children's Salon" has taken in hand. Living, as many slum-children must, amid surroundings so miserable and depressing, such a good enterprise should be encouraged on all grounds. We learn from the Times that "the object of the Children's Salon, which has about 3000 members in all parts of the kingdom, the colonies, and abroad, is the advancement of art, music, literature, and all good works among the young."

Anything that helps to brighten child-life and lift waifs and strays out of themselves, implanting true and pure and beautiful ideas, will be a great gain to themselves as well as to the whole community. Such kindly service as this goes hand in hand with the Gospel of Christ We wish much success to this "association of children of the rich who work for children of the poor."

Custom House, E.—The workers among the children at the People's Mission Hall report good progress, large attendances, and considerable interest. Recent special meetings have shown many happy results. The secretary is Mr. G. McCombie, 48, Hartington-road, Custom House, E.

To assist the sugar industry in the West Indies Parliament is to be asked for a larger grant of money aid.—In the United States the situation in the West Indies is being watched with disquieting closeness.

Fifty young women are to be sent to West Australia for domestic service in April by the United British Women's Emigration Association. Care will no doubt be taken to see that they are suitably located.

The Australian Federal Convention has assembled at Melbourne. Lord Brassey, Lord Hampden, and the Premiers of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia spoke in favour of federation.

On the Indian frontier the rebellious tribes continue to surrender.—The Baluchi revolt is rapidly extending. — Particulars by mail are now to hand of the circumstances attending Sir Henry Havelock-Allan's tragic death.

From Prague comes the news that in the Bohemian Diet the Governor-General declared that both the languages of the country, the German and the Czech, had equal rights. The acceptance of this principle should close the vexed controversy.

From Berlin comes the announcement that henceforth women will be admitted to the final high school examination qualifying them for the university, where they will attend the lectures as guests, with the permission of the rectors and professors. A prudent forward movement might be initiated with advantage at Oxford and Cambridge.

The Sultan has stated that the appointment of Prince George of Greece as Governor of Crete "would not coincide with the wishes of the Ottoman nation."—Officers of the Turkish staff who received military instruction in Prussia have been decorated by the German Emperor, whose affection for the "sick man" and his people seems unbounded.

A powerful tribe, the Mpsenes, near Blantyre, in the British protectorate of Nyassaland, have revolted.—The sergeants who are to be sent by the War Office to drill the native army in Uganda have been entertained by the Church Missionary Society, a step sure to be criticised.—The revolt of the Nubians in Major Macdonald's expedition was far more serious than reported at first.

The Russian Budget for 1898 shows an actual deficit of 106,291,706 roubles, chiefly in extraordinary expenditure.—Efforts are being made to create a direct trade between Russia and Abyssinia.—On the question of the opening of treaty ports proposed by the British the Chinese Government fear trouble with Russia. Reprisals are threatened, and the withdrawal of Russia's protection in China, if Talien-Wan were opened to the trade of all nations.

A resolution has been sent to the Foreign Office adopted by the International Arbitration and Peace Association, expressing satisfaction that the interests of Great Britain are commercial, not territorial.—At Swansea the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that what England wanted in the Far East was not territorial acquisition, but an open door for the world's commerce. Of this the missionary has already been the pioneer.—It is a solid fact, says the English and American Gazette, that England's international commercial creed is the most noble, the most unselfish, and the most internationally generous that any kingdom of the world has ever possessed.—Belgium's trade wit h Britain continues to expand in a very satisfactory manner.

The Isle of Lewis.—A disastrous fire occurred at Luxdale (Lewis), during a great storm on Dec. 30, when the Mission Hall, carried on by Mr. D. C. Grant, was burned down. The missionary and his family lost all they possessed, and had to find shelter in a neighbour's house. Being uninsured the loss is very serious. Some friends may be willing to help in this emergency, while others might aid by sending Mr. Grant useful books to restart his library. He should be addressed, Luxdale, Stornoway, N.B.

Bulgaria.—Mr. J. A. Tonjoroff, of Philippopolis, in a recent letter, says: "The Lord has opened a wide door in our land for the proclamation of the Gospel. A while ago I went through most of the chief towns in South Bulgaria, and addressed large meetings, the town officials supporting the effort. In the town of Philippopolis, besides conducting the regular services, I distribute tracts, visit the people, and read the Scriptures. Much discontent prevails regarding the clergy, and, at the request of many anxious people, I recently wrote a tract—an open letter from the well-wishers of the clergy on the essentials of religion and the duties and privileges of Christian pastors. The pages quote largely from the Holy Scriptures, and the booklet is being circulated throughout the country." Mr. Tonjoroff describes efforts at open-air preaching, in which, for a time, he was hindered somewhat; but, at length, he sees his course clear to preaching in the streets, although the police have protested that "since the foundation of the city such a thing had not been done!" Communications to Pastor Tonjoroff need simply to be addressed to him at Philippopolis.

The Y.M.C.A.

On Tuesday, 18th inst., a new Young Men's Christian Association Institute, a three-storey building, costing over £1600, was opened at Hamilton, N.B.

The Watford Association reports much encouragement. The Sunday evening evangelistic services and Bible-classes have been followed by considerable interest.

The Trowbridge Association held last week the second of a series of special services, Canon McCormick preaching in the parish church and lecturing in St. James's Hall. Both gatherings were very successful.

A meeting in connection with the Egham Association was held on the evening of the 20th inst, The vicar, Rev. W. T. Nicholson, occupied the chair, and addresses were given by Messrs. W. Hind Smith and P. Mallinson.

An interesting meeting has been held in connection with the Hanley Association. The opening speech was given by the president of the Hanley Association, Mr. Robert Heath. Addresses followed by Sir H. Bemrose and Mr. A. K. Yapp.

The Leeds Association has sustained a great loss by the death, at Hastings, of its president, Mr. Robert Slade, who from the commencement of the Association in 1855 had been closely and actively identified with it, and for many years had held office as president.

Mr. George Holmes has left St. Helens, and gone to Spain, failure in health having compelled him to seek a more congenial clime. He is to be succeeded by Mr. Chas. Carey, who has for several years laboured with success as hon. secretary of the Trowbridge Association. Mr. Carey will enter upon his new sphere of service in February.

The large hall of the Oxford Y.M.C.A. was crowded at the reception given by the Viscountess Dillon on Thursday evening. After the guests had been welcomed, Mr. W. Herbert Jones gave an interesting lecture on "New Zealand," and a very enjoyable evening terminated with an exhibition of the cinematograph. The annual report shows a growing work, and if a spiritual tone is only maintained in all branches much blessing may be anticipated during the coming year.

The Mile End Artisan Y.M.C.A. held their annual meeting on Tuesday, Jan. 18, at the Lycett Chapel. Mr. F. W. Lawrence presided. Mr. A. A. Goodbody, in presenting the annual report, showed a steady increase, the Association having almost doubled its membership, which now numbers 232—all Christian young men and total abstainers; and every department of the work is carried on vigorously, and has resulted in great numbers being brought to God. Addresses were also delivered by Messrs. H. Conder, J. H. Putterill, and J. P. Fallaize.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Banbury Association, in issuing their report of good work done, plead urgently for increased help.

The Shrewsbury branch report that the Home has been a centre of blessing to many young women. The general work of the branch has been fruitful. One of the members, Miss Crowther, left in October last for C.M.S. work in Cairo.

Irish Notes.

Rev. Wm. Beatty has been nominated by the Presbytery of Kattiawar, India, for the Moderatorship of the next General Assembly, which is to meet in Belfast in June.

The Protestant Orphan Society of Dublin, which is now sixty years in existence, and through whose books in that time no less than three thousand orphans have passed, has at present 240 children under its care, while its income last year was about £2000.

During the past fourteen years the Presbyterians at Belfast have built fourteen new churches, besides enlarging and improving several old ones, and erecting a large number of schoolhouses. In the period referred to they have expended at least £100,000 on church building or enlargement, while the sum spent during the same time on new schoolhouses has been very considerable.

Christian Endeavour.

The Finsbury Park Endeavourers report good progress and vigorous work.

The Leighton Buzzard Baptist Society celebrated its fourth anniversary on Tuesday.

The Ayrshire C.E. Union has been considering seriously the junior work, and how to make the most of it.

During the week ending Jan. 22, thirty new societies were affiliated with the Christian Endeavour Union of Great Britain and Ireland.

Rev. F. E. Clark has consented to be present one day at the triennial convention of the Student Volunteers, to be held in Cleveland in February.

That unique society, the Shut-in Endeavour Band, has seven members in seven different States—Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Illinois, Virginia, Maryland, and Minnesota.

The Railton Road Y.P.S.C.E., Herne Hill, gathered during the past year £30 11s. 5d. for Foreign Missions. Of this, £10 goes to support a Bible-woman in Ningpo, China, the remainder towards building a hospital for women in China.

In Wisconsin and Illinois there are 29 Welsh Endeavour Societies, with 1500 members. They have formed a Welsh Christian Endeavour Union, which held its annual convention at Racine, Wis. The secretary reports an increase during the past year of 200 members.

The Halifax and District C.E. Union held a very successful convention on Thursday. Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, of London, delivered the sermon at the afternoon session, and at the evening meeting addresses were given by Revs. W. Knight Chaplin and James Mursell.

The Principal of the Primitive Methodist College, Manchester, has issued a spirited address for the New Year season to the 30,000 members enrolled in the 700 Primitive Methodist Christian Endeavour societies. He urges denominational loyalty and inter-denominational sympathy. He who does not unite himself to one church and serve its interests, is not, says Dr. Watson, the man to render help to other churches.

Scottish Notes.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Zenana Mission was held on Wednesday, the 19th inst. The funds are on the increase, and during the past year six new missionaries left for service abroad.

Rev. Paton J. Gloag, D.D., ex-Moderator of the General Assembly, and for over twenty years minister of the parish of Galashiels, attained on Thursday the jubilee of his ministerial career.

By the death of Miss Drummond, of Edinburgh, £100 is left to the Carrubbers Close Mission; the Drummond Tract Society, Stirling; the McAll Mission, Paris; also smaller sums to other Christian agencies.

At the induction of Rev. Wm. Macgregor as colleague and successor to Dr. Sandeman, St. Andrew's Free Church, Edinburgh, Dr. Whyte, who presided, preached from 2 Cor. v. 18, on the "Ministry of Reconciliation." Mr. Macgregor has come to an important and influential church, and it is hoped his ministry may be a success.

Miss Cox, of the Salvation Army, has been in Edinburgh pleading the claims of the Women's Shelter in that city, which accommodates 130 women and children. While there is much to discourage the workers, they have not been without signs of blessing on their labours, and it is hoped they may receive the support which they so well merit.

The operations of the Christian Literature Society of India during the past year have been marked by activity and success. This Society is doing valuable work in India and Ceylon, in the vernacular education of the young, training of teachers, and especially the production and disseminating of Christian literature. At the annual meeting of the Edinburgh branch, it was stated that for some reason which cannot be explained the contributions had fallen from £500 to £150.

During the past year Scotland has contributed over £1500 in aid of the mission work which the Waldensian Church is carrying on so bravely in Italy. Of this sum £687 has come from Edinburgh. This Church is this year celebrating its fiftieth anniversary. During these fifty years forty-eight churches and forty-six mission stations had been created. There are 2767 day-school pupils, and 3434 Sunday scholars, forty five pastors, eighteen evangelists, and sixty-five teachers, seven colporteurs, and three Bible readers, altogether 138 workers. There are four new self-supporting churches, and in all they can count on 5534 communicants, and about 70,000 Roman Catholics hearing the simple Gospel by means of their efforts.

THE BOOK WORLD

Messrs. Wheeler & Co. are reprinting Lectures on the Revelation, by the late William Lincoln, and issuing it in twelve monthly parts (4d.). Part I. is presented with the January issue of The Watchtower. Many will welcome this opportunity of securing a valuable work.

The February issue of The Sunday at Home begins a new Russian story by the author of "Nadya," entitled "A Renunciation." Rev. H. J. Piggott, of Rome, continues to write on New Italy; and there are sketches of Harriet Beecher Stowe and the late Professor Legge. (6d. Religious Tract Society.)

The present protest against the gambling vice lends point to A Nine Days' Wonder, by Edward Garrett (1s. 6d. "Home Words" Office), in which the insidious character and evil results of the betting folly are well illustrated. Well would it be were the book placed in the hands of many young lads tempted to "do as others do."

A well-known monthly, devoted to the exposition of Scriptural holiness, is The King's Highway, conducted by Rev. John Brash, with an editorial council representing various sections of Methodists. Bound together, the year's parts make a goodly volume, containing many useful articles and addresses. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

The Israelitish story of the Cities of Refuge has received much attention at the hands of Christian teachers. Once again the spiritual lessons have been outlined in Pictures in Stone, by Rev. J. H. Townsend, D.D. (1s. Marshall Bros.) The names of the cities are shown to suggest offices and functions of Christ; and the thoughtful reader cannot but be powerfully impressed with the greatness of the Saviour and the riches of his grace.

The Story of Canada. By H. A. Kennedy. (1s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) As editor of the "Story of the Empire Series" Mr. Kennedy has allotted Canada to himself, and he has justified his selection. Avoiding the didactic, he vividly portrays the progress of Canadian history, mainly by a series of moving incidents, with the necessary quota of connecting narrative. The book is thoroughly readable, and well suited to the scant leisure of this busy age.

Richard Weaver's Life Story. By Rev. J. Paterson, M.A., B.D. (3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) The demand for this thrilling record has necessitated a reprint of the work. Apart from the exceedingly interesting piece of autobiography which the book comprises, it is a remarkable story of a remarkable evangelistic movement. The volume abounds with incident, and cannot fail to encourage earnest Christian workers and stimulate to increased effort for the salvation of the lost.

Messrs. John F. Shaw & Co. have done much to provide young people with wholesome and attractive literature of a high class. In their Home Series they re-issued many of their best books at 6d. Now, however, emboldened by success, they are issuing a New Home Series at half the former price, thus putting a good story in a pretty-coloured cover within reach of all at the low price of 3d. It is a bold venture, and well deserves success. We find in the seventeen numbers which have already been issued old favourites, such as stories by Miss Holt, Miss Giberne, Mrs. Marshall, Brenda, Miss Everett-Green, Mrs. Meade, and other well-known writers.

Miss Bishop's book (John Murray) on Corea should prove deeply interesting to Christian people who follow the progress of missions.

Mr. Justin McCarthy has written a Biography of Mr. Gladstone, not as a political treatise, but as the story of a great career spent in the service of the people.

The anonymous writer of the Biography of the Prince of Wales is believed to be Mrs. Lowndes (Miss Marie Belloc). The volume is elegantly bound and profusely illustrated.

A Memoir of John Bright has been written by Mr. C. A. Vince, and is likely to be popular with readers of all shades of political opinion. (Blackie & Son.) The author is a son of the late Rev. C. Vince, of Birmingham, a highly-esteemed Baptist minister.

THE PREACHER'S WEAPON. By Rev. A. C. Thistleton. (1d. Open-air Mission.) This is the annual letter to the members of the Open-air Mission, but its utility and helpfulness are by no means confined to these. It is a rousing word to workers generally.

THE GREAT CRIPPLEGATE FIRE is the title of an illustrated record published at the offices of the City Press. (2d. Collingridge.) Numerous photographic views of the streets and buildings, taken immediately after the event, supplemented by later views which clearly illustrate the extent of the disaster, are included, in addition to engravings of plans for the suggested rearrangement of the streets, the new addresses of the firms burnt out, a full report of the inquest, and portraits of the jury.

Church of England.

Bishop Selwyn is reported as slowly recovering from his long illness.

Higham, near Rochester, has been offered to Rev. J. W. Barrow, head master of Wharfedale School, Ilkley.

The Bishop of Liverpool has appointed Rev. A. Whitmarsh to St. Stephen's-in-the-Banks, North Meols.

The Bishop of London will preach at the dedication of Monk Memorial Chapel, St. Matthias, Stoke Newington.

Canon Knox-Little will preach in Manchester Cathedral at midday on Fridays in Lent, February 25 to March 25.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man is progressing favourably, suffering no worse injury than a severe sprain of the right leg.

By the death of Miss M. Robertson, formerly of St. Thomas's, Edinburgh, the C.M.S. will obtain a legacy of £1000.

Rev. Robert Crowe, who has been vicar of Christ Church, Woodhouse, Huddersfield, since 1851, has tendered his resignation.

Christ Church, Hampstead, vacant by the removal of Rev. G. F. Head to Clifton, has been offered to Canon Streatfeild.

Rev. Wilmot Phillips, curate-in-charge of St. Ethelburga's, Bishopsgate, has resigned. So far as it goes, this is a satisfactory termination of an unseemly dispute.

The Right Rev. Dr. Speechly, late Bishop of Travancore and Cochin, died suddenly at Faversham, where he had been vicar since 1892. He conducted the services as usual at Herne-hill Parish Church on Sunday last.

The Bishop of Ripon preached before the Prince of Wales at Sandringham on Sunday last on behalf of the Gordon Boys' Home. H.R.H. takes deep interest in the home, and has a sermon preached every year at Sandringham on the Sunday nearest the anniversary of General Gordon's death.

A curious difficulty has arisen at Bury as to the removal of Rev. Beresford Knox from St. Chad's, Fishpool, to Preston. He is one of the managers of the National Day School, and his co-managers refuse to release him. The Bishop will decline to license anyone to the vacant curacy of St. Chad's till the release is granted.

The Archbishop of Ontario (Dr. J Travers Lewis) will in July next celebrate his ministerial jubilee. He has been a bishop for thirty-six years, and is the oldest but one of the Anglican bishops. The Churchmen of Canada are preparing to celebrate this event, but Dr. Lewis has resolutely set his face against a personal testimonial.

Some curious coincidences are noted in the lives of the Bishop of Chester and the Bishop of St. Asaph. Both are Welshmen, educated at public schools, and graduates of Oxford. They have been principals of Welsh colleges, and were raised to the episcopate about the same time. They married sisters, and their dioceses are contiguous.

Canon Wood, vicar of Headingley, presiding at a meeting last Friday at Spring Bank in support of the social and evangelistic work of the Church Army, said the Labour Homes were doing valuable work in restoring the fallen and outcast. It was not by giving alms to such people, but by getting them to enter the Church Army Homes, that the truest service was rendered to them, and that they regained the self-respect they had lost. Rev. T. B. Harvey Brooks, rector of Solihull, in presiding at a large gathering last Thursday to welcome the new Church Army evangelist to the parish, paid a very warm tribute to the work of the evangelist who was leaving, and, referring to the people who were so fond of throwing cold water on the Church Army, said he consoled himself with the reflection that cold water did more good than harm.

Congregational.

A short but encouraging mission has been held at Welford.

At Ilkeston a ten days' mission has been held by Rev. R. Mackay.

At Ware, Rev. T. Peason has been recognised; at Buntingford, Rev. G. Elliott.

A very cheering account has been rendered of the progress of the work at Union-street, Brighton.

At Queenborough a new chapel has been opened in connection with the centenary of the work.

Rev. J. Thomson, of Toller Chapel, Kettering, has broken down, and has been advised to try a change to a milder climate.

During the five years of Rev. W. Spurgeon's labours at Wood-street, Cardiff, 631 new members have been added to the church.

The Sunday School and Ragged School work in connection with Rusholme-road, Manchester, are vigorously and effectively doing good service.

Rev. J. Wilberforce Sibree, who has done good service at Clapham as assistant to Dr. Guinness Rogers, sails in a fortnight's time for Savaie, Samoa, to serve as a missionary.

The secretary of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association has been conducting this month a series of Gospel temperance missions in towns along the South Coast.

The Children's Sunday Evening Service Society in connection with Audley Range Chapel now numbers 365. The movement has proved to be most successful, children attending the services who would otherwise be playing in the streets.

At the annual meeting at Cavendish-street Chapel, Manchester, on Wednesday week, reports of the first year's work of the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Leach showed that 193 members have been added, 313 extra sittings have been let, and about 1000 people added to the Sunday evening congregation. The weekly offering has more than doubled.

Baptist.

A special mission has been held at Watton.

Rev. E. G. Lovell has entered on his new charge at Chipping Norton.

J. P. and Mrs. Bruce have sailed for China to re[illegible] in Shantung.

[illegible] People's Missionary Association has held a stirring missionary meeting at the Mission House, Furnival-street.

Rev. A. Hall starts for Port Elizabeth on March 5. Stirring farewell meetings have been held at High-street, Merthyr Tydvil.

The Manchester District Union has secured sites for chapels at Broughton and Longsight. The union is committed to a large extension movement in the city.

Dr. Edward Parker, Principal of Manchester Baptist College, has been suffering for some time from serious illness, which has recently assumed a critical aspect.

Bridge-street Chapel, Banbury, is to lose its pastor, Rev. Isaac Watts, who is to devote his time to the North Bucks and North Oxon Federation of Free Churches.

The pulpit at Tenbury Chapel has been occupied for the past three months by Pastor H. Rowland-Hobbs with not a little blessing; new members have been added to the roll, as also the congregations have been materially increased, while a Y.P.S.C.E. has been founded. Pastor Hobbs has accepted the pastorate.

The Gunnersbury Church has made a strong effort to extinguish the debt of £850, bearing interest, resting on the building. The Baptist Building Fund offered to advance £500, free of interest, repayable in ten years, provided the congregation cleared off the remainder. This, the pastor (Rev. J. P. Clark) announces, has now been achieved by the help of Rev. J. Simmance and Dr. Underhill.

Calls.—Rev. G. S. Read, late of Lewisham, to Brentwood; Rev. J. S. Geale, late of Queen-square, Brighton, to Herne Bay; Rev. F. W. Walker, to Park-road, Ryde.

Methodist.

A new mission has been opened at Thornton Heath, Croydon.

The new mission at Hornsey-rise is proving remarkably successful.

New chapels are being built at Ealing, Burstwick, and Grassmore.

A series of successful evangelistic services has been held at Southowram.

A quiet day for ministers has been held at the Central Hall, Manchester.

Rev. R. Fenwick, ex-president of the Primitive Conference, has been very ill.

A very successful mission has been held at Holbeach, and it has been resolved to continue the services throughout this week.

In connection with the Free Methodist Mission, Rev. Francis Bavin, of Leeds, is to be general superintendent of the Jamaica Mission.

During a recent mission at Stampford-street, Portsmouth, a number of persons professed conversion, twenty of whom have been admitted into fellowship.

Rev. John Smith, formerly pioneer missionary in South Africa, now missionary secretary of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, is mentioned as a likely president of next year's Conference.

An interesting conference on methods of work has been held at the Lads' Institute, Whitechapel. Thirteen students from Manchester College, many of whom are staying at and helping in the Institute, were present.

Questions of further developments of Methodism were considered at the recent meeting held at the Centenary Hall. It was reported that during the past thirty-five years £700,000 had been expended in church extension in London. The four central missions had an enrolled church membership of 4618.

It is stated that by the recent death, at Scarborough, of Mrs. Sophia Gunson, relict of the late Mr. Gunson, of Ossett, several charitable bequests made by the latter came into operation. The trustees are directed to provide out of the residue £3200 for establishing and maintaining a mission in connection with Wesley-street Chapel, Ossett, and £400 for a Bible fund in connection with the same church.

Presbyterian.

At Maryport Rev. J. McOwan has entered on his new charge.

Rev. A. Lamont, of Singapore, is preaching on Sundays at Westbourne-grove Church, during the absence of the pastor.

Rev. J. C. Gibson, of Swatow, will preach at the forthcoming Synod, in place of the Moderator, Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, who has now returned to his work in China.

Rev. J. B. Meharry will preside at the induction of Rev. George Hanson as minister of Marylebone Church on Feb. 8, and will address both minister and people on their new relations.

Fallen Asleep.

At Melton Mowbray, ADA WAKERLEY, second daughter of the late Mr. John Wakerley, and sister of Rev. John B. Wakerley, of the Central London Mission, and Sister Winifred, of Princess Alice Orphanage. — At Alice, near Lovedale, Cape Colony, Rev. JAMES M. COWAN, one of those noble men of whom the busy world knows little. Born in Glasgow, he laboured for a while at Fraserburgh; ordered to South Africa for his health, he laboured at East London until strength failed.—In Salford, Mrs. PETER BURY, aged eighty-three, the founder in 1837 of Great George-street Sunday-school, which she first commenced in her own house; her faith, earnestness, and unselfishness have been the means of blessing to many.—In Manchester, Mr. JAMES CROMPTON, aged seventy-six, for more than fifty years a leading worker in Preston.—At Hastings, on 15th inst, Mr. ROBERT SLADE, aged seventy-three, a prominent Christian worker at Leeds, associated with many Christian and philanthropic institutions in the city.—At Rubery, aged ninety-one, Miss MARY GREEN, for many years one of the most active workers in the village.—At Ellesmere Port, Rev. W. STALHAM, for thirty years vicar of the parish.—At Christchurch, on 16th inst., Mrs. GEORGE MARSHALL, aged sixty, the mayoress, a warm helper of Congregational work and Christian missions.—At Widnes, Mr. W. HODGKINSON, aged forty-five, a much-valued Sunday-school worker.—At Bourton-on-the-Water, Mr. W. S. CLIFFORD, an earnest preacher and Sunday-school teacher.—At Earl's Colne, Mrs. TAWELL, aged seventy, a successful Bible-class leader.—At Wooler, Mrs. MUIRHEAD, aged eighty-one, widow of Rev. J. L. Muirhead, whom she survived but a few weeks.—At Shorthill, Mr. H. JONES, for fifty years a useful worker at Pleasley Chapel.—At Patley Bridge, Mr. GEORGE METCALFE, a generous giver to the Lord's work.—At Cardiff, Mr. W. SAUNDERS, a devoted helper in Christian and mission work.—At Earl's Croome, Worcester, on 10th inst., Miss L. M. ALLPORT, daughter of the late Rev. Josiah Allport, of Birmingham.—At Moreton, Dorset, on 17st inst., Rev. W. C. FRAMPTON, aged eighty-six, rector of the parish.—At Orlestone, Kent, Mrs. C. B. HALL, wife of the rector of the parish, and a devoted helper.—At Boxgrove, Chichester, Rev. H. E. JONES, formerly vicar of Overton, Lancs.; at Wimborne, Rev. HENRY GOOD, LL.B., aged ninety-nine, for fifty-seven years the vicar of the parish; at Jamaica, New York, Rev. W. A. DICKSON, Methodist minister, formerly of Lisburn, and brother of Rev. James Dickson, of Dunkincely; at Dublin, Mr. GEORGE WILSON HILL, one of the governors of the Methodist Female Orphan School; at Omagh, Rev. ROBERT WALLACE, minister of the second Presbyterian Church, an able, faithful, devoted minister and pastor.—At Bethesda, Canon MORGAN, aged seventy-seven, vicar of Clenog wen, Bethesda, for thirty-four years.

Free Church Councils.

The Council of Evangelical Free Churches of Birmingham and district, formed in 1893, held its annual business meeting on Monday week. Mr. George Cadbury has been the President from the beginning, and is now retiring in favour of the Rev. F. L. Wiseman, who has been hon. secretary since 1893. The annual report referred to the confidence manifested by the increase in churches connected with the council. In 1893 there were 111 churches sending 325 members, and last year there were 198 churches and 477 members. For the present year over 200 churches are appointing representatives. Co-operative efforts to stimulate the spiritual life of the Churches, the training and use of preachers, and the care of the youths connected with the Churches have been the main objects of attention during the year.

A well-attended meeting of the East Lancashire and East Cheshire Federation of Free Church Councils was held at Grosvenor-street Chapel, Manchester, last week, Rev. Dr. McLaren presiding. Rev. Dr. Mackennal delivered an address on methods of work undertaken by Free Church Councils, under four aspects—(1) the promotion of Christian fellowship amongst the different Churches; (2) the prosecution of united evangelistic effort; (3) the safeguarding of the rights and privileges of Free Churchmen; (4) the maintenance of a high moral standard in the public and general life of the community. Reports of an encouraging nature were afterwards given by representatives from fifteen Councils comprised in the Federation.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, January 24, 1898.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

WE shall be much obliged to any of our readers who can furnish us with copies of THE CHRISTIAN for March 5, 1896.

"Wars and rumours of wars"! Unrest and mutual suspicion among the nations—these are the characteristics of the foreign news of the day (see p. 28). "Distress of nations with perplexity" is not only a word of prophecy from the lips of Christ, but an actual description of the commotions of our day in Europe, Asia, and Africa. The people of the earth are in straits. Are not these things "signs of the times" to which we do well to take heed?

The mutual charges and recriminations of the Government and Opposition leaders as to their relative responsibility for the policy that led to the recent Afridi Campaign are not particularly dignified or instructive. We feel sure that the country, as a whole, is far more interested in the renewal of peaceful relations between the combatants than in the origin of the war. When Parliament meets next week, an opportunity of enforcing this aspect of the problem will be afforded, and it is of the utmost importance that the conscience of the nation should find due and emphatic utterence. One of the promising elements in forcing a peaceable issue before hostilities are recommenced, is the probability that the cost of the campaign will have to be borne by the Imperial Exchequer. This will predispose Parliament to a friendly issue to the struggle. Every believer in peaceful progress will surely throw his influence on this side.

How far is a newspaper permitted to take public credit for helping to bring social and other struggles to a peaceful issue? Lately we have had several dailies loudly trumpeting their own praises, both as regards the engineering trouble and the control of public policy. Newspapers may do untold good by advocating wise measures, and smoothing over social and industrial differences. To turn opportunities of public benefit into means of self-advertisement is surely a cynical misuse of privilege.

The determining ideals of a nation as well as individuals may often be seen in unconscious manifestations of popular feeling better than by deliberate statements of policy. Judging from recent events, the ideals of the British nation just now are commercial rather than humanitarian. We have only to contrast the universal uprising of sentiment among all classes and parties in favour of resisting Russian aggression in China, where commercial interests alone are at stake, with the fierce divisions of opinion that have rent the country during the last three years, as to our right and duty to interfere in the Armenian question, in order to have a striking proof of this. It is a humiliating indication of the real motives that guide our action in foreign affairs. If a similar firmness had been shown towards the Sultan three years ago, the probability is that the subsequent troubles in Turkey and Greece would have been prevented. It is no proof of true patriotism to ignore these facts, which are so plain that he who runs may read.

One noteworthy feature in the long and lamentable struggle in the engineering industry, now happily concluded, has been the entire absence of disorder and rioting among the mechanics who have been so long out of work. The Spectator has had a recent discussion on the question, "Is Society better or worse?" in which an optimistic opinion was developed. In the matter of public order, at least, there is no doubt that the present generation is far ahead of its predecessors. Less than twenty years ago a great strike was always accompanied by violent language, and often by violent deeds. It is greatly to the credit of the men that there has been no breach of the peace arising from the strike and lock-out. There has been an immense amount of suffering, patiently and silently borne, and the growth of self-restraint which this argues is a most hopeful sign. Continental papers have expressed astonishment at this striking phenomenon, and they may well do so. There is no other country in which such a long struggle could have been brought to an end without disturbance.

Some years ago Mr. Plimsoll, who had spoken up for sailors who were too often drowned in coffin ships, took up his humane parable for the poor sheep and cattle that are carried across the ocean. It is terrible to think how much suffering has been endured in the interval, and how much is still going on. If recent information may be believed, the state of things on most of the cattle-carrying steamers between South America and Liverpool is horrible. Statistics are given which show a loss of one-fifth, one-fourth, and two-thirds of the living cargo; in one case a vessel shipped 758 sheep, and brought only 78 of them into port; another vessel lost 69 cattle out of 395, and 394 sheep out of 1200. Yet while this waste and misery is going on in some vessels, others do the trade at a loss of less than 3 per cent. That being so, it is evident that these horrors are unnecessary, and in the name of humanity and religion they ought at once to cease.

In a summary of Mr. Justice Grantham's speech at Norwich, on Police Court Missions, the Times quotes the words :—

> It is a great thing to be able to get at the offender at the inception of his criminal career, for then some good might be done; but with hardened criminals the greatest possible difficulty arose. With a person convicted once there was a chance of reformation, but when the convictions numbered five or six the idea of relamation was almost hopeless.

We cordially endorse these words. There are no agencies doing more sure work for Christ and humanity than those that help the first offender. We regard Police Court Missions as ranking amongst the most remedial forces great cities employ for the substantial benefit of young criminals. The Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost.

"The future of the Sunday-school," as alluded to in the Sunday-school Times, should be a supreme question before the Church. Rev. Hardy Harwood holds that, as now, > the spiritual influence must be the first consideration, but at the same time there must be much more efficient teaching than now.

Too much care cannot be taken that Biblical instruction is at least abreast of what is being given in the best day-schools; but, after all, the desideratum is that teachers themselves should be men and women filled with the Holy Ghost. This is essential to the exertion of spiritual influence upon scholars. The time for teaching on Sundays is so short that the teacher should ever bring to his work a soul on fire with the Holy Spirit. When this is the case, the power will be felt at once, and will give to every Biblical topic treated a lasting impression. Preparation classes for teachers are desirable. The preparation of the Spirit is no less indispensable.

The question, "How far is it justifiable to preach old sermons, and how often?" is well handled in a paper recently read at the London Primitive Methodist Council. The writer says: "I see no harm in repreaching an old sermon (to new congregations of course) so long as the preacher is able to revive the feelings that inspired it." He recalls Archbishop Temple's advice to his clergy to preach their sermons three times and then put them in the fire.

> Sometimes a few months pass, and lo! the sermon is baldheaded and toothless. An American paper observed not long ago that the secret of the decline of influence of many old ministers is "that old sermon-barrel." "Congregations," it said, "want fresh apples, not dried pippins!"

There is a good deal of sanctified common sense as well as homely wit in this remark. It is an essential factor in all telling preaching that its message should be alive and real to the preacher; otherwise it must inevitably be dead to the audience. The highest truths lose their power when they are utterd by rote, instead of coming warm and glowing from the heart. Whitefield used to say that he did not consider a sermon perfect till he had preached it at least forty times; and great revivalists often repeat substantially the same address still more frequently with undiminished effect. This is because they live habitually in the truths they utter, so that they come with the force of a fresh inspiration every time they are uttered. There is no reason why the same sermon should not be repeated even to the same congregation after a suitable interval, if this prime condition is fulfilled.

A symposium in an American contemporary on the "Model Listener," in which about eighty ministers took part, has produced some interesting hints. A minister from Illinois flavours his description with some homely humour. Among other qualifications he says the model listener is rain-proof, sun-proof, food-proof, and visitor-proof; is rich in prayer and poor in prejudice; brings his thinking-cap to church and leaves his nightcap at home.

He concludes by saying that a few such hearers make a poor sermon good, and a good one better, for the rest of the congregation.

There is no doubt about the latter fact. There is contagion from pew to pew as well as from pulpit to pew. It is noteworthy, by the way, that many of the contributors emphasise the helpfulness of listeners looking straight into the preacher's eyes during the sermon. It is not superfluous in the case of many preachers to return the compliment. Eye-touch is a great help to heart-touch.

The discussion at the assembly of the London Baptist Association on the "Sense of Sin" is a most timely one. Rev. J. R. Wood did well to distinguish between the literary conception of sin and the evil itself in the human heart. Until there is a deep heart-consciousness of sin as a wrong done to God there can be no sincere repentance toward Him. Faith in Jesus Christ is not the justifying act of the soul until sin is mourned over and confessed. And is not the personal conviction of sin the direct work of the Holy Ghost? "He shall convince the world of sin." This is done by the conviction of the individual. Jesus Christ is abundantly glorified too, when under such a sense of wrong the believing heart rests absolutely upon Him for power to conquer the world, the flesh, and the devil.

It is a pleasure to observe in the Christian World the assertion that the reason why Paul is so roughly handled by modern Sacerdotalists is that his teaching is so essentially opposed to theirs. As has been often pointed out, Paul's writings were the stronghold of the early Reformers; and, of course, the qualities which made him precious to them make him objectionable to those who would bring us again into mediæval bondage. Our modern preachers might find it useful to their congregations to expound the Apostle in his teaching on the points at issue.

The Methodist Recorder gives great prominence to a communication on "The Doctrine of the Prayer Meeting," in which the writer remarks:—

There never was an age when the people of Methodism gave as much time to pleasure, light reading, and society claims as at the present. There never was an age when they gave so little time to united and earnest waiting upon God and interceding with Him. Put those two facts side by side, and by no special pleading can one arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.

Would not a candid spirit say the same thing of every other denomination, and draw the same conclusion? Our dangers chiefly lie in the direction of excess of social gratification, and in neglect of spiritual exercises. The atmosphere of the age is relaxing; all the more need, therefore, to brace ourselves to exertion, to deny ourselves the things that bring no profit to the soul, "and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness."

The phrase "Christ's standard of values," is one often met with in recent books of theology, but its meaning has yet to be learnt by the world at large. For He lays the chief emphasis on persons, not things, on souls, not institutions; thus reversing the standard that has prevailed among men. It would seem that once this truth had been revealed, it would at once be accepted by a race of immortal creatures; and yet it is scarcely beginning to be recognised. To injure a soul is, in his eyes, a greater crime than to overthrow a kingdom; to offend a weak brother is worse than to lose a fortune. Not until this principle is fully recognised can the Kingdom of God come with power.

One of the most striking instances of the way in which modern science is turning waste products to use, is the manufacture of electric light out of house and street refuse. This is but a parable of the Divine process, whereby the waste products of human society are transformed into use and beauty in the kingdom of God. In the mud of the street, Ruskin tells us, there lie concealed the materials of precious stones; in the lost humanity of our slums, there are hid the elements of noble manhood and pure saintliness. The two processes ought to go on side by side—out of garbage and filth, light for the body; out of rejected and lost creatures, kings and priests unto God, for the light of the world and the glory of the Redeemer. It is a great thing to transform refuse into a commodity; it is a greater to save a doomed soul, to bring hope into a lost life.

The experience of Mr. George Müller in regard to "Answered Prayer" is related in the Sunday Magazine. The whole of the money invested in the building of his orphanages, amounting to £115,000, was obtained thus. For sixty-two years he has never asked man for a penny, while he has received for the carrying on of his work £1,400,000. Further, he has been enabled to send £257,000 to his missionary brethren. His method has been invariably to go on praying till the answer has come. In a recent address to a Y.M.C.A. meeting, in his ninety-third year, he said that he took up his orphan work especially with the object of giving a visible demonstration to the whole world and to the Church of God of what prayer could do. The whole world is familiar with the result.

A powerful argument in favour of "mixed schools" for boys and girls is adduced from the results of the experiment carried out at more than one school in England, while in America the plan is all but universally adopted. These results have been eminently satisfactory. The objections raised, that the boys would become effeminate and the girls rough, that difficulties would rise of a delicate kind, that the question of corporal punishment would be insoluble, have all been found baseless. There has been a healthy emulation between the boys and girls both in their studies and their conduct, corporal punishment is unknown, and a spirit of courtesy and chivalry have been shown to a surprising extent. The experiment was a bold one, but the results have more than justified it, whether viewed from the moral or the educational standpoint.

That the Monte Carlo Casino, with all the evil it fosters, should have obtained a new lease of life is both a scandal and a disappointment. Two suicides of women are reported this week. It is useless to hope to check this sore by law unless the neighbouring Governments take action on account of the terrible havoc it works; but in view of the low moral tone that is often found in official circles, and the little heed that is taken of the real welfare of a nation so long as its wealth and dominion increase, there is almost as little hope here.

Where hope and certainty of effect lie is very much nearer home. They lie in a deeper individual realisation of what this gambling curse means, and in a decision on the part of every Christian to have no lot in any transaction which partakes of the nature of gambling. They lie in a deeper individual realisation of what each who stands on that ground can do to save others. They lie in a deeper individual zeal in prayer for the reign of unselfish love in hearts now consumed by the feverish greed for self. We can never prevent such pit-falls beside our road—they are never in it—but we may, we must, prevent our brothers and sisters from falling therein, as well as keeping clear of them ourselves. The gambling mania is on us as a nation, and in unsuspected guises it is making its way into many a well-intentioned but thoughtless life. Not only in business transactions, but even under the cloak of religion, we have this foe to meet, and we can cope with it by no half measures.

A writer in Blackwood thinks that the present direction of things in Britain will, if we are not careful, lead us right into national perdition. We are too much afraid of pain, and too anxious to preserve life, instead of looking at the quality of the life preserved. If we go on building up our empire by force, while pretending to do so by charity and meekness, we shall engrain hypocrisy as our national characteristic; but if we try to build by means of meekness and charity we shall soon have no national character or national self-esteem or national existence to lose.

Hence he would have us resort to the "good old ways" of drinking well, loving well, suffering well, and fighting well. Apparently this writer knows nothing of that heroic side of life among us created by the gospel of charity and meekness, which cheerfully faces pain of body and exertion of mind for the good of others and the glory of God. "The simple annals of the poor" are rich in instances.

It is often said that there has been for some time a marked change in the attitude of travellers and explorers as to the value of missionary work among the heathen. The testimony of Robert Louis Stevenson, Louis Becke, and others as to the splendid services of missions in the South Seas has now been reinforced by a similar tribute paid in Mrs. Bishop's new work on "Korea and her Neighbours." (2 vols. 24s. John Murray.)

Those who believe in missions from the highest point of view, however, would do well to receive many of these tributes with equanimity, for they nearly always refer to secondary and incidental aspects of the work. Missions are praised rather as civilising agencies than as centres of spiritual force. From this standpoint even France has a good word to say for them. But if foreign missions were valuable only as a pioneer agency for civilisation and political expansion, those who have been their mainstay would soon lose interest in them. Only as they have a purely spiritual ideal, upheld by spiritual motives, and judged by spiritual results, do they fulfil their function.

The Pope's encyclical on the Manitoba education struggle contains much curious reading, and is specially interesting as it marks one more stage in the self-revelation of the Roman Church. It has ever arrogated to itself the title of "Catholic" or "Universal" Church —i.e., the Church representative of Christendom as such. And yet this is the authoritative reading of this term, as expounded by the official head of that Church:—

For the Catholic there is only one true religion, the Catholic religion; and, therefore, when it is a question of the teaching of morality or religion he can neither accept nor recognise any which is not drawn from Catholic doctrine.

Substitute the word Roman for Catholic, and the essential exclusiveness of spirit lurking here comes to the surface. One thing Evangelical believers should pray for is that all may see Rome in her true character, which has ever been that of a narrow and persecuting sect.

Forty Years of War.

FROM the pulpit and the platform, as well as in literature devoted to the advocacy of Foreign Missions, one of the reasons given for insisting on the policy of expeditious evangelisation is the great death-rate of heathendom. So, then, the Church is being urged to hasten her proclamation of the Gospel in order that the heathen may hear and know it ere his earthly probation ceases. Is it not a little inconsistent that we who affect this commendable anxiety are constantly and immediately concerned in swelling by our slaughters this melancholy death-roll? And is it not a probable fact, that during the last thirty or forty years our arms have devoured among these heathen races more people than our missionaries have been instrumental in converting to God?

The statement from which we have deduced this assertion was reported to have been made quite recently by the Commander-in-Chief of the British Army. Amid "laughter and cheers" Viscount Wolseley said:—

There was another peculiar point about our Army. It was always at war. We were the only nation in the world in that position, and in the last thirty or forty years it was difficult to find any period when we had not an army fighting in some portion of the world.

Now, we ask, whether the vast majority of the wars that stained these periods with gore have not been against so-called savage or semi-savage tribes? And have these conflicts been unavoidable? We admit the justice and necessity that may demand suppression of rebellion and revolt (as, for example, the Indian Mutiny and the recent revolt at Uganda) against settled government; or that may visit the unprovoked shedding of blood (as, for instance, the Benin massacre) with the extreme corrective of arms. But surely these thirty or forty years of war have not been the consequence mainly of rebellion, revolt, or massacre, nor have they been always as serious and urgent as to demand the arbitrament of the sword.

The clemency and forbearance exercised towards one another by nations of mutual strength and intelligence, even when their misunderstandings reach an acute stage, is a most creditable feature of civilisation; yet, if this is what we have a right to expect, and what we do see among equals, how much more should we expect and see it on the part of superiors towards inferiors? We do not pretend to believe, however, that these slaughtered savages have in many instances been the aggressors, for it seems to us only to say that the radical provocation of many—aye, most—of these conflicts with weaker races has been solely their continued occupation of the heritages assigned them by the Creator.

Our persistence in scattering firebrands of war among defenceless peoples has been a prolonged torture, from which the national conscience could not escape; hence the use of the following soporific, lately repeated to the nation by an eminent statesman:

At the present moment, in Egypt, in East Africa, in West Africa, and in India, we are carrying out a policy of humanity, of civilisation, of pacification. Understand what I mean—the horrors of the Soudan, and of Benin, exceed immeasurably anything that has ever been reported of massacres and outrages in Armenia. The state of pillage and murder which has been going on for centuries on the Afghan frontier is infinitely worse than even the anarchy of which we hear in Crete, but yet, when we propose, by measures which are well within our power, to rescue these millions from suffering and outrage, then our critics have nothing to say, but sneer at our imperialism.

To say that the horrors of the Soudan and Benin "exceed immeasurably" anything that was reported of the massacres of Armenia, is purely the language of hyperbole; but assuming the literal correctness of these assertions, and having noted the attitude of our commerce and Government toward these customary slaughters of native races, what is the position of the Christian Church in the matter?

The truest builders of our great Empire are not those who lay its stones with the untempered mortar of blood, but such as bury those stones in the concrete of righteousness. Removing the aborigines from their native soil by methods of destruction, we the more easily possess their lands for our surplus population, and their minerals for our own aggrandisement; and by a fleet, an army, and police we and awe rather than into love. But in thus contravening the law of the Book by which as a nation we profess to be governed, this broken law, with the rancour of revenge that may still burn in many a native's breast, is as a mine of dynamite over which to rear Empire. Had faith in the Scriptures penetrated so far into the national heart as to make us put the Gospel before our arms, and our missionaries before our army, instead of 70,000 fighting-men in a frontier war, with great loss of life, great expenditure, and embittered foes in its train, we would probably, with less than the one twentieth part of that number of missionaries, and without these evil concomitants, have won for ourselves the loyalty and the love of a grateful, a happy, and a contented people.

In all Christendom the angel of war is abroad, and heeding his trumpet-call, the great nations

HASTEN FOR THE FINAL CONFLICT.

The everlasting clatter of the world's Press upon the subject of war; the tremor of commerce at every shadow that seems to darken the horizon of peace; the creation of new navies, and the increase of navies already formidable; the invention of arms of deadly efficiency; the support of monster armies; the inoculation of boys and youths with the spirit of militarism; these all are part and parcel of the preparation for that momentous event.

Thus prepared, and yet preparing, the nations, under the patronage of wealth, rank, power, intelligence and religion stand face to face, encased in arms, burning for revenge, suspecting, distrusting and hating each other, but unable to strike, for a gulf cleaved by inopportunity divides them; they await the passage of a reasonable pretext. And is that passage being made? Yes, through the thinned ranks of the weaker races. When these shall have been completely subdued and their lands appropriated, then shall the passage of the great trysting-place have been perfected, which entering, the era of mutual extermination will have been ushered in.

Does this not appear to be the inevitable trend of the present policy of Christendom?—a policy that has, in its contact with less vigorous races, largely substituted war for peace, and destruction for salvation. But if we would escape this Nemesis of judgment, let the Church first take her stand, and with no uncertain sound let her proclaim against the demon of war; then arresting his blood-stained footsteps in his ravages amongst the weak, she will be the better prepared to cut off his progress among the strong.

THEO. E. S. SCHOLES, M.D.

The Spurgeon Anniversary.

SIX years having passed since the great preacher entered into rest on the last day of January, the services on Sunday at the Metropolitan Tabernacle were of a memorial character. At the prayer-meeting in the Tabernacle on Monday evening there was a large attendance. Pastor T. Spurgeon, who presided, said there had been some difficulty how to arrange the meeting. It was thought that they might gather together in an informal way and speak about the various works in progress, and so glorify God in the pastor who six years ago laid down his burden, to be promoted to the ranks above. It was no wonder that some then said the work would go to pieces; but others, though conscious of the loss sustained, believed that God would still carry it on. Six years had passed, and the work still lasted and still lived. In some respects there had been diminution, but the Tabernacle was open Sunday by Sunday, and was well attended. The College and the Orphanage also prospered, while the colporteurs were still at work diffusing good literature. Other works also went on, and the old blessings attended them. The late pastor had laid the foundations well, and the work had lasted. The praise was not to them, but they would pledge themselves to go forward in the name of their Lord and Master. Revs. C. B. Sawday, John Wilson, Dr. McCaig, and others took part in the meeting.

Sunday Closing Demonstration.

THE temperance workers continue with undiminished vigour and enthusiasm their crusade against intoxicants. On Monday night they held a splendid meeting in the Queen's Hall—which was crowded in every part—the occasion being the third anniversary festival of the London United Temperance Council.

The ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY presided, and, in an address delivered with his accustomed vigour, confined himself to the question of Sunday closing of public-houses. In their fight against the overwhelming temptations which were perpetually crossing the paths of all men through strong drink they made slow progress. Slowness was inevitable in movements of this kind. At times they felt it was necessary to concentrate their efforts upon some one important step which if taken would really advance their movement, and there was no step, in his judgment, which it was more important to take than that of persuading the Legislature to deal with the liquor trade as they dealt with other trades, and to stop the opening of the public-houses on Sunday altogether if they could, but, at any rate, for such a time as should really make a difference in the present customs of our people.

The subsequent speakers included Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Canon Murnane, Mr. A. F. Hills, Rev. James Travers, and Canon Barker.

Thoughts for Parents.

2—JOY.

Galatians v. 22.

"FOR JOY THAT A MAN IS BORN INTO THE WORLD."

The spirit of thanksgiving is a good preparation for child-training.

Sunshine in the sky is delightful and desirable, so also is sunshine in the home.

To make happiness around does not require much sacrifice on the part of parents, but it requires tact and study and practice.

It is very easy to darken the outlook of the little ones; endeavour therefore to provide an atmosphere of joyfulness. Good qualities grow more quickly in sunshine than in shade.

"JOY IS A THING TO BE PRACTISED, LIKE THE VIOLIN."

Present to your child Christ as the Joy-giver. This is an attractive aspect to him; teach him true religion has nothing to do with melancholy countenances and mournful tones.

If you despond and complain, you darken lives.

Froebel attaches great importance to singing with children. "A merry heart doeth good like medicine."

True reverence is shown better in gladness than in storm.

THE MYSTERIES OF THE KINGDOM.—II.

It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. xiii. 11.

Every scribe instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.—Matt. xiii. 52.

HOW may we become scribes instructed unto or concerning the kingdom of heaven, so that, as a householder provides for his household, we may minister to the flock of God things new and old? Surely, first and chiefly, by learning and digesting all the Scriptures say about the kingdom, under the teaching of the Holy Spirit.

The central subject of all history, sacred or profane, Divine or angelic or human, is that of a kingdom. The great and all-absorbing question, which, like Aaron's rod, swallows up all others, is, Who shall reign, who is King?

Jesus is the key to Scripture. But Jesus is the Christ, the Anointed, the King.

This question, Who reigns? who is King? underlies all dispensation, all revelation. Eliminate it, and Scripture would lose its form, and be evacuated of its significance—as when a garment woven from the top throughout is drawn into a single thread.

History begins with the revolt and fall of the usurper Lucifer and of the angels who espoused his cause and who shared its consequences. It is the record of the conflict between the true King and the usurper. It ends with the final fall of the usurper, and the restoration of the kingdom to the Father, that God may be all in all. There is nothing in Scripture which is not vitally connected with the story of the Kingdom.

Let us very briefly review the events from the beginning to the end.

Lucifer, the shining one, aspires to be God, to sit on the throne of God. And he, with a large number of angels who followed him, are cast out of heaven.

But a question had now been raised which must be answered, for God acts upon his own principle: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

The earth is prepared for man; and man is created out of it and placed upon it. And God puts all things under his feet. Satan, once the shining one, now a fallen star, is permitted to test man, whether he will keep God's commandment or no.

Man yields to the tempter, and by so doing delivers the dominion he has received from God into the hands of Satan, who thus becomes the prince of this world.

But the all-wise God had foreseen this result; and by the covenant between the Father and the Son, at or before the foundation of the world, had fore-ordained, in the seed of the woman, a Lamb already in purpose slain, who through death should render powerless him that had the power of death, that is the devil: "And He shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel."

Now a testing of Satan himself begins, and it will be proved whether the creature who claimed the throne of the universe is competent to rule on the minute scale of this small planet.

The first stage of the solution of this problem is found in the history of the world during the first fifteen centuries—which became, as population increased, an awful period of lawlessness, corruption, and violence, in which God was not feared, nor man regarded, and the flood came and swept them all away.

In the new world God established civil government, and committed to Noah the sword of justice: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."

The prince of this world, who had made no attempt at government during the first period, henceforth does nothing but incite men to rebellion against God. Nimrod, the prototype of all the tyrant princes of this world, was a mighty hunter not only of wild beasts but of men, and in his days, if not under his direction, the tower of Babel was built, in rebellion against the command of God, who replied by the confusion of tongues and the scattering of the peoples.

Now God separates Abraham to Himself, the head of a nation in the flesh over whom God would establish a Theocracy, and whom, if they would obey his voice and keep his covenant, He would make a peculiar treasure to Himself, a kingdom of priests, a holy nation. Abraham was the father also of a spiritual nation, including all believers to the end of time—a spiritual house, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, a kingdom of priests—the very words used concerning Israel after the flesh. (Gen. xii., Ex. xix., 1 Pet. ii.)

But Israel demanded a king to judge them, like all the nations; and rejected God that He should not reign over them. (1 Sam. viii.)

The Books of Kings and Chronicles bear witness by their titles that they are the records of a kingdom. The three books which follow are governmental records, which present the God of heaven as reigning over all earthly monarchs.

The Book of Job would be unmeaning if it were not that He whose ways are under discussion is the Great King.

The Reign of God and of the King who is his Son is the golden thread which binds all the Psalms together, whether the King be in the depth of suffering or on the height of glory. The tone of royalty runs through the three Solomonic books, even though in the second it is in a minor key.

The prophets are all related to the Kingdom of God, and their writings are generally dated by reference to the monarchs reigning during their ministry. Daniel is a statesman, and all his prophecies concern Gentile or Messianic rule. The dominant note throughout the Old Testament is the Reign of God, and of the powers whom He ordained on earth.

The Story of Popish Dogmas.

SOME of your younger readers, unfamiliar with the story of the rise and progress of Popish dogmas, will be glad to have the following statement:—

	A.D.
Prayer for the dead	200
Worship of saints, martyrs, and angels	350
Worship of Virgin Mary (developed)	430
Priestly garments	500
The Mass in Latin	600
Papal supremacy	606
Worship of images and relics	788
Baptism of Bells	968
Obligatory celibacy of priests	1000
Infallibility of the Church (of Rome)	1072
Sale of indulgences	1190
Dogma of Transubstantiation	1215
Auricular confession	1215
Keeping the communion cup from laity	1415
Doctrine of purgatory	1439
Traditions of equal authority with Holy Scripture	1540
Pope's temporal power proclaimed	1854
Papal infallibility proclaimed	1870

Thus we see that Popery, in one sense, semper eadem. It moves, but it is always downward, and getting more and more imperious and impudent. The present concern of Romanism is to stamp out the Protestant religion. Prevailing frivolity and formality afford great opportunity for the spread of Romish superstition.

Cold or Hot?

By Dr. T. L. CUYLER.

COLD or hot, my friend? Feel your spiritual pulse and see. Put the Bible thermometer under your tongue. Search your heart and see how much love for Christ is left there. If, after such an honest examination, you find that the temperature has run low, very low—what then? Should you quit the Church and throw up your Christian profession? No! a thousand times no! The Holy Spirit's message to you is, "Be zealous, therefore, and repent." The only way to repent of sin is to quit it. The only way to warm a chilled frame is not to throw yourself into a snow bank, but to hasten to the fire. Come back to a deserted Saviour! Instead of erasing your blurred name from the church registry, seek a re-conversion.

Simon Peter's best work was done after he was re-converted. Do not stop with lamenting your neglect of the place of prayer. Open again the door of devotion, and go in and throw yourself down at the Master's feet, and cry out: "I have sinned; I am no more worthy to be called thy servant." Set up again your altar, and on it lay the sacrifice of a contrite heart. At the earliest moment lay hold of some blood-stirring Christian work; it will warm you up. It may take some time to get the blood into full, free circulation again, and to recover your lost ground and lost health. But when you do get a fresh tide of Christ's love pouring into your heart, and a fresh glow of his likeness on your countenance, you will feel as Lazarus must have felt when he shook off the grave-clothes and leaped into life again.

Refuge.

To my soul, in utter ruin,
Comes a message from the Lord,
Present pardon, full salvation—
As I am I trust his Word.

Out of Christ is death and sorrow,
Satan's desolate domain;
But in Christ is life and gladness,
He the circle of God's reign.

Why seek life apart from Jesus?
Seek the living in the grave?
Can the dead the dead awaken?
Christ and none but Christ can save.

Jesus died for our transgression,
Rose when sin was put away;
Now He gives us all the blessing
Of his resurrection day.

Taking freely as He giveth,
Trusting his atoning blood,
Sin is pardoned, Satan vanquished,
Saved, we stand with Christ in God.

Do we grieve to part with evil;
What is all we must forego?
Varnished sin! 'Tis but the fuel
Kindling for eternal woe.

O the blessings found in Jesus!
They can thrill life's deepest strings;
"God with us," the joy of heaven,
Sweetens all our Marah springs.

Clouds may rise and storms assail us
While we tread earth's desert way;
But within, the peace of Jesus
Shall sustain us day by day.

The Protestant Alliance Official Organ for February well sustains the improvement to which we recently called attention. Editorial articles on the Church of Christ and the Christian life are instructive in a high degree; and the story of Tyndale and the English Bible, as here told, should prepare the young people of Protestant families to hold their ground in the day of Roman temptation. The "Monthly Letter," embodied in this magazine, deals tersely and ably with over a score of subjects of passing or permanent interest. (1d. Partridge & Co.

God's Methods with Man:

Past, Present, and Future.

BY REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

IV.—DANIEL'S MISSING WEEK.

BETWEEN the coming of Christ for his people and his Millennial Reign there will be a short interval of seven years, full of interest because of the events that therein go forward upon the earth and in the heavens. When, at the end of the present dispensation, our Lord calls his Church away from the earth, that event ends one phase only of his work in our world, and ushers in another era of Divine activity. After verses 18 and 19 of Matt. xii. we make a distinct pause, because the remainder of the prophecy, as quoted in the two succeeding verses, has nothing whatever to do with the dispensation in which we now live. Emphasising the word till in ver. 20, we plainly see that when Christ sends forth judgment unto victory, He will break the bruised reed and quench the smoking flax. A careful examination of the context of this prophecy concerning the Messiah (Isa. xlii. 1-4) will show that the figures of speech just mentioned apply not to those who have weak, though sincere, aspirations after Christ, but to his enemies, who are thus magnificently satirised as weakness weakened, and as that which has within itself the elements of its own destruction. The great and beautiful truth which is so often associated with this imagery still abides; but we must be true to Scripture as it stands, and not seek to prop up even truth itself by misquotation. In the time yet to come, beyond this day of grace and mercy, God will overthrow his enemies, and will sweep before the majesty of his coming, as chaff of the threshing floor, the evil things which so affright us by their tremendous hold upon our age.

We are taught the same great truth from another standpoint by Luke iv. 18, 19. Our Lord reads in the Jewish synagogue words covering the scope and intention of this present dispensation. Referring to Isa. lxi. 1, 2, we discover that Christ had closed the book without reading all the words of the prophecy. "The acceptable year of the Lord" has lasted until now; and with equal certainty shall the Messiah once more take up that old-time prophecy, and fulfil it to the letter as regards "the day of vengeance of our God." The Scriptures with which we have dealt reveal

TWO ASPECTS OF CHRIST'S WORK.

"He shall not strive nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets"—the story of his work to-day; "till He send forth judgment unto victory"—the story of his work to-morrow. "The acceptable year of the Lord"—his work to-day; "the day of vengeance of our God"—his work to-morrow, beyond his coming to gather out his Church.

In popular conception, the day of judgment is a period of twenty-four hours, in which men are gathered together to hear sentence pronounced upon them; but it is really as much a dispensation as is this day of grace. What, think you, does the world wait for to-day? God's day of judgment! What do the oppressed masses need most? What do the groaning sorrows of earth's population demand? God's day of judgment, which has in it notes of hope, confidence, and joy far beyond everything else, for the world and for the sons of men. This is the day of grace, and, at its close, the day of judgment dawns which is to be characterised by the direct, positive government of the King Himself; but prior to his appearing with his people to enter upon that day, there will be the interval of which we must now more particularly speak.

Some of us still keep the Book of Daniel in our Bibles, esteeming it as equal in Divine authority and profitable teaching with every other Scripture. Read and ponder the whole of chapter ix. at your leisure; but we must now confine ourselves to certain points, beginning with verse 24, wherein we have the message from God which the angel Gabriel carried to Daniel. We, too, are interested in that message, "Seventy weeks are decreed upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy." We are familiar with the prophetic "week" as a period of seven years; therefore 490 years was the time assigned for the accomplishment of the prophecy; 1897 years have passed, to say nothing of the interval between the delivery of this message and the crucifixion of our Lord, yet that programme is evidently not finished. But there is a remarkable set of figures connected with the prophecy. In verse 25, two periods of seven "weeks" and sixty-two "weeks" are placed between the command to rebuild Jerusalem and the coming of Messiah. Exactly forty-nine years (seven "weeks") elapsed between the command to rebuild and completion of the work by Nehemiah; and from that time to the death of Christ was 434 years (sixty-two "weeks"). The figures give us the 483 years of verse 25; but, as compared with the seventy "weeks" of verse 24, we have a "week" of seven years missing.

WHERE IS THE MISSING WEEK?

My purpose is to show that the missing week comes at the end of this dispensation, the latter being an unmeasured interpolation upon God's times and seasons. As I have said before, prophetic truth has been much discredited by presumptuous attempts to fix a date for the Lord's coming. Both Christ Himself and his servant Paul have declared that it is not for us to know measurements which, in the wisdom of God, are not revealed. At the end of this age God will, in his renewed dealings with his earthly people, resume the "times and seasons" which were broken in upon when men rejected Christ.

Reverting to Daniel ix., let us look at verse 26: "After the threescore and two weeks shall the anointed one be cut off." The Authorised Version adds, "but not for himself"—an absolute mistranslation, which is corrected in the R.V., all Hebrew scholars agreeing that it should read, "and shall have nothing"; that is, He shall not then be the acknowledged King, but shall be cast out. At that point in the verse comes a colon, and then we read, "and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and his end shall be with a flood, and even unto the end shall be war; desolations are determined. And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week"—the missing seven years. From that colon follows a description of

EVENTS AT THE END OF THIS DISPENSATION.

The colon of Daniel is the comma which follows Isaiah's "acceptable year of the Lord." Here is the division between the dispensations, and at the close of the present age, when Jesus takes his Church to be with Himself, then shall times and seasons be resumed, Daniel's week (delayed in the eternal counsels) shall run its course upon the earth, God shall accomplish his ancient purposes, and the prophecies spoken to his people in other dispensations shall be fulfilled to the letter. Signs of the times show that our unmeasured age is nearing completion by the coming of the Master, but He teaches us to name no date.

Many among the people of God shrink from any reference to the Book of Revelation, but therein we shall find Daniel's interval between the coming and the reign of Christ viewed from a new standpoint. When this neglected Book is approached, the purpose seems too often to be, that men may explain it away by reading into it metaphor, figure, and allegory. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of the prophecy, and keep the things which are written therein" (i. 3)—the only book in the Bible that opens with a distinct blessing pronounced upon those who read its pages; and yet what portion of Scripture is so neglected? Shall we not be among those who diligently, prayerfully, and humbly search what God would teach us in that Book? There is a key which must be held before we can understand what seems to be a labyrinth. "Write, therefore, the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which shall come to pass hereafter" (i. 19)—the commission directly given to John by Jesus Christ.

How shall the things mentioned be divided? "The things which thou sawest" are the visions of Jesus [(chap. i.); and "the things which are" relate to visions of the churches (ii. iii.). Those letters of John were written to churches actually existing at the time, and the first application is to such communities; but the epistles reveal which is repeated with varying emphasis at one time or another in every successive age of the Church until to-day. We may find now both Laodicean and Philadelphian churches. "The things which are," exist in the present dispensation; but from chapter iv. to the end of the book, we have "the things which shall come to pass hereafter." It is, to me personally, a matter of surprise that the revisers have retained the word hereafter in i. 19, because the Greek words are meta tauta. The very first words of chapter iv. are "After these things," a phrase which excites little critical attention until compared with the Greek of i. 19. In both instances the words are the same.

"After these things I saw, and behold a door opened in heaven." From the beginning of iv. to the end of xix. a remarkable series of events follows on the earth. The Church of Jesus Christ is then in heaven. She is seen ever and anon in some place of heavenly glory; while upon the earth vials are being poured, trumpets are sounding, and all the strange and wonderful prophecies which have been uttered concerning the earth are shown to be fulfilled to the letter in every detail, in the day which lies beyond the present dispensation.

Here is the end of the interval with which this lecture deals—"And I saw the heaven opened; and behold, a white horse, and He that sat thereon, called Faithful and True; and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. And his eyes are a flame of fire, and upon his head are many diadems; and He hath a name written, which no one knoweth but He Himself. And He is arrayed in a garment sprinkled with blood: and his name is called the Word of God. And the armies which are in heaven followed Him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and pure. And out of his mouth proceedeth a sharp sword, that with which He should smite the nations: and He shall rule them with a rod of iron: and He treadeth the winepress of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God" (xix. 11).

He came to Bethlehem's manger with a view to preaching "the acceptable year of the Lord"; He will come with the armies of heaven to proclaim "the day of vengeance of our God." He came, long years ago, a lonely Man, our brother man, who should not cry nor lift up his voice in the streets; He will come again, to break the bruised reed, to quench the smoking flax. It is only another dispensation in the great plan of our King and Master, which will open when He comes to the earth with his gathered people.

I have not had time to deal with the things which shall go forward in earth and heaven during the interval between the close of this dispensation and the dawn of the millennium; that must be reserved for future consideration.

How Christ Slept in the Storm.

By Rev. JOHN McNEILL.*

"And He was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow: and they awake Him, and say unto Him, Master, carest thou not that we perish?"—Mark iv. 38.

I WANT to apply the question, "What manner of man is this?" at another point in the narrative. The storm came down on the boat. If ever the prince of the power of the air was let loose in his might, it was that night. If he could have sunk that boat, with that Passenger, what a sinking it would have been! Then you and I and the world would have sunk, and death and hell had triumphed over us.

That boat appeared like any other boat, only a little worse perhaps. I am so glad of that. If I had read that that boat, with Jesus lying sleeping in the stern, had gone through the storm to the other side on an even keel, then I would have been compelled to think that the miracle had a magical look. It would have been like a made-up story, like some of the miracles you find in sub-apostolic literature of a later date; about stone cocks that crowed, and so forth. I would have become one of those fashionable gentry who have difficulties about the supernatural. I could not have preached it or expounded it to any practical, helpful edification. I am glad that boat fared like any other boat, although Christ was on board. Now I know where I am. It has been true ever since Job's day that it is the boat with Christ in it that gets the brunt and fury of the storm. It is the believer who seems to be left to be the mockery and the sport of winds and waves down here. It looks as if the people who do not believe, and have not got Christ on board, and are not in the same boat with Him—as if the worldly, prayerless, careless,

GODLESS PEOPLE GET IT EASIER IN THIS WORLD.

The disciples were in jeopardy and were beginning to sink. Only it is a long beginning, which never gets past that stage. The Lord will not allow things to go all lengths, either with his Church or his people. But He has to prove to us that it is not our seamanship that keeps the boat afloat, but Christ's presence with us. That is our only—but blessed be God it is our perpetual—safety. Not by their own efforts, or oarsmanship, or long experience on that lake, were the disciples carried through that awful night. It was when they gave up all for lost that they found they were not lost at all. Christ's presence saved them, when they were utterly at their wits' end. When you get to that lowest point of human weakness and despair, and look round for more than mortal help, you find that the Lord God is there, nigh at hand, a present help in time of trouble.

You remember still further how it happened. Jesus was lying in the stern of the boat, asleep. There was He with his head on the steersman's seat, sound asleep. Again, I want to apply the disciples' exclamation here: What manner of man is this; for being sound asleep, with everybody else soundly wide awake and in danger of perishing? I thank the disciples for that word. How did He manage to sleep? If it was a wild night for them, was it not so for Him also?

How did He manage to sleep? He was human, even as they. For one thing, He was honestly tired and exhausted with hard work. It is a grand recipe for a good night's sleep, to be honestly busy through the day. I do not know if I am speaking to any of the unemployed—in a West-end sense, of course. If I am, my brother, my sister, go away and get something to do. It will secure a good night's rest for you. In a world like this and a city like London none should be idle.

There are lonely hearts to cherish
While the days are going by;
There are weary souls who perish
While the days are going by.

If a smile we can renew,
As our journey we pursue,
Oh the good we all may do,
While the days are going by.

You remember the story of the waggish old Scotch doctor. He had a lady patient, one of the kind that is never very well and never very ill; but she kept the doctor going. I suppose, as the Apostle would say, "to him it was not grievous, but for her it was safe." One day she had a new list of troubles, among the rest insomnia. Of course, she wanted him to put something into a bottle, to be put into her. But he was getting a little tired of her fancied ailments, and he said: "Madam, to enjoy a good night's rest you must live on sixpence a day, and earn it." I pass the prescription round. Get something to do. I do not wonder that some people do not sleep at night; it would be an outrage on nature if you did. Some of you who profess to be Christians, who eat four meals a day and do nothing—how can you sleep at night? God never made such an animal. You are an outrage on nature, and

A TERRIBLE BURDEN ON GRACE.

Go to work, lest the fulness of bread and the abundance of idleness of Sodom produce the rottenness of Sodom. It is repeated in this city to-day.

Then I believe, another reason why Christ slept so soundly was, He did not lie awake with an uneasy conscience, telling Him of things He had done or left undone during the day. A bad conscience is a restless bedfellow; how it kicks. When the day comes back upon you, with all its tangle, its shame, and its defeat, is it any wonder that sleep flies from you?

Let me say here that it is pathetic and blessed to think that there once lived a Man in this weary world who did the day's work in the day; who knew when night fell that He had nothing to do or to alter. I believe this world will evermore be dear to God, because Jesus lived and slept and suffered in it. That is what "binds it by golden chains about the feet of God." That prevented it from sinking down to chaos and perdition. Jesus was in it, and He has never left it, blessed be God; He is in it still, and that is what keeps it going.

As I have said, Jesus did not need to lie awake with an uneasy conscience for his sins of omission and commission. Again I am going to say a sharp thing. If some of you sleep soundly at nights, no matter what sort of weather it is outside, those perhaps who have had most to do with you through the day are not asleep—wife, servants, or others. They are lying awake, and maybe the scalding tear is falling as they think of the stabbing, the wounding, the vitriolic things you said through the day that you never should have said. It would be no wonder if you were restless; maybe it would be your judgment day before the time. Creep out of your bed; put the blood of Christ between you and your vile temper; and then creep in again. Maybe you will sleep when that sweet anodyne gives peace to your guilty conscience. Then, the first thing in the morning, go off hot-foot and take back the burning, stabbing, vitriolic words you should never have spoken. Christ had a peaceful conscience. He had never done anybody any wrong the whole day long, and He slept like a child on his mother's breast.

But I believe the best reason of all for his sound sleep was this: Tired and all as He was, when He lay down—I had almost said in the lying down; for, mind you, He did not go down on his knees to do it, or open a little book of devotions; with Him it was an instinct of his nature—as He lay down He crept "awa' ben" into his Heavenly Father's bosom. God's left hand was under his head, and his right hand did embrace Him. The same embrace held the disciples also, but through unbelief it was wasted on them; they failed to enjoy its clasp and pressure. That was why He slept. The winds only sang his lullaby. If He dreamt at all, He would dream that He was in Mary's bosom, with her voice crooning in his ear as when He was an infant. The waves only rocked Him to a deeper sleep. For "He trusted in God that He would deliver Him." And how splendidly it answered. "'Tis vain for you to rise early and to sit up late; to eat the bread of sorrows"; for "He giveth his beloved sleep." And Jesus took it; but the disciples would not have it. I say again, How splendidly it answered—this splendid, sublime, child-like trust in a present Father, in whose arms He passed the night, without a fear and without a care. The billows of hell rocked and raged round about Him, but

THEY FAILED TO BREAK HIS REST.

Partly it was to give us an example that we may follow in his steps. One of the great differences between us and the manner of this Man is that the things we are always preaching, praying, and exhorting about, Jesus did. He believed God; and there is the difference. Of course I know we must tug at the oar and work the baling dish to keep afloat. But it is not work, it is worry that is killing us. It is this horrible fear, "I will perish," that is knocking a hole in the boat of your heart, and from which the Lord would save you. Thou shalt never perish if thou wilt but believe in Him. Not a hair of your head shall perish. In your patience possess your souls. If thou art only in the same boat with Christ—and He will go aboard any boat where He is invited, no matter how small or leaky—thou wilt not founder. Christ's presence is thy safety. Thou art as imperishable and indestructible as Christ Himself.

Let us go right where the disciples went wrong. We greatly need it. You business men need it in the midst of your natural cares and anxieties. I charge you, seek to learn that divinest secret of having a heart that rests in the Son of God, and is delivered from this corroding care, and fear of perishing. You know what we read in the papers now and again. A Mr. So-and-So, as he was going down to business the other morning, was seen to reel and

STAGGER ON THE SIDEWALK.

He fell, and was carried into the nearest chemist's, and medical aid was summoned; but before the doctor arrived he had passed away. The doctor's verdict was that death had resulted from sudden failure of the heart's action. Yes, but up yonder in Heaven the true verdict was that he burst his heart, trying to bear a burden that God Almighty never asked any mortal man to bear unaided and alone. Slack off! Take it easier! Do not burst your heart and wreck your nerves. Slack off, I say! How? Turn to the Strong One for strength, to the Wise One for wisdom; flee to a present Almighty Saviour. That is the cleverest and brainiest thing that the brainiest City man ever did. I almost get mad at the idea that belief in Christ and praying to Him is unworthy of a business man, his abilities and brains—that faith in Christ is a weak-headed thing. I deny it. I repeat, that the cleverest, brainiest thing you ever did is to trust in Jesus Christ. It made our fathers the stalwarts they were, and we are becoming weaklings for want of it.

Christ awoke and rose. Ingratitude, more strong than winds and waves, quite vanquished his sleep. I do not know any finer sight in the Bible than Jesus rising—and in a sense the situation was sprung upon Him—rising in this wind and wave swept boat, with the disciples standing there affrighted, and the boat beginning to settle down by the stern. For I have been in a sinking boat myself. He arose. No sign of panic or fear. With one word he spoke down the winds; with another He rebuked the sea. The winds whispered their submission in his ear, almost apologising and saying that in that lowly guise they had failed for the moment to recognise their Master. Then He spoke to the storm and unbelieving panic in the disciples' faithless hearts, "How is it ye have no faith?" Notice the narrative closes here. They had nothing to say: not a word of justification of their terror.

I know Simon Peter well enough, and I wonder he had nothing to say. I tell you when he has nothing to say there is a great calm! That is a day to be out in! I wonder he did not turn round to the Master and say, "Do you ask us why we are so full of fear? Listen to the wind. Look at the sea. See us here standing in the water, and the boat going down. Just because we are fishermen, and because we know what this storm means for other boats—for to-morrow this lake will be a vast wandering grave, with so many broken widows' hearts and weeping orphans—no wonder we were afraid. Master, it is a falsetto note to say, 'Why are you so full of fear?'" Ah, looking at the winds and waves and their past experience and helplessness, Peter might have had justification for his fear. But, looking into the face of his Questioner, he was silent, and had not a word to say.

So it is still. I know it is A DANGEROUS WORLD.

We are faced by temptations, storms, and trials. But you know that Christ means peace—peace by the blood of his Cross if your sins torment you; peace by the power of his arm; peace by many a word on which He has caused us to hope, and that shall never pass away. That word of his is like the chain cable behind which a man-of-war can ride out the hurricane in perfect safety. Hang on to the chain cable of God's sure word. That anchor cable never breaks; it has a turn round the eternal throne.

Compel your soul to cease from your own skill and effort and look to Jesus and you will have peace. Fire won't burn you. I do not care what happens to your boat; your boat is not you, any more than your coat is you. Water will not drown you; death will not kill you; sin will not damn you, if you will look to Jesus. He is in the boat with you. He is the Great Pilot, and will safely bring you to the other side.

No doubt the devil was busy that night with Peter, and John, and the rest. He would be saying, "Don't you see you have found out Christ to-night? Here you are in the boat in a big storm, and Jesus is lying asleep like another Jonah. Pitch Him overboard, and you will find the boat so much lighter without Him."

Ah, you smile, but there is a great point here. Where is the man and woman in this audience who has not been tempted by the foul black devil from hell—though he comes as an angel of light. "Faith, prayer, religion," the devil says, "are all very well in fine weather; but don't you believers see that you are not a bit better off than unbelievers. Pitch religion overboard; it is only deck-hamper. You will have so much more freedom without it." Don't you do it. With or without Christ you will have trouble, and trial, and temptation; losses, crosses, sorrows, death at last. The tremendous difference is this. With Christ you shall reach the other side; without Christ you shall perish in the angry waters. See that you have Christ, and you have Him if you only trust in Him.

Great Stambridge is a village about three miles out of Rochford, Essex. There is no chapel or church of any kind in the village, although a little distance out of the village there is a church. In March, 1897, a few Christian working men from various chapels and churches banded themselves together, and rented a cottage, to commence an undenominational mission, in which they preached and formed a Sunday-school. The cottage soon became too small for those who came, so those few earnest men with their own hands and time and money pulled down the back of the cottage, extended the walls, and put on an iron roof. They have exhausted their resources financially, and need a little help to fit up the inside of the hall. Having been down there preaching and visiting amongst the villages, I have found several cases of genuine conversion as the result of the new mission. Any help in books or money may be addressed to H. W. Knight, Hon. Sec., High-street, Rochford.

HOME MISSIONS.

Young City Workers.

A MEETING of friends and workers in connection with Mrs. Fisher's evangelistic work among young women and girls engaged in City work-rooms and warehouses was held on Thursday afternoon at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. rooms.

Mr. M. H. HODDER expressed once more, as he has so often done in past years, his intense interest and strong faith in this work on behalf of girl-workers in the City. He rejoiced very particularly in the dinner-hour services, where God had of late been very markedly present. He gave some details of the dining-room operations, and the quantity and quality of the food supplied at so low a price. This, he felt, was a very real and important benefit to the girls, for whom there existed few fit and proper places of refreshment within reach of their slender means. Says Mr. Kemp, the manager: "'The Old Welcome' is daily patronised by hundreds of girls who start coming for soup or pudding (1d.) when about fourteen years of age, and keep coming as they grow up to better positions. Since the Cripplegate fire the trade fell off, but now that the girls are finding work again it is as busy as ever. The food is nutritious, thoroughly clean, and fit for anyone to eat. The quantity and prices suit their pockets. The viands seem highly enjoyed. After the meal many attend the midday service and find food for their souls."

Mrs. FISHER recalled the goodness of the Lord during the past twenty-one years since she commenced her work in the City workrooms. What a privilege to find these rooms opening. For example, one brother and sister present go every week into a workroom where 150 women are employed. A few details followed as to the actual work carried on among the hosts (supposed to be 20,000) of young women engaged in the factories and workshops. The dinner-hour meetings in the Y.M.C.A. Lecture Hall and in "The Welcome" are wonderfully attended, and accompanied by many indications of blessing. The Thursday and other evening meetings are also of great interest. Mention was also made of the sufferers in the recent Cripplegate fire, and effort made for their help; also in aid of women (some nearly seventy years of age) who have been out of work for ten weeks. The flowers sent by the Bible Flower Mission and others had been the means of bringing some worldly girls to listen to the Gospel. A letter was read from a friend who labours among 180 young women, showing the importance of personal work. Meanwhile, Mrs. Fisher urged the great need for funds in aid of the work.

A lady, who, with her sister, takes the dinner-hour service twice a week, said that there were few opportunities for personal dealing at these meetings, owing to the hurry of the girls to get back to work. None the less, the girls had been interested in many ways, and really the Gospel had been the means of winning not a few. Brief as the time is, several had come into the little office seeking help to find Christ. The speaker also told, in a most interesting way, of open-air dinner-hour gatherings, at which Christian girls give testimony and sing. A case in connection with the Bible classes had lately given peculiar pleasure, two sisters, backsliders for many years, being restored to God and set to work for Him.

Quite a number of testimonies followed, both by ladies and gentlemen, some of these showing very strikingly the blessing which this work had been to their own souls. Others gave practical hints as to the conduct of services in work-rooms, where the girls are often inclined to be somewhat rowdy. A gentleman who with his wife conducts two factory services told of the welcome given by the girls, and of the results in their lives. Many girls sink into ill-health, and in such cases they are followed up and often led to decision. Other workers spoke of varied forms of effort, all aiming at the conversion of the girls, and many telling with thankfulness signs of blessing.

Friendless and Fallen.

THE annual prayer-meeting in connection with the Homes and Open-all-night Refuge was held last week in the Council Room, Exeter Hall. The room was full of subscribers, workers, and others interested in the work of training respectable young girls for service and rescuing the betrayed and outcast. The audience was thus a representative one, several friends connected with other kindred societies being present.

Mr. F. H. Stone, a member of the committee, presided, and Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of New Court, Tollington Park, delivered an appropriate and forceful address bearing upon the means to obtain power for service. The marked blessing which has been vouchsafed to the work of the Homes during the past year was the occasion for much thanksgiving. Earnest prayer was offered for the success of the work during the present year.

It may be noted that the preventive work of the Institution has prospered during the year, and the committee are glad to be able to report that the majority of applications both of the Friendless and the Fallen were of a hopeful character. The exact figures dealing with admissions, results, and other particulars are not yet tabulated; in due time they will be forwarded to every contributor.

There are certain serious responsibilities: the rebuilding of the laundry at Parsons Green, an important and necessary undertaking, has been carried out under the most careful supervision, and it will be seen that a very substantial and durable building is in permanent possession of the Institution, equipped with all the sanitary and convenient provisions so essential in these days. It has also been found necessary to reconstruct the drainage of the Home at Milton House at a considerable cost. These expenses, however, are no more than is common to the responsible managers of house property held in trust for charitable purposes, and in due time it is felt that, relying on Divine providence, all necessary means will be provided in the future, as in the past, by the liberality of the numerous supporters of this mission of mercy.

A paper recently issued by the committee, and which has been sent, as far as possible, to all the subscribers and friends of this work of mercy, shows what has been accomplished by God's blessing during the past, and is well worth the perusal of our readers. Copies will be sent post free upon application to Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

Homes for Poor-Law Children.

THE continued progress of the Sheffield Scattered Homes for Poor-Law Children is most gratifying. The Daily Chronicle says:—

"During last year over 700 children passed through the Homes. These children receive a humane training under foster-parents; they attend the Board schools and Sunday-schools, and mix with other children without distinction. The children soon lose all taint of pauperism, and are better looked after in health, education, and conduct than if they were packed into huge institutions. The weekly maintenance of the children is from 2s. to 8s. per week less than in the London barrack schools."

No testimony could be more satisfactory than this. Anything that helps to destroy the taint of pauperism, and to give the handicapped little folk a fair start in life's race, merits hearty commendation. Other unions are taking steps to establish institutions on similar kindred principles.

The Aldenham Institute, in connection with Regent-square Church, issues a little quarterly report referring to the work of the Christian Workers' Union. The attendance at the Sunday evening services has largely increased, and there has been a greater increase during the winter months. The Gospel has been proclaimed, with all faithfulness, Sunday after Sunday, and many souls have been brought to the feet of the Saviour. The blind are visited and read to. One blind man, in very poor circumstances, who has been constantly visited and cared for for years, has been richly blessed by having his spiritual eyes opened. The Sunday morning breakfasts were resumed on Sunday, November 21, and have been most successfully carried on up to date. The various Bible classes are well attended and most encouraging, while many other branches (including a goose club) are in full swing.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, February 6.

"It is He that shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. i. 21 (R.V.).

THIS is the mission of Immanuel. He came, not as the Jews expected, to break the yoke of Cæsar and re-establish the kingdom of David, but to break the yoke of sin, and set up the sinless kingdom of God. The Church has too often misunderstood the object of his advent, as though He meant simply to save from the consequences and results of sin. This were too limited a programme for the Son of God. To cancel the results and leave the bitter cause; to deliver from the penalty, but not from the power; to rescue his people from the grasp of a broken law, but confess Himself unable to deal with the bad virus of the blood—this were to fail. No; dare to take this announcement in its full and glorious meaning, written as it is on the portico of our Saviour's life.

What an admixture of blood flowed through his veins. Let your eye glance through the list of his genealogy. Men and women, notorious for their evil character, lie in the direct line of his descent. This was permitted, that He might fully represent our fallen race, that no sinner, however bad, should be abashed to claim his help, and that it should be clearly shown how powerless sin was to tarnish or taint the holiness of his sinless nature. Though He was made in the likeness of sinful flesh, He knew no sin.

Art thou one of his people? Hast thou accepted his rule, and allied thyself with Him? For if so, He shall save thee. Though possessed with seven devils, He will drive them out. Though thy passions run fire, He can tame them. Only abandon thyself to Him, and He will save thee, though it cost Him his blood.

MONDAY, February 7.

"They offered unto Him gifts, GOLD...."—Matt. ii. 11.

Gold is for the king. It is meet that Matthew should tell this story: for his is pre-eminently the royal Gospel. Long before the Lord was born, these Eastern sages must have been started on their way, whither and to worship whom they knew not; but an ancient prophecy had foretold that to this babe should be offered of the gold of Sheba, and that kings should bring Him the riches of the Gentiles.

How useful this gold was to Joseph in the following months! It helped him to defray the cost of the journey into Egypt and back, and to maintain his precious charges there. The Heavenly Father knew what those needs would be, and met them by anticipation. If you concern yourself in the affairs of his kingdom, and will obey the warnings and directions He gives, if you dare to step out on the path of literal obedience, you will find that God will become responsible and defray the costs. Gold is naught to Him; He can make it out of common dust by a word.

It is sweet to think of all the gold presented to Jesus in after ages. The wealth of the rich, the golden ornaments taken from the person, the tiny pieces of gold which represent the patient savings of the poor—all these have made up the flowing river of which those golden gifts of the Magi were the first trickling drops. Have you given gold to Him, you who know Him, not as the Babe only, but as the Man of the Cross; not as man merely, but as the Son of the Highest? You may have given Him copper in abundance, silver in handfuls, but surely you might spare Him gold; and let your future gifts to Him be of the best. Or, if poverty restrains you, let the philosopher's stone of Love turn the meaner metals to gold.

TUESDAY, February 8.

"In those days cometh John the Baptist."—Matt. iii. 1.

The Evangelist is fond of the present tense, "cometh." Yes, these records are true to all time. You tell me that they happened nineteen centuries ago. Certainly, but they happened yesterday, and are happening to-day. Remember that He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. He was, and is, and is to come. Christ was born into the world, but He is always being born into the hearts of men in Regeneration. John preceded and announced his advent in the wilderness of Judæa, and He is always preparing his way into the hearts and lives of men. Of days of conviction of sin, of remorse, of repentance, we may truly say, "In those days cometh John the Baptist."

John the Baptist is sadly needed to-day. Much of what we call Christianity is but christianised heathenism. It glozes over covetousness, luxurious self-indulgence, compliance with fashion and worldliness; it admits into its high places men who thrive on the oppression of the poor; it condones the oppression of the native races, the sale of opium and spirits, the shameless traffic in impurity; it rears the ideals of the world in the place of the changeless cross of the slain Christ with its divine sorrow and blood. Ah, we need that John the Baptist should come with his stern words about the axe, the winnowing-fan, and the fire. Nothing less will avail to prepare the way for a new coming of Christ. And if the professing Church will not heed his voice, she will herself be swept away as Judaism was.

WEDNESDAY, February 9.

"Jesus was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil."—Matt. iv. 1.

Yesterday the opened heavens, to-day the burning cinders of the wilderness of temptation. Then the voice of the Father owning Him as the Well-beloved, now the hiss of the tempter. And is it always thus? Certainly! Wherever there is the Christ life, it passes through these same experiences. The scene at the Jordan is intended to ~~prepare~~ for this. You will find that the Holy Spirit often anticipates coming trial by granting some great revelation of God; but He who gives the one leads into the other. In no other way can the precious bestowments of God's grace be rendered permanent. Their rare colours must be burnt in with fire, or they will fade. But, though tempted, we must resist the devil.

Would you give the bread of life to thousands? You must refuse to use your opportunity to make bread for your own gratification. You cannot use your power for others and for yourself. If you elect to use it for them, you must be content to wait till the Father sends his angels to minister to you. In the meanwhile live by faith on his words.

Would you teach the magnificence of a faith that can trust God to preserve it, though it steps from the mountain brow on to thin air? You must deny yourself the use of it for purposes of ostentation; and refrain yourself till God, not Satan, calls for the abandonment of faith.

Would you win the kingdoms of the world? You must do it, not by methods which commend themselves to human prudence, but through the death of the Cross and the falling into the ground to die.

THURSDAY, February 10.

"That ye may be sons of your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. v. 45.

We are made sons by regeneration, through faith in the Son; but we are called to make our calling and election sure—to approve and vindicate our right to that sacred name. We can only do this by showing in word and act that Divine life and principles animate us.

Jesus teaches that the life of God in the hearts of his children will show itself in pure and unaffected love. He said in effect, "God is good: God forgives: God bears with wrong and sin: God loves those who hate Him, blesses those who curse, bestows his favours on the false and unjust, suffers long and is kind; believes, hopes, bears all things. Therefore, if you are his children, do as He does, as I do: follow Me: live as I live: become as a bird, a lily, a little child: be pure, merciful, lowly, gentle, strong in righteousness, and you will be called the sons of God, yours will be the kingdom of heaven."

There were several things the Lord could not say fully in this opening statement. That obedience to his precepts would inevitably conduct them to a cross, that the strength for such a life could only be secured through the coming of the Comforter, that the progress of the kingdom would be slow and arduous—these things were for the time veiled and hidden. But his main object was to teach that Christianity must be a life after the model of God's. Christian disciple, art thou living this life? Not by a creed, a ritual, a profession, but by living the life, is thy true nature discerned, whether thou art wheat or tare, child or hypocrite.

FRIDAY, February 11.

"Thy Father which is in secret...which seeth in secret."—Matt. vi. 18.

How fondly Christ repeats these words (4, 6, 18). Though compelled to live so much in the public gaze of men, his heart was always sighing for the secret place of fellowship with his Father, who waited for Him there.

Of course, the main object of these paragraphs was to withdraw his disciples from the excessive outwardness of the age in which He spoke, and which necessarily detracted from the singleness, directness, and simplicity of the religious life. It is impossible to perform our religious duties before men without insensibly considering what impression we are producing, and how far their estimation of us is being enhanced. And in so far as we seek these things the stream is contaminated with mud and silt, and becomes turbid. We have just as much religious life as we show to God in secret—just that, no less, no more. Whatever is not wrought between thee and God, with no record but his eye, is chaff which the wind driveth away.

Here is a test for our alms, our prayers, and our fasting from sin and self-indulgence: If we do any of these to maintain or increase the consideration that men have of us they count for nothing in the eye of God. But whatever is done for Him alone will secure his inevitable notice and reward. Dwell on that very definite assurance: "Shall recompense thee." There is no doubt about it. For every petition breathed into his ear, for every sigh and tear, for every abstinence from sin and self, there will be a certain recompense after the Divine measure. Such seeds shall have a prolific harvest. Seek then the secret place, where prying eyes cannot follow, and curious ears cannot overhear.

SATURDAY, February 12.

"With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you."—Matt. vii. 1.

This is an invariable principle. Christ did not make it true by saying it; He said it because it was true. There are at least three policies of life—that of the churl, who never gives unless he is compelled; of the niggard, who metes out from the tiniest measure on which he can lay hands; of the bountiful man, who is ever meting out his stores with lavish hand. If he gives, it is to his uttermost; if he loves, it is with all his heart; if he forgives, he crowns the forgiven one with lovingkindness; if he puts his hand to constructing aught, every part of it bears trace of the wealth of his taste, and gift, and self-sacrifice.

It might be supposed that such a policy would lead to bankruptcy of resources and speedy impoverishment; and for fear of this most refrain from adopting it. They either do not give, or give stintingly and fearfully. But the remarkable fact is, that when a man is using this large measure towards others they catch it up and fill it with their bountifulness towards him. They mete out their love and gifts according to the measure of his giving. This is an invariable principle: begin serving men with a miser's hand, and they will do the same to you; begin, on the other hand, serving men without stint, and they will do the same to you.

Live a royal life, child of God, as becomes such a Father. Give, expecting nothing again, with full measure, pressed down, and running over. Give not so much money as love, and tenderness, and human sympathy: give as one who is always receiving from the boundless resources of God. And, provided always that thy motives are pure, it will come back to thee. God will see thee bountifully rewarded after Heaven's own measure. F. B. M.

That Which Abides.

"Wonderful ways of teaching He hath;
And wise to salvation He makes us through faith."

Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the Scripture, might have hope.

THERE is no true life which has not some very broad shadows cast at times across its pathway, but God always puts the bright light behind the cloud, and when we follow his guiding hand, though the night be over us, and the foe be near, the cloud itself becomes a pillar of fire, and the raging sea a path of safety.

Let us see how the sunlight of hope shines out with special brilliancy, by means of this teaching by comparison, from two passages, one in the Old and the other in the New Testament. In the 90th Psalm we have one of the most striking pictures of the brevity and frailty of human life which we find in the whole Bible. Notice some of the figures used: "Carried away as with a flood," "Like a ship," "Growing up in the morning, in the evening cut down and withered," "Consumed," "Troubled," "Soon cut off," "The days of our years only three score years and ten; then labour and sorrow."

Not a very inspiring picture, if it were not enclosed for us in a framework of such glorious gilding, so that on one side of it, in the first and second verses, we see man's frailty encircled by God; our little life taken up to find its dwelling-place in Him, who is "from everlasting to everlasting"; and on the other side of the picture, in the last verse, we lay hold upon that which defies all time, decay, and death. "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us, and establish Thou the work of our hands upon us, yea the work of our hands establish Thou it."

Establish! Compare the word with the tone of the preceding verses, and what a different note is struck. By a swift, wondrous transition we have left behind the withered grass, the brief, uncertain span of our numbered days, and we have found something in this short life of ours which will abide, which God Himself will establish, make sure, strong, lasting.

"The work of our hands!" Our life-work made true, firm, enduring, because linked to the life and work of God, while upon it and us rests the "beauty," "the glorious majesty of the Lord our God." This beauty can be no fading beauty, not cut down as the grass or withered as the morning flower, for it pertains to Him who is "from everlasting to everlasting"; and it is no superficial adornment, but inward beauty of character, for it is his of whom it is said that He is glorious in holiness. "What matters it, then, that our time on earth is short, our days swifter than a weaver's shuttle," if we know, notwithstanding, that we can

Weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
When we do God's will with a cheerful heart
And with hands that are swift and willing?

Or need we grieve that the work of our hands here is soon done, having the assurance that God will establish it for ever?

Passing on to the New Testament, in 1 Cor. xv. we have the same line of thought, but enlarged and illumined by the light which streams from the empty grave of the risen Saviour. We are carried from one picture to another. "Corruption, incorruption." "Dishonour, glory." "Weakness, power." "A natural body, a spiritual body." "The earthly, the heavenly." "Mortality, immortality." Till at last the dark side of life vanishes altogether, and all is for ever bright, "death is swallowed up in victory."

In the last verse of this chapter the leading thought is much the same as in the last verse of the xcth Psalm. We are pointed to that which abides. And here the work of our hands "has a new and significant name given to it, it is called "the work of the Lord." We find, too, the thought of solidity and abidingness, which we have in the psalm in the word "establish," expressed here by the words, "steadfast," "immovable," "not in vain."

What is this work upon which the Word of God sets the stamp of eternal value? St. Paul addresses this Epistle, "Unto the Church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." And with these words before us we may change somewhat the character of the question, and ask, What is, or should be, the lifework of every one of those that are sanctified, and who call on the name of Jesus Christ? In a few words, is it not this? To build up by God's grace within themselves, and by every means in their power to help others to do the same? Is not this the work which is "not in vain," which God will "establish," and upon which the Master will pronounce his "Well done"?

St. Paul claimed for himself, and for those to whom he wrote, the answer to the prayer of the Psalmist, "Establish thou the work of our hands," for he speaks with confident assurance: "Ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." What will be the reward of the good and faithful servant? "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The Bible teaches clearly that the Christian is not to understand this word "reward" by the interpretation which the world puts upon it. It is not something distinct and apart from the service rendered and the work done, but it is very closely connected with the labour itself.

IF OUR HEART IS IN THE WORK

we are doing (and God claims whole-hearted service) what reward could compare to the reward of seeing our work perfected, and the purpose we had set before us fully accomplished? Of our Lord it is said, "Who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame." What was the joy set before Him? Was it not the joy of possessing the world He had redeemed, the joy of work accomplished? "He shall see," writes Isaiah of the Messiah, "of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied"; and if we want to know what is the only reward which will satisfy the heart of Christ, we shall find it in his own words in John xvii.

If we would enter into the joy of our Lord we must first be possessed by his Spirit; the mind that was in Christ Jesus must be in us. His purpose must be our purpose, his will our will, his work our work. Then his joy will be our joy, his reward our reward, his victory our victory, his heaven our heaven. "We know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is"; and can any reward be greater than this?

God has one design in all his dealings with us, and it is to bring us ever into closer sympathy with Himself, and to make us partakers of his nature, that we may love what He loves, and delight in the things He delights in. And He opens our eyes to see how we can lay up gladness for ourselves and others by doing his work here, and He prepares us, by this same doing of his will, for the more perfect service beyond, for

What are the joys of heaven but those of love?
What God's own bliss?—the bliss of doing good Unlimited and perfect.

St. Paul speaks of a "crown of righteousness," and though it would be vain for us to attempt to fathom the depth of meaning in his words, yet on the very surface of them we cannot fail to see the certainty of the completion and perfecting of Christlike character and Christlike work. Crowned with righteousness! All wrong vanished, all hindrances for ever removed. Crowned with righteousness!

Then shall I hear, and see, and know
All I desired or wished below,
And ev'ry power find sweet employ
In that eternal world of joy.

If It Were Missing!

SPEAKING of the prominence of the Cross of Jesus Christ in the New Testament teaching, a Congregational minister in Essex, a Sunday or two ago, held up to his astonished congregation a mutilated Testament, out of which he had cut every reference to the Death and Cross of Jesus, and showed them both the gaps and the mass of cuttings.

Then he proceeded: "What is the result? Why, whole chapters come out of the Acts, for the early sermons of the disciples could not have been but for that Death which gave them their text. Romans is left full of reasoning, but without any reasons—the great reason for all belief, the Cross of Christ, has gone.

"In Corinthians there is no Communion and no Resurrection chapter. The ambassadorial appeal to men to be reconciled to God goes out, and if a man asks 'Why?' when Paul says 'The love of Christ constraineth me,' there is no answer.

"Galatians has lost its keynote, and Works have the best of it against Grace. The first glorious chapters of Ephesians are missing, and as for the exhortations left, they have no satisfactory reasons for obeying them. The grand chapter in Philippians telling of the humiliation of the Son of God vanishes, and Paul's 'Therefore hath God highly exalted him' loses its force. There is no 'therefore.'

"Hebrews might have been left unwritten, excepting the chapter on faith. The greater part of the First of Peter is missing because the Cross is missing. John's Epistles, without the blood of Jesus, go on without beginning.

"The Revelation loses its centre-piece without the Lamb who was slain. The books are never opened, for none is worthy, and the great throng have unwashed robes. In short, the Cross and Death of Jesus is the keystone of the great arch of New Testament truth. Take it away, and the arch falls to pieces.

"Let this mutilated Testament be supposed the real one! Let there be no Cross, no Atonement, and what is left for us? Only an exhaustive effort to live up to the teachings which fell from the lips of the prophet of Nazareth! Only doing daily the best we can, with a best that is bad! Only, at the end, a fearful trembling horror as we ask, 'Have I done enough?' Only a looking up with dread to a God who never makes allowances. But, thanks be to God, there was a Cross, there is an Atonement, and a God beseeching us to be reconciled to Him."

The Christian Church:*

What is its Scriptural Meaning and Use?

By Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P.

NO term used in the New Testament has suffered more from the accretions of time than the word "Church." Indeed, over the most of Christendom it has lost almost altogether the meaning it had in the mouth of Christ and his apostles. In the Roman, Greek, and High Anglican Communions it represents a sacerdotal body claiming to possess supernatural powers, and is thought to be the sole intermediary through which God transacts with man. It is, indeed, a continuation of the Jewish priesthood under New Testament forms. It pretends to offer sacrifices to God as they did; to make atonement for sin, and to absolve upon confession and penance. It claims these powers altogether apart from moral or spiritual character; just as bad high priests existed under the Jewish law, without forfeiting their office, so bad priests and bishops are thought to possess Divine prerogatives in virtue of their office.

The means through which these powers are conferred is "ordination" by a bishop, in the line of the apostolic succession; that is by one who can trace his "orders" back in an unbroken line to the apostles. It is conceived that God designed to keep this line unbroken, just as the Aaronic priesthood was kept intact; and despite many lacunæ in ecclesiastical history, it is imagined that the true succession was never lost. It follows that all episcopal churches outside the Roman and Greek communions derive their orders ultimately from them, for they were the sole channels for more than a thousand years through which these orders could pass. The effect of this theory is therefore to attract the smaller bodies to the larger, as by the law of gravitation; and it needs strong centrifugal forces to keep them from merging into one.

Putting aside tradition as of no real value, we ask, What authority is there in the New Testament for these astounding assumptions? There is no priestly order in the New Testament; the word "priest" never being applied to a minister of religion. Many names are given to him, bishop or overseer, presbyter or elder, pastor, teacher, evangelist, but never priest. With extraordinary care language is so framed as to there is hardly a trace of distinction between what we call "clergy" and "laity." The rudimentary idea of the Church seems to be evolved almost unconsciously out of a small assemblage of Christian believers; they required teachers and presiding officers, and these were appointed by the Apostles, and apparently the names Presbyter and Bishop —i.e., Overseer—were given to designate age and fitness. Nothing in the nature of an hereditary caste is hinted at. No rigid organisation is laid down, like a fixed mould, but the needs of the infant churches are met as they arise by practical arrangements.

These arrangements were made by the Apostles under Divine guidance; they contain the seeds of all church order, but they are studiously simple and unconventional. They were not laid down with the minuteness that pertains to doctrine; they were evidently meant to be outlines which future ages should fill up. They provide for healthy growth, and for the use of sanctified common sense. We see nothing like the Procrustean system of sacerdotalism, nor even the germ from which it may be developed. It is altogether inconceivable that, if God had rested the salvation of men on a single order of priests, He would not have plainly said so. He spoke with exceeding clearness about the Aaronic priesthood; why this silence about the Christian priesthood? The only reason is that no such order was framed. We have then to ask of the word "church"? It is an unfortunate translation of the Greek word "Ecclesia," and comes to us through the Gothic language from a derivative of the word "Kurios" Lord. It has that obscurity of meaning which lends itself so easily to priestly glosses. The true meaning of the word Ecclesia is Congregation or Assembly. In the English Bible of Henry VIII.'s time it was rendered "Congregation"; had that word been retained, it is difficult to see how a priestly sense could have been attached to it.

In the Septuagint version of the Old Testament the same word Ecclesia translates the Hebrew word, which signifies the Congregation of Israel. It corresponds with the word Synagogue, which means literally a congregation, or a gathering together. However we may translate the word Ecclesia, which we now render church, it has no priestly meaning, but the root idea is evidently a gathering or collection of Christian believers. It is applied in the New Testament to a single household, "the Church which is in thy house." When the jailor at Philippi believed with all his house they constituted a "church" in Apostolic usage. The assemblies of where the Gospel was preached were called "churches." We have the church at Jerusalem, the church at Antioch, the church at Rome; we have the well-known case of the seven churches in Asia, to whom the Apostle John wrote. Yet over and above these separate and local churches arose the grand conception of one organic whole as described in Ephesians and Colossians. "He gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 22, 23).

The Church is the bride of Christ. "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave Himself for it; that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word; that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish" (Eph. v. 25-27).

As Eve was formed out of Adam's side, so the Church was formed out of Christ. "We are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones." Again, "He is the Head, we are the members." As the wife forsakes all for her husband, so the Church forsakes all for Christ. In this sense there is a true unity in the Church—"that they all may be one as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us."

(To be concluded.)

The Vagaries of Fashionable Dress are really beyond human understanding. The most recent Parisian whim is to wear a small live tortoise chained to the corsage with its carapace studded with jewels. Possibly the boring of the carapace causes little pain to the little reptile, but it shows a most cruel disposition to chain any creature into one position. There seems to be no limit to the extravagant conduct of people who wish to attract notice to themselves. It is to be hoped that the legal proceedings commenced by the French Society for the Protection of Animals will be successful in putting a stop to so revolting a practice.

Your Title Examined.*

By the late Dr. A. B. EARLE.

LET me urge you to make a thorough examination of your title for heaven. Do not rest until you can say, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day."

Yes, I'm secure beneath thy blood,
And all my foes shall lose their aim:
Hosanna to my Saviour God,
And my best honours to his name.

To assist you in making this examination I will answer, as well as I am able, the question, What ought to satisfy me that I am a Christian?

And perhaps I can do this in no better way than by making use of "Ten Evidences of Conversion," which I prepared some years ago, and had printed on a little card. On one side are these "evidences," and on the other ten questions for "self-examination" for older Christians, which were originally drawn up only for my own heart.

THE EVIDENCES OF CONVERSION.

For Young Christians.

1. A full surrender of the will to God.
2. The removal of a burden of sin, gradually or suddenly.
3. A new feeling of love to Christians and to Jesus.
4. A new relish for the Word of God.
5. Pleasure in secret prayer, at least at times.
6. Sin, or sinful thoughts, will cause pain.
7. Desire and efforts for the salvation of others.
8. A desire to obey Christ in his commands and ordinances.
9. Deep humility and self-abasement.
10. A growing desire to be holy and like Christ (1 John iii. 3).

SELF-EXAMINATION.

For Older Christians.

1. Do I search my heart to the bottom, and act out my convictions?
2. Do I believe I control my tongue and temper?
3. Do I really believe the Bible is the law of my heart and life?
4. Do I convince men that I believe there is an eternal hell?
5. Am I greatly concerned for the salvation of men?
6. Do I act like a Christian in my family and among my intimate friends?
7. Do I fully believe I have been born again?
8. Do I know that I have power with God in prayer?
9. Do I believe I have been baptized with the Holy Spirit since my conversion?
10. Am I sweetly resting in Christ, by faith, now?

No Christian, however near the Saviour, will realise all these evidences at the same time. One day he will perhaps say, "I wanted to be constantly in secret prayer, it was so delightful and precious. I could feel the truth of those sweet lines—

There is a place where Jesus sheds
The oil of gladness on our heads;
A place of all on earth most sweet,
It is the blood-bought mercy-seat."

The next day he has not so much inclination to pray, but rather a strong desire to read the Word of God, and says, "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth." At another time all his thoughts and feelings go out for the salvation of lost men. So he vibrates, back and forth, now to this evidence, and now to that.

Do not then expect all these evidences to be found in active exercise at the same time. And even though you may for a time seem to be confined to one, remember that a renewed heart is just as necessary for the production of that one as for all.

* Extracted from Dr. Earle's book Bringing in Sheaves, a Record of Evangelistic Labours in the United States, (Paper, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. Morgan and Scott.) This work has proved a blessing to many a preacher of the Gospel. When the late John MacNeil, evangelist in Australia, was much exercised as to power for service, his friend, Rev. Joseph Nicholson, of Jamestown, South Australia, lent him this book among others. In his diary the evangelist wrotel, "Learned a lot from Earle." Mr. Nicholson, in his reminiscences, says: "When last he was a guest in my house he made special allusion to the help gained from a little book I had lent him—Earle's Bringing in Sheaves. When I placed the same volume in his hands after a lapse of fifteen years he reverently kissed it, and then wrote under my name the words, 'A lamp to my feet in the darkness of 1880.—John MacNeil.'"

Rev. H. T. Meakin.

SOUTH LONDON MISSION.

THE subject of this sketch was born in the little village of Chellaston, Derbyshire, in 1855, where his ancestors have resided for 400 years. He was brought up to the Established Church, but having Methodist relations also attended the village Wesleyan chapel. Educated at neighbouring village schools, his educational opportunities were meagre and intermittent, owing to his having farm work to do. He was driving the plough at twelve years of age, and at fourteen entered the service of the Midland Railway. For three years he was in a night office pulling copying-presses, delivering telegrams, and sorting and despatching letters. During these three years he set about self-improvement, and made a special study of Pitman's shorthand, then not so widely known.

His industry attracted the attention of his superiors, and as a lad of seventeen he was brought under the notice of the late Mr. William Harrison, one of the real makers of the Midland Railway, and for about thirteen years Mr. Meakin was associated with Mr. Harrison in most of the great questions of railway management. At Mr. Harrison's death Mr. Meakin became associated with the late Mr. John Noble, general manager of the line, and for some years was one of his righthand men. Having charge of the Parliamentary and rates work appertaining to the General Manager's Department, Mr. Meakin spent considerable time in the House of Commons Committee Rooms and Railway Commissioners' Court, and on leaving the company in 1889 was widely known in railway and commercial circles throughout the country.

Mr. Meakin was converted to God at 17, mainly through a service conducted by a local preacher in the village chapel, and the earnest solicitude of a working-man in the congregation, who was the first to put a direct spiritual question to him. He began to speak in cottage services immediately, and joined a mission band in the Derby circuit with three other young men, all of whom, like himself, are Wesleyan ministers to-day. In 1875 he became a fully accredited local preacher, and attributes his literary training, so necessary to his railway work and correspondence, to his careful preparations for the pulpit. From the time of his conversion his ambition was to be set apart entirely for Christian work, but then his duty at home stood in the way. All his spare time was devoted to the evangelisation of the villages around, and miles and miles he trudged weekly to meetings and preaching appointments with that object.

His love for the working-classes increased with the years. In 1886 he concentrated his efforts upon the Litchurch district of Derby and founded a mission (whilst continuing his exacting business duties), which was a phenomenal success. Scores were converted; an old chapel was crowded, then enlarged and crowded again. In 1889 Mr. Meakin felt an irresistible call to devote his time entirely to mission work. His wife, unknown to him, simultaneously came to the same conclusion. At that time, unsought for, he received an invitation to join Rev. J. H. Hopkins in the formation of the South London Wesleyan Mission. Thereupon, in the teeth of the advice of most of his friends, who were persuaded of his future in railway management, he resigned his position on the railway.

On coming to London, Mr. Meakin was placed in charge of Locksfields Chapel, described as the white elephant of London Methodism. For two years he and his wife laboured under circumstances which would have daunted most people. But with ingenuity inspired from Heaven, and adaptation of methods suitable to the masses of poor people surrounding Locksfields, success began to dawn, and Mr. Meakin and Locksfields became known throughout the neighbourhood and the denomination. Steadily refusing outside applications, he buried himself in his work until the chapel became too small for his congregation. Then it was enlarged to seat more than 1000 people, and at once was again crowded. Now, after eight years' toil there, the membership numbers about 500, with 1000 Sunday-school scholars, and Locksfields is a veritable hive of religious industry.

In 1892, in spite of the fact that Mr. Meakin was past age and a married man, he was admitted into the ranks of the ministry—a most unusual event. He underwent all the examinations, theological and otherwise, demanded of candidates for the ministry; and associated as he is with Rev. J. H. Hopkins in the South London Mission, he has in addition taken his full share and responsibility of the general work of the Mission, in which his business training has been simply invaluable.

From photograph by Mr. F. J. Boyes, 22, Osmaston Road, Derby.

Now Mr. Hopkins and he have launched what is described as an immense and audacious enterprise to further reach the London masses. They contemplate building a central hall, with minor premises, to be by far the finest in connection with London Methodism. The scheme involves an outlay of £25,000, and they have the hearty support of the highest authorities. The necessary site has been secured at a cost of upwards of £8,000, and building operations will begin forthwith.

The sympathy of both Mr. and Mrs. Meakin with the poor is widely shown. Mr. Meakin's championship of them in their struggles and his wife's tender ministrations have made theirs household names in Walworth. Even their home has been a refuge for the friendless, and one of their adopted children is a sweet little girl out of the neighbourhood, one of seven, whose father and mother were helpless and friendless, the one dying of paralysis and the other of cancer. Whilst an immense amount of social work is done by and under Mr. Meakin's direction, he believes in the Gospel of Christ as the only real and permanent remedy for human woe. Locksfields is, and the Central Hall will be, not only a social but a soul-saving centre. All the friends of Gospel effort among the London masses will watch with deep interest the development of this large aggressive enterprise.

A Life To Live.

THAT profound but mystical German shoemaker, Jacob Böhme, has often some deeply-searching words. For instance, in his "Supersensual Life," the master says to the disciple, who has asked "How shall I be able to live aright amid all the anxiety and tribulation of this world?"

"If thou dost once every hour throw thyself by faith beyond all creatures into the abysmal mercy of God, into the sufferings of Christ, and into the fellowship of his intercession, then thou shalt receive power from above to rule over the world, and death, and the devil, and hell itself—presently thou wouldst be penetrated with the splendour of the Divine glory, and would taste a sweetness no tongue can express, then thou wouldst love thy cross more than all the glory and all the goods of this world."

Where has our adorable Lord lived his life, and what has been his occupation, during this interval between his ascension and his reappearing? We are not without definite teaching by the Scripture, and even more by the indwelling Spirit. "If when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life"—his life of intercession—(Romans v. 10).

There are truths of far more importance than those bearing on our personal salvation—for instance, the glory brought to God in his wondrous device in the incarnation of his beloved Son and the exaltation of his attributes of holiness and love, as displayed in his person and work of atonement by the cross. Doubtless our salvation and eternal happiness is important indeed to us, but that exalts God.

THE GREAT CLIMAX OF CHRIST'S WORK was in his resurrection, and the apostles were appointed witnesses of that great fact, and so also was the Holy Spirit whom Jesus sent from the Father.

But what is the meaning of the Spirit's witness? Not only that Jesus rose from an earthly grave, but that He was glorified with the Father's own glory in the holiest. A man is now in glory, but God-man, who had perfectly accomplished the Father's will, and is now "crowned with glory and honour." He receives his Father's attestation of Divine complacency in his work, and the Holy Spirit is sent down to be a witness of it all. The fulness which ever dwelt in Christ is now an open fountain, a communicable fulness, available to an empty vessel, whose emptiness is his only capacity to receive it. Christ has more to give than when on earth, and believers have more to receive, and the Holy Spirit opens hearts to receive that fulness.

His great ministry now is what Böhme calls "the fellowship of his intercession." Are we learning it? The path to all progress is by death; that is, fellowship with Christ in his death. We have to break with the old man and the world, for Jesus says, "we are not of the world as He is not of the world," and the life we live in the flesh we live by faith of the Son of God, who loved us and gave Himself for us. He is the head of a new race, and in the Spirit we live in a new atmosphere, living by Him, the living one, a life which can be truly called living—a life of love. There is a complete break from the first Adam into the last Adam in his heavenly surroundings.

To learn aright the character of the priesthood of the Lord we must apprehend the action described in Hebrews x. 12 in contrast with ver. 11. The Hebrew priest could never sit down; his work was not efficacious, never finished; but Jesus by his one offering completed the work of our redemption, and nothing further was required to add to its efficacy, and his sitting down on the right hand of God proclaimed its acceptance and

ITS ETERNAL EFFICIENCY.

We come then to Jesus, if we are not dull of hearing, as the Melchisedec King-priest, who has first with his own blood entered into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us, now reigns and rules over us, sympathises and even lives to make intercession for us.

This "fellowship of his intercession," makes the gladness of our days. It can be enjoyed in proportion to our intimacy with our Lord, and know his tastes, and our union with Him, and be so enfranchised from the self life as to be sensitive to his drawings, as of a magnet which overcomes every restraint. Oh, what an unfolding of the heavenly glories of our priestly Christ in the holiest is the Spirit, as a Spirit of revealation waiting to make to us, so strengthening the inner man that we may know, not the visits merely, but the dwelling of Christ in our hearts by faith, bringing us to "the secret source of every precious thing."

What depths of tenderness in his sympathy with us in our mental and bodily infirmities and sufferings, in our trials, in circumstances, our health, and bereavements, and fear of death. He is appointed by the God of love to be such a Priest, who can fully bear with the ignorant and even those out of the way.

Let us then pay the price—yield ourselves wholly, unreservedly, to Him who loves us, and know that even here there are experiences to be enjoyed beyond our utmost expectations.

Even as Thou Wilt.

What might have been the song of the Syrophenician woman after the Lord's answer to her prayer.—Matt. xv. 28.

"Even as Thou wilt!" The "crumb" I craved is mine,
But what is this my famished soul to fill?
This hungry heart may feast on love Divine,
And drink deep draughts of power even as it will!

Then, Lord, I will, that as a dog no more
I crouch in search of crumbs with whinings wild:
Life's larger luxuries I would explore,
And, for that end, be changed into a child.

For all that dumb delay I bless Thee now;
It taught what otherwise I had not known—
Who prays for others' lives must learn that Thou
Hast need to work great marvels in his own.

And when the soul for whom I prayed so long
From Satan's thrall delivered I shall see,
To deeper wonder wake the watching throng
By the vast liberty Thou giv'st to me.

Is There Deliverance?

On many a great question different minds seem to find a double voice in Holy Scripture. The following studies supply a case in point, Lieut.-Col. Porcelli's limitations being answered by Miss Bennett's more positive deductions from a wide range of Scripture reference.

I.—A NEGATIVE ANSWER.

1. Is there deliverance from sin?

If this means entire absence of all sin in this earthly life, then the answer is No (Rom. vii. 18, 23, 25; Titus ii. 14, Rev. Ver. (where the Greek is anomia—"violation of law"—and not ponêria—"sinful nature"); Phil. iii. 21; Rom. vii. 24; 1 John i. 8, 10; ii. 12; 1 Tim. vi. 16; Colos. i. 21, 22; Ps. li. 5; Prov. xxix. 9; John viii. 7; Numb. xv. 28; Matt. xxvi. 41; Ps. xxxii. 1, 2; xix. 12).

2. Is there deliverance from the fear of death?

Many besides Christians have no fear whatever of death. Therefore, if the question means to imply that Christians alone have no fear of death, the answer is, No (Ps. xxxvi. 1; cxi. 10).

3. Is there deliverance from the tyranny of law?

The word "tyranny," where used of God's law, is improper and unscriptural. God's law was not, and is not, tyrannical. The ceremonial law was as a schoolmaster leading educationally to Christ (Gal. iii. 24, 25). The moral law is still in force. The law is holy and good. The answer, therefore, is No (Rom. vii. 12).

4. Is there deliverance from this evil age?

This question assumes that Gal. i. 4 means entire immunity from this age or dispensation. As thus baldly put the question carries its own refutation with it, for Christians have, as yet, not been translated out of the world, and it is common knowledge that sorrow, affliction, grief, pain, persecution, poverty, want, and distress are, more often than not, the inalienable lot of the Christian. The answer is, therefore, No. (Acts xiv. 22; John xvi. 33; Rom. v. 3; xii. 12; 1 Thess. iii. 4; Rev. i. 9; etc.)

5. Is there deliverance from every foe?

This question transfers to Gentile Christians the promises made to Hebrews. Zacharias was a Hebrew (Luke i. 70-74). It has yet to be proved that such transfer is Scripturally justifiable, and that the promises refer to any other than the millennial age. Till that is done, the answer is, No. (Rev. xxi. 4.)

6. Is there deliverance from fear and perplexity in service?

This question assumes that promises made to the Hebrew prophet Jeremiah personally are of general application amongst Gentiles who are not prophets. Until this is proved, the answer is, No. (2 Cor. iv. 8; i. 4-8; 2 Thess. i. 6, 7; 1 Cor. vii. 28; Gal. i. 7; v. 12; vi. 17.) Alfred Porcelli.

II.—A POSITIVE ASSURANCE.

"Who delivered us . . . and doth deliver; in whom we trust that He will yet deliver."—2 Cor. i. 10.

1. Christ delivers from the dominion of sin. "He shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. i. 21). "Sin shall not have dominion over you" (Rom. vi. 14). The presence of sin remains, and will remain to the end (see Job ix. 20, and 1 John i. 7-10), but the "strong man" has been disarmed by a "stronger than he" (Luke xi. 22). He is "able to keep you from falling" (Jude 24), and the promise "to him that overcometh" is seven times repeated in Rev. ii. and iii. "Deliver us from evil" (R.V., "the evil one") is a prayer He will undoubtedly answer (Luke i. 74, 75).

2. Christ delivers from the fear of death. It is expressly stated that a part of his mission was "to deliver them who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. ii. 15). There may be in others a callous indifference to death or defiance of death (see Ps. lxxiii. 4), but the Christian is one who has been afraid of death and judgment, and has been delivered from his fear by Christ. We do not fear death because Christ has died, because death is "ours" (1 Cor. iii. 22), and because the keys are in the hand of the living Jesus (Rev. i. 18); Phil. i. 21.

3. Christ delivers from the curse of the law. In itself the law is "holy, and just, and good" (Rom. vii. 12), but the broken law curses the breaker of it (Gal. iii. 10). From this curse Christ hath redeemed us (Gal. iii. 13). Moreover, "Ye are become dead to the law by the body of Christ" (Rom. vii. 4), and "if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law" (Gal. v. 18); Rom. vi. 14.

4. Christ delivers from the world. "Who gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world" (Gal. i. 4). It is only through the cross of Christ that this deliverance comes (Gal. vi. 14). The Lord Himself claims this position of deliverance for his people (John xvii. 14, 15). See also Titus ii. 12-14; Phil. iii. 20; James i. 27; 1 John v. 4.

5. Christ delivers from fear and danger. From the endurance of trial and persecution the Lord distinctly told the disciples they were not delivered (John xv. 20 and xvi. 33). Nor can we be exempt from chastening—which is a proof of love (Heb. xii. 6-8). But, nevertheless, the Christian is delivered from "all his fears" (Ps. xxxiv. 4), from all dangers (verse 7), and "out of all troubles" (verse 17) and "afflictions" (verse 19). For those who have learnt, with Paul, to "take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake," and even to "glory in infirmities" (2 Cor. xii. 9, 10), for these the grief of griefs is gone and the pain of pains is vanquished. The deliverance may include freedom from care, too (1 Pet. v. 7; Phil. iv. 6, 7, 19).

6. "Christ hath delivered from the power of darkness" (Col. i. 13; 2 Cor. iv. 6; Eph. v. 8; 1 Pet. ii. 9; 1 John ii. 8).

7. Christ "delivered us from the wrath to come." (1 Thess. i. 10; Rom. v. 9; Rom. viii. 1; John iv. 17).

"Who shall deliver me?" (Rom. vii. 24).

"I am come down to deliver" (Ex. iii. 8).

The "Liberator" Relief Fund.

It is resolved to keep open our Jubilee Commemoration Fund a few months longer. This special effort has now yielded some £8000, but three times that amount is still required to complete the good work.

The year of Jubilee has passed, but there are many hundreds among the most praiseworthy of Her Majesty's subjects who are still pining in the prison-house of despair to which they were so ruthlessly condemned through no fault of their own, but through the wicked conduct of men whom they trusted too well. Many have been done to death by acute mental worry, and many more have been driven into the madhouse through the great Liberator frauds. These are beyond our help. But of those who remain upon the books of the Relief Fund—all aged men and women—suddenly robbed of their life savings—many have had severe rheumatism and spasms, with no infirmary nurse to attend them either day or night—some have lost the sight of both eyes, others have become stone deaf, whilst the majority have had their nervous system shattered and their health permanently broken down. There is no question whatever that their sufferings have been caused by the cruel treatment to which they have been subjected in the evening of their lives, just when they thought they would enjoy the results of their patient self-denying toil and thrift.

I believe there is sufficient practical sympathy in this wealthy country to at once set these worthy but unfortunate sufferers free from tormenting anxiety as to their future subsistence if only the facts could be fairly known and realised.

The London Mission.

GREAT CROWDS AND INCREASING INTEREST.

IF CONTINUOUS throngs of hearers, steadily growing in bulk, be any true index of genuine interest and success, then all the outward elements of success have been present in the McNeill Mission during the past fortnight. And the audiences, which day after day filled the City Temple, and night after night overflowed the leviathan Metropolitan Tabernacle, have been quite dissimilar in their composition. One evening the evangelist put this point to the test by asking all those who had been at the noon meeting that day to raise their hands. We should think that out of a company of 6000 persons not fifty hands were uplifted.

Apart from this, it could be seen at a glance that the congregations were substantially different. At mid-day the area of the Temple was covered with serried rows of hard-headed City men, mingled with many ministers, evangelists, and gentlemen of leisure. The galleries were crowded for the most part with ladies, old or young, evidently members of the well-to-do middle classes—possibly the wives and daughters, to some extent, of the merchants on the floor of the house. The evening assemblages, taken broadly, were made up of those in a humbler social stratum — horny-fisted toilers with a weekly wage, and women coming from humble homes where work and want too often go hand in hand; shop girls, domestic servants, factory workers, etc. Of course, the evangelist, like his Master, draws no sort of distinction between rich and poor, to the detriment of the latter; far from it. And the Gospel he proclaims puts all in the same uncomplimentary category. But it is matter of considerable interest, as well as rejoicing, to think that the salvation of Christ, presented in a real, is meeting the deepest needs and yearnings of all sorts and conditions of men and women.

BUSINESS-LIKE, AND HAPPY FASHION,

Mr. McNeill does not scruple now and again to ridicule the claims of modern culture and scientific discovery to explain or illumine, apart from revelation and the supernatural, the problems of human life and destiny. While he does this with a relish, it must be said that he himself owes not a little to wide study and reading. Let no one suppose that because he is a quarryman's son he is unlearned, as he would say, "in the wisdom of the Egyptians; with some of the wisdom of the Germans thrown in." Indeed, one element in the general attractiveness of his addresses lies in the wealth of classical allusion which they reveal. Poets, theologians, scientists, philosophers are all laid under tribute, in order to point a moral or adorn an exposition. Speaking merely from memory we recall quotations in the past two weeks, from Shakespere, of course; from Tennyson, Browning, Byron Burns, Kipling, N. P. Willis, and R. L. Stevenson among modern poets; besides Dekker, the old dramatist; Bengel, the German divine; Matthew Arnold, the philosopher, and others whom we have for the moment forgotten. He is specially strong in quotations from his gifted fellow-countryman Burns, who, as he remarked one day, could preach splendidly, but whose practice "hirpled" somewhat. By the way, those Southrons who have no acquaintance with the pawky expressive Doric of which Mr. McNeill is so fond, lose many of the fine shades of expression which his Scotticisms bring out.

A TOUCHING FEATURE of the evening meetings has been the requests for prayer sent in and read out by Mr. McNeill before being unitedly wafted to the Throne of Grace. These requests have indicated the reality of the Spirit's working in many hearts, in connection with the special meetings. Christian friends have been so stirred up by the powerful appeals of the evangelist that they have endeavoured to draw lukewarm, or timid, or careless relatives within the current of blessing. Some of these have recognised this day of their spiritual visitation; while others have been held back by divers sorts of bondage. As a result these requests for praise or for prayer were sent in and laid before God in faith and expectation. Such is one of the indications that the Spirit is blowing where it listeth and making God's working manifest; while, of course, there are many other cases where neither preacher nor helpers have "heard the sound thereof," or been able to tell "whence it cometh, or whither it goeth."

Under the existing circumstances it has not seemed possible or practical to Mr. McNeill to attempt after meetings, in which the anxious ones are weeded out of the crowd and moved into other rooms, to be personally conversed with. For one thing, the length of his addresses has put that plan out of the question. As we noted last week, he has sometimes called for evidence of anxiety or decision by a show of hands, or by rising, and there have been good responses—especially on the closing night at the Tabernacle. A plan, however, which the evangelist has tried elsewhere and found to be eminently workable, has been adopted—that of distributing printed slips enclosed in envelopes addressed to himself. The recipients are asked to return these, if so disposed, with affirmative answers as to whether they have experienced reviving as believers, restoration as backsliders, or whether for the first time the great decision has been made. A supplemental question is asked as to whether help is desired in guidance to some form of Christian work. We are enabled to say that hundreds of these missives have already been returned. They are seen only by Mr. McNeill, who has publicly stated that the responses have been of the most cheering and encouraging kind, not a few of them specially so. The immediate blessing to those who have attended is only a part of the outcome. So rousing have been the preacher's utterances, and so reasonable withal, that it would be rank treason not to believe that in scores of ways and in unexpected channels the influences of the mission will radiate far beyond Greater London.

THE THIRD SUNDAY.

In the forenoon Mr. McNeill reappeared in the pulpit of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, now so soon to be filled by its new pastor, Rev. George Hanson, of Dublin. The building was filled in every part, and the preacher was in excellent "fettle." His subject, it is true, was prolific of import in its modern applications. It was "Thomas the Honest Doubter." Recognising that there is much in his character that is very admirable, Mr. McNeill was at the same time very severe on the apostle for isolating himself from the little company of believers to whom Christ showed Himself. That was, in the preacher's opinion, the root cause of his doubts as to the reality of the Master's resurrection. Some of Mr. McNeill's hardest blows were aimed at those who call themselves "honest doubters," but whose difficulties about the supernatural torment them so little that they can eat four meals a day and sleep soundly o' nights. The gentle handling of the brainy and sceptical Thomas by the Master, when He again appeared to his followers and convinced the doubter, was beautifully described and applied by the preacher.

The crowded afternoon congregation in St. James's Hall was treated to an exposition of the story of Naaman the leper, in which the evangelist passed rapidly from the lively to the severe, from the sarcastic to the pathetic, in a fashion that equally fascinated and impressed the hearers. Of course the outstanding lessons of the narrative were the universality of the leprosy of sin, the futility of human remedies, and the never-failing cure that comes through lowly faith and obedience to God's way. The part played by the little Jewish maid was delightfully described and applied. There were, moreover, some striking touches that seemed quite impromptu; as when near the very close of the address, when apologising for having to hurry over the narrative, he urged the young men to go home, look it up, and read it for themselves. "Go and search for your Bible in your box. When you came to London your mother put it at the top of the things in your trunk, but, you rascal, you have allowed it to get to the bottom!"

Fresh ground was broken in the evening, when the second fortnight of evening meetings was begun in Westminster Chapel, which Mr. McNeill declared to be as fine an auditorium as he knew, and he had sampled a good many. One could see as the audience gathered that it was largely composed of those who had not attended any previous meetings of the mission. There was a prevailing air half of Sunday stiffness, half of curiosity. Before the service closed the one was very sensibly thawed, and the other was, we hope, very thoroughly satisfied. The choice of Ruth, the young Moabitish widow, in cleaving to Naomi and sharing her fortunes and her faith, formed the theme of one of the most delightful and telling sermons we have heard from Mr. McNeill's lips. The address abounds not only with idyllic human touches and rare bits of description, but grandly illustrates the eternal value of a right choice when Christ or the world is hanging in the balance, and seeming advantage would fain turn the scale in favour of the latter. It was a worthy finish to a wonderful day's work. Mr. McNeill is hard on those who eat four material meals a day and live in idleness. One's powers of spiritual digestion certainly had need to be first-rate to enable them to assimilate the abundant spiritual fare of the combined three "good square meals" he provided for his guests last Lord's Day.

The afternoon meeting on Monday, in St. James' Hall, showed no falling off in public interest. The evangelist began his charming exposition of the twenty-third Psalm.

Mr. Hermann Warszawiak.

AS this Jewish missionary from New York is now in Great Britain, we feel compelled to bring before our readers a few facts:—During recent months, Mr. Henry Varley, with only an ex parte knowledge of the case, has been writing in American papers, and sending to English correspondents, letters intended to vindicate Mr. Warszawiak. These communications have implied that the money collected for the proposed Christ's Synagogue was safely lodged in an Edinburgh bank, and that Mr. Warszawiak had come from America to deposit it there in Miss Douglas's name.

To this Miss Douglas's advisory committee felt bound to reply, saying that Mr. Warszawiak had come from America in 1895, to deposit the money, and that for a few months it was so deposited; but that on a subsequent date he induced her to send him all the money again, amounting to £2,400. This sum was sent to New York in two bank drafts of £1200 each, and the drafts still exist, bearing Mr. Warszawiak's signature; also his receipt to Miss Douglas, proving that the money passed into his hands. What has he done with it?

When asked in March last to account for the money, Mr. Warszawiak promised to do so, but has not yet fulfilled that promise. In the circumstances, as it became known to them that fresh appeals for money were being made, Miss Douglas's committee warned Christian people against contributing to any of Mr. Warszawiak's schemes. This question of the money is altogether apart and distinct from the charges of gambling brought against him in America; and until it is cleared up, friends are cautioned against giving him money on any pretext whatever. We have recent facts before us showing the extent to which some generous Christians have unfortunately responded largely to his plausible importunities.

Bible Work in West China.

WHERE two years ago riot had disturbed the work of Christ in eight of the cities of Sze Chuen, now peace and friendliness more sure than before reigns. There is even a wave in favour of things foreign in the sentiment of a section of the people, and a marked desire on the part of some to learn the English language. While travelling up the valley of Yang-Tse, a few months ago, the writer and his wife were treated with marked friendliness by the people, some of the country folk running before and gathering flowers to present to the strange English lady.

When informed as to the object of our journey, the people freely invited us into their temples to expound the new doctrine to them; thus the Gospel was allowed to be set forth right in face of the dumb idols. On other occasions crowds gathered on the banks of the river to hear the Gospel and buy copies of the Scriptures. During the past year 103,000 Scriptures and tracts have been circulated in the three Western provinces of Sze Chuen, Yunnan, and Kueichow by the colporteurs of the National Bible Society of Scotland, being an increase of 300 per cent. on the issues of the two previous years. At the three provincial capitals the Gospel was placed in the hands of nearly 20,000 Chinese graduates at the great triennial examinations held last September. May we not ask the prayers of God's people for a rich harvest to arise from this seed-sowing?

A notable feature of this Bible work is the increase in the number of New Testaments sold. Not content with the possession of a copy of the Gospel, many come to buy the complete book. There is now an open door for the preaching of the Gospel in China. The other day the writer, accompanied by two native helpers, entered a heathen temple, and, seated round a table in front of the images, sang Christian hymns. The crowds came flocking in, and we besought them not to trust vainly to bowing down to wood and stone, but to accept the glad message we brought them. The crowd was mute, and the interest profound. May God give the increase! That the door which is open is being entered, is evident from the fact that, in a tour of twenty of the walled cities of SzeChuen made by the writer six weeks ago, in nine of them was found a Protestant mission-house, whereas ten years ago only one of these cities had a Protestant missionary.

Progress in China.

CHRISTIANITY seems to be progressing in China in every direction—touching the life and habits of the people at all points. Its power is being amongst the upper classes in regard to that ancient custom of binding, and, of course, crippling, the feet of Chinese women. The North China Herald alludes to the advance of opinion on this question as follows:—

"Are any Chinese women's feet unbound in consequence of the exertions of foreigners? Yes! But no more than European ladies are they going to walk barefoot through the streets to convince doubters. And what is far more important, numbers upon numbers of little girls are remaining unbound in missionary schools at Amoy, Hangchow, and all up and down the river; and at parties ladies, who, as far as we know, are untouched by Christian influences, yet show with pride their soft-footed little girls, saying, 'My old people bound my feet, but I will never bind hers.' It is the upper circles of China who are giving up binding. The man on the streets yet binds, and loves bound feet, just as in Singapore all the Straits-born Chinese have cast off binding, if it be not the very poorest of the poor."

Early Drawing of the Crucifixion.—Signor Marucchi, the well-known Roman archæologist, has found on the wall of a chamber in the Palace of Tiberius, Palatine Hill, a graffito, or rough drawing, with an inscription, representing the scene of the crucifixion of Christ. The cross is surrounded by soldiers, each of whom has his name inscribed underneath. Some have suggested that the picture was the work of a soldier who had been present at the Crucifixion; but the monument is more likely to date from the fourth century than from the first.

From Lake Tanganyika.

I NEED hardly say how much we regret having to leave our own people and station in Madagascar, but circumstances being such that our usefulness there would have been very much restricted, we felt that God had called us to serve Him in another land; in fact, in the mother country of the island in which we have served our apprenticeship in foreign mission-work. Subsequent events in Madagascar seem to have proved that it was right for us not to return there.

Our voyage from Madagascar was pleasant and beneficial, but until we had passed Delagoa Bay presented no fresh feature. From that point the coast and country were new to us, and the river and lake journey was quite a new experience. From place to place on our three months' journey we met with very great kindness from Europeans, whether missionaries, or those connected with the African Lakes Company, or Government officials; and this kindness has made us feel more keen distress at the spiritual destitution of those engaged in what we generally term secular service in Central Africa.

First impressions may be of much or little importance, but to us it appears that there can scarcely be a more God-forsaken country on the face of the globe, nor one for which it is more necessary to pray "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth," And the sadness is increased by the fact that so many of the men with whom we met were, or had appeared to be, consistent Christians at home, and had even come out here with the intention of doing missionary work as they were able. But spiritual degeneration seems to be in the air of Central Africa, and we met with but few instances in which the effect could not be observed. While we thank God for the few, let us beseech Him for the many, believing that He will grant our request, for "This is the victory which overcometh the world, even your faith."

This matter has been laid very heavily on my heart, and I am writing just now chiefly to ask the prayers of personal friends and others interested. What more they can do may God show them; particularly perhaps the Student Volunteers, some of whom will be studying Africa at this time. I may say that any evangelistic work carried on amongst Europeans here should only be conducted by very practical Christians, and those of great tact and possessing sanctified common sense in an extra degree.

Progress in Tunis.

IN Tunis the power of the enemy was for a time very great. Difficulties came which dispersed the little band of converts. Now there is an evidence of a deepening work of the Holy Spirit, both among Europeans and Mohammedans. In connection with the central hall and Bible depôt, fifteen meetings and classes are held weekly, and souls are being saved.

With the new year a somewhat serious problem has presented itself for consideration. The term for which our mission hall and Bible depôt here was taken has expired, and the landlord is unwilling to renew the agreement on the same terms. The alternative is given us of relinquishing the premises (which are admirably suited to Gospel work) altogether, or taking in addition two other rooms, at greatly increased rent, viz., £65, which would give a superior little hall for Arab services, and a second shop for the sale of Scriptures, etc., fronting another street, which is one of the busiest in the city.

After prayer and conference the answer has come. "Enlarge the place of thy tent." The thought of increased pecuniary need would perplex, but with faith in our Father's resources we have agreed to go forward. In Tunis, preaching the Gospel in the streets is forbidden, but in our own hired premises the Word of God may be sold or fully announced. We propose to increase our stock of Scriptures in order to sell more in the depôt and supply missionaries inland more largely with Scriptures. With our new plans £10 is needed to buy Scriptures and £65 for one year's rent.

Sailors in Dunkerque.

IT will, I feel sure, be a source of thankfulness and encouragement to the many friends and supporters of the Dunkerque Seamen's Institute and Mission, now entering on the twentieth year of its existence, to know that the privileges it affords are becoming ever more and better appreciated by our sailors as the years go on; and that the efforts unceasingly made by its devoted staff of workers to win souls, and to further the spiritual and moral improvement of the seafaring class, are evidently attended with the Divine blessing. The ships are regularly visited on their entrance into harbour and during their stay in port. Prayer and reading of the Word is engaged in on board whenever the opportunity offers, and a large quantity of religious literature is distributed among the crews. Sailors laid up in hospital from illness or accident are also constantly visited. The Gospel services for seamen, frequently held in the large mission hall of the institute, are, as a rule, well attended by devout and attentive congregations, and the various reading-rooms are, especially in the evenings, usually thronged with seamen of all ranks, engaged in conversation, reading, playing innocent games, or writing home to their friends.

Nearly 10,000 sailors have frequented these rooms during the past year. Here they are safe from the many temptations always abounding in seaport towns, and here is spoken many a "word in season" of warning, advice, and exhortation. Extracts from one or two of many similar letters constantly received at the institute, will serve to show how this mission is appreciated by sailors and their friends. A mother writes: "I am anxious to thank you for all your kindness to my dear sailor son; be assured of my prayerful interest, and my thankfulness that my boy had a place like your Institute to go to while in a foreign port. Pray accept my best wishes for your work for the Master." A young sailor thus expresses himself: "I am writing to thank you for all your good advice. I have given my heart to the Lord Jesus, and will hope to keep close to Him always." A gentleman who recently visited Dunkerque in his yacht, and stayed two or three weeks in the port, writes: "I am much interested in all mission work, especially that among sailors. I was delighted with the work I saw going on at the Seamen's Institute at Dunkerque. I beg to enclose a cheque."

We ask for the prayers of all interested in the Lord's work, that our endeavours may be abundantly blest, and that our seamen visiting this great seaport may, in ever-increasing numbers, be led to recognise who are their true friends here, and suffer themselves more and more to be influenced for good by those who are constantly aiming to promote their best and highest interests in time and eternity. Mr. E. Taylor, British Consul at Dunkerque, who takes a great interest in the work, or myself, would gladly forward the last annual report of the Mission to anyone applying for it.

Blessing in Algeria.

MISS Smith, writing from Djemâa Sahridj, Algeria, gives us the sequel of the circumstances reported by Mme. Rolland, in a letter quoted in our issue of October 28. She says: "After a few weeks of extraordinary blessing, when many Mohammedan men, lads, and boys, professed their faith in Jesus, the enemy rose up to prevent his domains from being invaded. We have experienced the blessing of Matt. v. 12 (persecution); but by living before the people verse 44 ('love your enemies,' etc.), we believe the Gospel has been better understood and God's work furthered.

"Our heavenly Father has sustained us by special promises; and in spite of much opposition He is still working in our midst. We have recently had a series of blessed meetings; and as our room was much too small we have built a mission hall. God has wonderfully sent in the necessary funds, but we shall be grateful for free-will offerings wherewith to purchase seats and lighting and warming apparatus. We trust that during the coming spring some readers of The Christian will come and see our work. Djemâa is a beautiful spot, and the people deeply interesting."

"Be Ye Thankful."

I DARESAY you have all heard of the man who said he had moved out of "Grumble Corner" into "Thanksgiving Street." Now, if any of you live in such a nasty corner, I trust you will soon make the same wise move!

Suppose we take a journey and visit a large house in the West End for a few minutes.

After ascending the stairs, we enter a large day nursery, and find a little girl, beautifully dressed looking very miserable and cross.

As we glance around the room, we see a beautiful doll's house, numerous dolls of all shapes and sizes, a splendid rocking-horse, and many other very pretty toys. We say to her, "What a lot of lovely things you have!" "Oh! I am tired of all these," she replies; "I know a little girl who has a doll that can walk, and not one of mine can, and I feel very unhappy because I haven't one like hers. I think it is a great shame mamma does not buy me one!' Well, we leave her grumbling away as hard as she can, and after we have walked a distance of about a quarter of a mile we find ourselves in a very different neighbourhood. Everything declares poverty and wretchedness!

As we walk along one of the streets we see a little child sitting down in the road. He is sailing a tiny boat in the gutter—it is only a paper one, but his face is just beaming with excitement and delight as he watches it sail along the muddy stream, for he scarcely ever has anything given him but harsh words and slaps, only a kind-hearted boy has made him this.

Now, which of these two has the most reason to be thankful? Why, the girl, of course, you will say. Yes, dear children, and why is she not the most thankful? Is it not because she does not know how rich she really is? She takes everything as a matter of course; she is so used to having nearly everything she wishes for, that she never feels thankful for all her blessings. The little boy is not used to receiving presents, and so when he has one, which is of very little worth, his joy is unbounded and he has a thankful heart.

Now, if we have "long faces," it is very likely not because we have nothing to be thankful for, but the reason is the same as with the little girl—we don't know how rich we really are, and how much we have to be thankful for, so, shall we try and find out by thinking of some of the blessings that most of us possess that begin with the letter H?—this will help you to remember them.

If you were to go to some of the large hospitals to-day you would find there many children about your age in great pain—some feverish—some having tossed restlessly in much weariness all the night—some that will never get well again; and then, not only in hospitals, but how many children are ill at home, some with toothache or a bad cold, etc., and they cannot enjoy any games because of it. How thankful we should be if we are well and strong, and never forget to thank the Lord Jesus Christ for giving us such a precious thing as Health. I am sure that an invalid child who cannot walk often feels much poorer than the bare-footed little crossing sweeper, who looks so full of health and strength, although she may drive past in a handsome carriage and pair.

The next word is one which we usually appreciate more in the winter than in the summer—it is Home. Do you know that there are very many little children to-day who are homeless? Perhaps their parents could not pay the rent, and so were turned out into the cold. There are many who, when you are in your cosy beds, have nowhere to sleep, because they could not earn or get anyone to give them sufficient for a night's lodging; so let us be very thankful for our Homes.

But there is something else that begins with an H., something that makes our homes so dear to us; it is "Hearts that love us." Have you ever thanked God enough for giving you kind, loving parents and brothers and sisters? We can never understand unless we experience it how lonely and poor those children feel who are orphans, and who, although they live in a rich home, feel there are no "hearts that love them" as mother or father would.

Then there is something else still, it is the Harvest. Now, we sometimes think that only big people should be thankful to God for harvest, but what a mistake we make. Suppose God had not made the sun to shine and the rain to make the corn grow? Suppose we had been obliged to have a terrible war, and we had "fields of plunder" instead of "fields of harvest," there would have been a terrible famine in our land; and so, dear children, never forget to thank God for the bread He gives you to eat. This is one reason why we should always say grace before and after meals. In the sixth chapter of St. John we read that "Jesus took the loaves, and when He had given thanks, He distributed to his disciples."

Now, the last H. is one that I expect some of you will think is not something to be thankful for, it is Hardships. When God sends pain and sorrow it is not because He does not love us; no, it is on account of his great love that He sends it. When we are young, we often cry very bitterly because our mother gives us nasty medicine, but when we find it has made us better we are sometimes thankful we were obliged to take it.

Now, dear children, will you look upon all your trials like this, and remember they are sent by a loving Father (who is too wise to err, too good to be unkind), to make you purer and holier, more fit for the beautiful home He is preparing for all the little ones who love Him? Will you ask Him to teach you how to be thankful even for your "Hardships," so that you may always have a thankful heart?

The Children's Saviour.

JESUS is the children's Saviour,
Strong and loving, sweet and true!
Little ones long since who saw Him
Thought his face the best they knew;
And because his kindness won them
Nearer and yet nearer drew.

Yes! He is the children's Saviour!
Even tiny ones to-day
Feel and know his love is drawing
In a sweetly winning way.
Happy little child, who lets Him
Come and make a life-long stay.

Yes! He was the children's Saviour
When He paid the world's great debt!
For the sins of little sinners
He by no means could forget.
But He suffered for them sorely,
And God's anger fully met.

Yes! God is the children's Saviour,
Gives them in his plans a share;
From his Throne of grace in heaven
Listen to their simple prayer:
Longing soon to bid them welcome
To the Home He doth prepare.

The Call of Matthew.—Matt. ix. 9-17.

Golden Text:—Follow Me.—Matt. ix. 9.

Matthew the Publican.

ROMAN knights who were responsible for the rates and taxes did not wish to be troubled with them, so they farmed them out. The one who actually collected them (the publican) had to pay a huge sum to the Roman knight, and make what little he could by extortion, deceit, and false charges. Hence, the publicans were the worst class of Jews, and were most hated by the people generally.

The Receipt of Custom.

The "Tollgate."—Probably Matthew was receiving the tax on the fish brought up from the Sea of Galilee into Capernaum. Christ called Matthew as He walked along the street. Matthew had seen Him before and admired Him.

When Christ Calls He Draws.

"Come," says the sea to the river. "Come," says the magnet to the steel. When Christ bids us do anything He always gives us power to do it. "Ought" implies "can." Even the publican could follow when Christ said the word. None are too sinful for Him to reclaim.

Christ Calls to Better Things.

Matthew had to give up his money-making, but only to do something better. We must give up old companions, old habits; but only to make new ones that are like those of Christ.

Illustration: Cleaning out the rubbish from a room in order to fill it with costly furniture.

The Great Banquet.

Matthew gives a feast to Christ, and the friends of the publican come in. The Pharisees were surprised that He, a Teacher, should mingle with publicans and sinners. They had only come in to find fault. Not difficult to do this (11). Christ's answer was threefold.

1. He had come as a physician to heal the sick, therefore He must go among the sick (12).

2. God asks for mercy and compassion on the lost and helpless, and not a mere formal sacrifice in the Temple (13).

3. He had come to call sinners to repentance, therefore He must go among the sinners (13).

"Let Your Light Shine."

Christ is our example, and we must show our Christian light not in the Church alone, where there is plenty of it already, but in the dark places of vice and temptation. We must go—not where we like—but where we are needed.

Fasting.

John's disciples could not understand Christ's social teaching. Their question has a tone of reproof in it (14). Christ's answer. The friends of the bridegroom feast and make merry while he is with them. Time enough to fast when he has gone. The disciples will be so sorrowful when Christ has gone that they will not be able to eat food. Their fasting not a form, but a reality.

Unshrunk cloth when damped would shrivel up and tear the rotten parts around.

New wine in old wineskins.

The wine would ferment and burst the cracked and rotten skins.

Application.

So new religion must have its new expressions, its new forms. "Behold, all things have become new."

Illustration.—Seed must shed its coats as the young plant grows, and each shoot must develop a new coat for itself.

Baptist Tract and Book Society.—Important modifications have recently been made in the rules and constitution of this Society. All Baptists are now eligible to serve on its committee, so enabling the organisation to serve the whole denomination. The sales for 1897 were four times greater than in 1893, but to place the Society in an effective position for doing its special work a fund of at least £2000 is needed. Further particulars of the enterprise and its requirements may be had from the treasurer, Mr. Martin H. Wilkin, Sydney House, Hampstead.

Obituary.

REV. JAMES HARPUR, BELFAST.

Much regret is felt in Belfast and the North of Ireland at the death of Rev. James Harpur, who has passed away, aged forty-three years. He was a popular and most successful evangelistic preacher and ardent Sunday-school worker, and an enthusiastic temperance advocate. The last twelve years of his ministry he spent in connection with four of the largest Methodist congregations in Belfast, where he was instrumental in winning many souls for Christ. His funeral was attended by upwards of one hundred ministers of various denominations.

MRS. HEUDEBOURCK, TAUNTON.

On Sunday this servant of Christ peacefully "fell asleep" after only two days' illness. For many years she has never known what it was to be free from pain; but her suffering was sanctified to her, and no word of complaint ever passed her lips. In her early life, when Miss Fisher, of Honiton, she was an earnest Sunday-school teacher; and when settled at Taunton she for some years carried on the mothers' meeting at the old Congregational Chapel. When not strong enough to take part herself, she still continued to take a warm sympathy in it, and every good cause might depend upon her help.

REV. S. WALLINGER DAY.

This earnest young clergyman, who, till the recent resignation of Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, was senior curate of Clifton parish church, Bristol, was spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Sherbrooke in Nottinghamshire, when he was thrown from his horse, and sustained such serious internal injuries as led to his death on Friday, 21st ult. He had only entered on his curacy with Rev. Henry Dening, Vicar of St. Werburgh's, Bristol, about two months, but although his labours in St. Werburgh's were brief he had won many hearts in the district. His cheery manner, and earnest setting forth of the Gospel of God's grace, alike in the parish church pulpit, the mission-room, the open air, and from house to house, gave his friends promise of a singularly useful and fruitful ministry for years to come. But the Master had ordered it otherwise. At the early age of thirty-one his service on earth was completed, and the high preferment of a place within the courts of the heavenly temple was suddenly conferred upon him.

MR. JOHN COUPLAND.

Many who have watched from time to time in our columns the progress of the South Africa General Mission will regret to hear of the death of one of its workers through fever.

Mr. Dudley Kidd, accompanied by Mr. Raney and Mr. Coupland, went up to Gazaland last autumn to open up a branch of the mission there. Mr. Kidd, having comfortably settled Mr. Coupland and Mr. Raney in the country, left them both in splendid health; but after saying good-bye he himself was taken ill, and was at death's door. Recovering, however, sufficiently to continue his return journey, he arrived in Johannesburg, and heard for the first time of the death of Mr. Coupland, who seemed the healthiest of the three. In the removal of Mr. Coupland the S.A.G.M. loses one of its most spiritually minded workers. He was one of the first fruits of the splendid work that is being done amongst the Europeans in Johannesburg. For some time he was one of the honorary workers in Johannesburg, helping forward the work largely in the way of finance, besides giving his spare time. Ultimately he gave himself up entirely to the work, was accepted, and was sent to Gazaland.

REV. DR. HENRY W. WILLIAMS.

The distinguished author of "The Constitution and Polity of Wesleyan Methodism" passed away on Sunday, 23rd ult., at his residence, 24, Abbey-road, St. John's Wood. His ministerial life dates back to 1832, when he received an appointment to Newport, Mon. His lengthened ministry extended over forty-seven years in circuit work. His aptitude for business and attention to details early marked him out for secretarial work, and he became one of the assistant secretaries of the Conference, which post he filled with much ability until his appointment as secretary in 1875. Amid these daily duties he found leisure for literary studies His two volumes of expositions on "The Epistles to the Romans and the Hebrews" give ample evidence of careful and earnest study continued through many years, and stamp him as no mean scholar. In his life of "Rev. Joseph Wood" he executed his task with judgment and fidelity. His manual of "Natural and Revealed Theology" was a most useful handbook for local preachers and others. Many will remember his Fernley lecture on "The Priesthood of Christ," as a contribution to sound Evangelical literature, but his best known literary effort was "The Constitution and Polity of Wesleyan Methodism," published some eighteen years ago.

REV. SAMUEL NEWTH, D.D.

The death is announced of Dr. Samuel Newth, a well-known scholar of the Congregational body. Born in London in 1821, he was educated largely under the supervision of his father, Rev. Elisha Newth, who for thirty years was assistant minister to Rev. Rowland Hill at Surrey Chapel. At the early age of sixteen he entered Coward College, long since merged into New College, of which he subsequently became principal. Dr. Newth was a graduate of London University (with honours in mathematics), and ordained to the Congregational ministry in December, 1842, at Broseley, Salop.

Removing a few years later to Stonehouse, Devon, he became connected with Western College, Plymouth, and for nine years was a professor. Coming to London in 1854, he became Professor of Mathematics and Ecclesiastical History at New College, St. John's Wood, and later filled the classical chair. In 1872, on the resignation of Rev. Dr. Halley, he was appointed principal of the College—a position which he maintained until 1889, when he was succeeded by Rev. R. Vaughan Pryce.

In 1870 he became one of the Revisers of the New Testament, and in 1875 received the degree of D.D. from the University of Glasgow. In 1880 he filled the chair of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, the subject of his presidential addresses being "Christian Union" and "The Church and the College." Dr. Newth was the author of several works, which had a very large circulation. For several years he was honorary librarian of the very valuable and extensive library at the Memorial Hall.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. John Hall, of the Fifth Avenue Church, New York, has, at the urgent request of his congregation, withdrawn his resignation.

Mr. and Mrs. George Soltau, with their family, have arrived safely in London from the Colonies, and are located at 37, Pyrland-road, Mildmay, N.

Mr. W. K. Lethaby, who laboured for many years at Kir of Moab, but for the past three years at Aden, has been home since October last suffering from his eyes. He hopes to return in March to Aden to resume his labours in connection with the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Dr. Baedeker, writing to a friend from Riga, January 11 (23), says: "I have lately had much joy in telling out the Gospel of John vii. 37, which does not make us vessels to be filled, but channels for inflow and outflow! The Lord supplies the needed strength day by day, so that I am not keeping but kept, which is ever so much better. It is good and easy to spend the fortune of another, good to be weak enough for the Lord's strength to supply one. My time has been very full ever since I left my dear wife on October 15; never before have I had so many open doors for happy service. I make my count on the prayers which friends send up on my behalf. About February 1 or 2, new style, I may return to St. Petersburg, and stay there about two weeks, before I go (D.V.) to the South."

Irish Notes.

The Irish Evangelical Society has received a legacy of £100, under the will of the late Dr. Thos. Collins, of Dublin.

The Methodists of Belfast provide 14,099 sittings for 26,000 people, the Episcopalians 20,635 sittings for 92,060 people, and the Presbyterians 35,000 for 106,000 people.

There is a proposal to extend the operations of the Dublin Shelter for Men by providing those out of employment with work on land somewhat after the fashion of the Salvation Army Farm Colony.

Surgeon-Major Lynn, M.D., Armagh, has resigned the treasurership of the Methodist Orphan Society, of which he was one of the founders and treasurers from its commencement until now. Dr. Lynn, who is in his ninety-second year, retires from the position owing to age and infirmities.

The Evangelistic Field.

A FREE CHURCH EFFORT AT BRIGHTON.

"LONDON BY THE SEA" has had its fair share of missions from time to time during the past thirty years, each effort having been characterised by some distinctive feature, either in its inception or result. But the opinion was freely expressed by those best qualified by long experience of Brighton to judge that the occasions have been few and far between on which the town has been so stirred as during the ten days' mission concluded last week.

The missioner was Mr. W. R. Lane, quite an unknown man so far as this popular health resort was concerned. In fact, it was deemed advisable by the local committee to devote to information concerning him one of the four pages that contained the general notices of the effort.

The interest thus aroused evidenced itself at the first gathering (Sunday afternoon, Jan. 16), when the capacious "Dome," the largest building that could be secured, was largely attended, and in the evening filled.

Not only did the outward interest deepen day by day as the mission proceeded, but the Spirit of God was seen to be at work in the large number of inquirers of the way of eternal life. One thousand, twelve hundred, fifteen hundred persons attended the "after meeting" as the work deepened, of whom a goodly number manifested real concern as to their spiritual state. These it would be unwise to tabulate; the day of the Lord alone will reveal how many yielded themselves, in spirit and in truth, to

THE WINSOME LOVE OF GOD.

As to methods, no unusual or sensational means were employed, either to draw the audiences or to impress them when gathered. Plain, straightforward announcements caught the eye of passers along the streets; simple and unvarnished was the declaration of the Gospel message within the hall to the 3000 persons who night by night pressed in to listen. Particularly noticeable was the absence of any extremes, either of fulsome humour or undue austerity; the preacher received his message from on high, and delivered it without fear or favour, his evident purpose being, not to attract to himself, but to lead seeking souls to Christ.

A notable feature that struck the writer, after nearly twenty years' experience of mission services in many places, was the weighty doctrinal presentation of the truth unrelieved by any light talk unworthy of the supreme object in view. The result was patent; a solemn spirit of hearing pervaded each assembly—whether an afternoon for Bible reading on Christian life and service, or a more distinctly evangelistic meeting at night—which is already bearing fruit in the thirty churches that united in the movement. The teaching was of a character likely to live, the effervescent and evanescent element being practically nil.

Two meetings stand out as particularly memorable—that on the Friday evening, when Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" formed the subject of an illustrated lecture; and that on the second Sunday afternoon, to which men only were admitted, of whom 3000 paid the most earnest and appreciative attention to the missioner's plea for purity of life.

What remains to be done now is for the ministers and their helpers to follow up the work with heart and soul, not allowing their congregations to lapse too soon into their ordinary weekly routine; and especially to find practical Christian work for those whose hearts God has touched. This they have evinced every disposition to do; and there is no lack of opportunity in this pleasure-loving town. If the converts are to remain "steadfast, immovable," it must be by "abounding in the work of the Lord." Many a mission has been bereft of much subsequent and lasting blessing from lack of these precautions; but where they have been duly observed, the converts have gone from strength to strength. Let the Free Churches of Brighton prayerfully aid them to "follow on to know the Lord."

MR. MOODY IN NEW YORK.

THE special meetings held by Mr. Moody in the Carnegie Hall, New York, developed considerable interest. The great evangelist did not shrink from dealing with present affairs and the crying need of New York for Christian morality in high places. Speaking on the need of the city, he exclaimed in one of his afternoon talks: "New York will never be reformed until pulpit and pen get nearer together. Let the judges hire the theatres on Sunday and preach the Gospel. Such a work would not lessen their dignity. They needn't be afraid of that. Let lawyers and merchants go out and talk to the people. Then you would see a genuine reform. I saw men do this work in London, but I should like to see it in New York.

"We want Stephens here. There are 10,000 of them, if they would only talk. The reporters should be Stephens, and then the Press would help to evangelise the world. The politicians should lay aside politics on Sunday, and talk to the hungry men and women of this city. The Lord's smile is worth

ALL THE OFFICES TAMMANY CAN GIVE."

Says the N. Y. Independent:—One secret of Mr. Moody's success is his alertness to catch up popular phrases. A young man wrote to him with regard to backsliding, and he made that the subject of a powerful address. A woman meeting him in the corridor, said: "I would become a Christian if I did not have so much to give up"; and that gave Mr. Moody his topic for an afternoon sermon. As for the backsliding, he claimed that a false God is just as dangerous in New York as in Israel, Hongkong or Timbuctoo, and that it makes no difference whether it is an image of gold or an idol of pleasure. The first backslider of the Christian age was Peter, and he was overcome, not by Christ calling to his memory how he healed his wife's mother when she was sick, but by his turning and looking upon him. Mr. Moody's affection for the Sunday paper has not increased. He claims, as he has before, that it has taken the place of the Bible with many Christians, and he urged that no Christian should give up his Bible for anything. With regard to giving up so much for Christianity, he asked:

"WHAT DOES THE CHRISTIAN GIVE UP?"

and showed that no matter how much is surrendered, more is received than is lost. "Peter, chief of the disciples, gave up his nets and fishing-smacks, and just think what he got in return!"

The last week-day services, held on Friday, made up a field day, as Mr. Moody said. The crowd at each service was tremendous, and people were turned away from the hall half an hour before the services began. In Mr. Moody's speaking on that day there was great fervour, but no appeal to the emotions of the audience. He spoke plain Scriptural teachings. The needs of religious people were pressed forward, but there was little attempt to stir the feelings. Again he turned to the topic of giving up for Christianity, and said that people were always talking about giving up something to be a Christian. He did not give up anything; he got something. When men say, as he has heard them say, "Moody's made a good thing out of it," he replied that he had made a good thing out of it. He had had forty years of peace and happiness, forty years victory over sin. That he held to be a thoroughly good thing. The greater part of the money collected at the meetings, Mr. Moody announced, would be given for the purpose of providing good reading for the prisoners. A portion was sent to the starving Cubans.

The series closed with services on Sunday which were packed beyond precedent, the ushers estimating that 8000 persons attended the meetings. Three thousand who presented tickets were denied admission in the morning because there was not even standing room, and at night it was even worse. Mr. Moody stated that he had received a number of requests to continue the meetings for another week, but had found it impossible to do so. If, however, there was a genuine desire for him to return, he would hold meetings from March 13 to 20.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

A FIFTEEN days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, in the Princes-street Mission Hall, Burton-on-Trent. The meetings were well attended, and the old old story has proved a great blessing. Souls have been led to the Saviour, and saints have been greatly refreshed.

A united mission at Alresford, Hants, has been attended with much spiritual success. All the meetings have been well attended, the interest increasing during the progress of the mission. The evangelist, Mr. James Shields, has been the instrument of bringing many to decision for Christ. Backsliders have been restored, and believers encouraged and helped.

A twelve days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Henry Patterson at Masham, the results of which have been very encouraging. On Sundays, Jan. 9 and 16, three services were held, including one for young people in the afternoon. The attendance at the week-evening services steadily increased, the power of God was manifested, and it was the preacher's joy to point penitent sinners to Christ.

A successful mission has been held by Mr. Allen Booth at Glodwick, Oldham. At almost every service sinners were seeking the Saviour, and many gave their names as having found Him whom they sought. A pleasing feature of the mission was the way in which friends from St. Mark's Church helped by their presence and sympathy and by taking part in the after-meetings. Several of the elder scholars have found Christ, and their names have been given to the vicar.

A fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. C. B. Jolliffe, of the Evangelization Society, in Kingswood, Gloucester, closed on Monday evening by a splendid meeting, which proved a fitting close to a series of meetings, attended by great blessing.

Mr. Wm. Smith has concluded a three weeks' mission at Scoutbush, near Carrickfergus. The meetings from the first were large, and increased in numbers and earnestness from week to week, many persons coming from considerable distances. The Gospel was manifestly with the power of the Holy Spirit and saving blessing, and many professed to receive Christ, rejoicing in Him as a present Saviour. Christians in the neighbourhood have been greatly quickened, and are full of praise for the time of refreshing.

The agent of the Country Towns Mission, at Monmouth, has been visiting Chepstow and villages near. He reports encouragement, and gives accounts of interesting conversations with some who have been called upon. This extra effort has been provided for by a reader of The Christian, who was recently staying in the neighbourhood. The society would be glad to hear from any who may be interested in a particular district. Having missionaries in many parts of the country, it is generally easy to arrange for such evangelistic effort.

A three weeks' mission has been held by Mr. James Walker, of Hawick, in the Baptist Chapel, Wick, N.B. There were special services for the children, and after each meeting a large number stayed behind for help and direction. The meetings for adults were not without tokens of blessing. Many were personally spoken to, and some professed to find salvation.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has concluded a ten days' mission at Hexham. Great was the interest. Men and women drove in ten or twelve miles to attend the services. The congregations increased until the spacious Wesleyan chapel was too small to held those who came. Many were of the rougher working class, some of whom were deeply impressed, especially at the men's meetings. On Thursday afternoon a large number of women listened to a tender message, which moved their hearts. The second Sunday was a memorable day. Mr. George Fox's phrase "the power of God was over all" seems true, and many were brought to decision.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding meetings in the Ainslie-street Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N.Y. A correspondent writes: "The pastor of that church, Rev. R. S. Dawson, tells me that he has the names of one hundred and twenty-eight who have professed conversion during the week, and he intends to have them all carefully looked after. He is carrying on the meetings since Mr. Hammond left."

During the past ten days evangelistic services have been held in Little Waltham Congregational Chapel by Mr. W. Wright. The services were most successful, being seasons of blessing to many.

Mr. Josiah Nix has conducted a mission at Warrington, which has proved a most remarkable work of God. The whole town appears to have been moved. God was so manifestly present that the moment the evangelist gave an opportunity to the people to come to Christ they came, young, middle-aged, old, in all positions of life. 761 passed into the inquiry room, and 800 signed the temperance pledge. The closing Sunday was a most remarkable day; in the afternoon large numbers came in, so that one of the ministers on the spot said, "Our nets will break there are so many."

A three weeks' special mission has been held by Mr. and Mrs. Aris, in the Gospel Mission Hall, Northenden, Cheshire. The Lord has graciously answered prayer, and manifested his quickening and saving power.

Mr. W. D. Dunn, so long associated with the late Mr. John M. Scroggie, has concluded a fortnight's mission in Aberdeen, under the auspices of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission. During the week of prayer which preceded the workers were seized with the conviction that blessing was at hand, and they have not been disappointed, but the most sanguine have been surprised at the widespread interest and the blessing which has been given. During the second week the hall was taxed to the utmost to accommodate the crowds who gathered, the people crowding the passages and stairs. The clear Scriptural preaching has been owned of God throughout the mission, not an evening passing without weeping sinners being pointed to Christ. The afternoon Bible-readings in the Y.M.C.A. hall were largely attended, and many believers have been led to see more clearly their position in the risen Christ, and are living and working as never before in view of his near coming. Hundreds of Christians in Aberdeen will follow the evangelist with prayerful interest as he launches out into the great centres of our land seeking to awake the multitudes given up to pleasure and sunk in the depths of sin.—J. A. S.

A mission has been held in the village hall, Sharnbrook, by Mr. W. Forbes, which has been much enjoyed by those attending.

Successful Gospel missions, in which several have been led to decision for Christ, have been held in Mallow and Longford Methodist Churches by Rev. John Good, of Dublin; in Cootehill Methodist Church, by Rev. S. G. M'Intyre, of Clones, and others; in Ballyconnell Methodist Church, by Mr. J. G. Smith, of Manchester; and in Ormean-road Methodist Church, Belfast, by Mr. James Dickson, of the Belfast Central Mission.

A month's mission has been held at the Gospel Hall at Harple, Norfolk, by Mr. C. Chenery. The congregations have been good, and many have profited by the meetings, a number deciding for Christ.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded another mission in connection with the Free Church Council. The centres were Enfield Lock Baptist Chapel, Ponder's End Congregational and Wesleyan Chapels. Mr. Balgarnie also addressed a large meeting of workmen at the Government Small Arms Factory at Enfield Lock during their dinner hour.

A fourteen days' special mission held in Spalding, by Mr. and Mrs. Woolley, has been brought to a successful close. The meetings throughout have been characterised by distinct power and blessing. Members from other churches in the town have shown their practical sympathy in this effort to reach the unsaved.

A very successful ten days' mission has been conducted in the Congregational Church, Brixton, by Rev. Rowland Sturt. Every evening large congregations assembled, and on each afternoon a Bible reading was held. Much interest has been excited, and great blessing has been the result.

Rev. R. Mackay closed a ten days' mission at Ilkeston last week. This week he is engaged in a similar mission at Saltburn-by-the-Sea. A special mission band is visiting every house, and the singing is led by a choir of fifty voices. The people of God are hoping for much blessing.

Mrs. Baeyertz last week concluded a sixteen days' mission at Ramsden-street Church, Huddersfield. Many missioners have before visited this town, but almost invariably with results disappointing to themselves and those with whom they worked. The people seem largely irresponsive to this form of Christian service. In the case of Mrs. Baeyertz, whether it was because she was a lady missioner, or whether it was because she was a converted Jewess, the attendance at the services from the first was remarkably good, and the interest deepened as the mission proceeded, until at the closing services the place was thronged. It is believed much good was done both in deepening the spiritual life of believers and in bringing to the faith of the Gospel many of the unsaved. Nearly 150 persons gave in their names in the inquiry room as having accepted Christ, and nearly every Evangelical church in the town was represented. We trust a real work of grace has begun which will go on increasing in volume and power.—E. E.

Mr. W. Bush, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association, has concluded at Merton Congregational Chapel a most encouraging and strengthening mission.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been preaching during the past month at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. The Sunday evening attendances have been large, much interest has been manifested, and many, it is believed, have been compelled to seek mercy in Christ.

On Jan. 16 Rev. John Good began a mission in the Methodist Chapel, Parsonstown. The reaping began at once, and missioner and pastor rejoiced together as they gathered in the "precious sheaves." Sinners have been converted and backsliders restored. Mr. Good had to leave on the 25th, but Rev. George Robinson has continued the services, and God is blessing and saving souls.

Requests for Prayer.

For a Gospel mission at Whittlesea, Cambs., Feb. 12 to 19.

For a united mission in Blackpool, Feb. 7-9, by Pastor Archibald G. Brown.

For a mission at Saxlingham, Norfolk, from Jan. 23 to Feb. 6, by Mr. James Scroggie.

For blessing upon a five days' mission at Pencoed, Glam., Feb. 6-10, by Rev. Seth Joshua.

For special services to be held in the Mission Room, Hazelbury, Plucknett, Feb. 6 to 13, by Mr. J. H. Roberts.

For an eight days' mission conducted by Mr. Rd. Spragg at Montague-road Hall, Leytonstone, commencing Feb. 6.

For blessing on a mission among Doncaster railway men, to be conducted by Mr. E. Barry Wake, of the Open-Air Mission, Jan. 30 to Feb. 6.

For blessing on Mr. Lane's mission at Albion Congregational Church, Southampton, commencing next Sunday, Feb. 6, that many souls may be gathered in.

Praise.—For good work going on at Marquise and Neufchâtel, Boulogne.

Scottish Notes.

The Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, has begun a new session with an increased number of students. The work goes forward with increasing signs of blessing.

A new hall of residence for women medical students attending the Edinburgh University has just been opened. It is named after the late Lady Muir, as a tribute to the great interest she manifested in the lady students.

The ambulance classes in connection with the training of Christian workers under the auspices of the Edinburgh U.P. Church have finished the sessions work. Ninety students entered, all of whom passed the necessary examination.

The Scottish Branch of the Evangelisation Society during 1897 conducted 4423 meetings at the invitation of ministers and friends in various parts of Scotland. The preaching of the Gospel has been fruitful in blessing, and the results of the work abiding.

There are few ministers better known in Scotland than Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, who has just celebrated his semi-jubilee; and his congregation have granted him three months' leave of absence to visit the Holy Land. At a large meeting held last week he was presented with £500 as a mark of esteem and appreciation of his work in the ministry.

The Scottish Anti-Vivisection Society do not mean to relax their efforts till the legal abolition of vivisection is accomplished. They are hopeful that during the ensuing session of Parliament some more decided action may be taken, and it is proposed to have a conference of members of Parliament favourably disposed and representatives from various societies to consider the action to be taken.

The Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society is doing a capital work in caring for the seamen who frequent that port. There are seven missionaries constantly employed, assisted by over 100 voluntary workers. During the past year 1384 religious services were held. Tea-meetings and limelight entertainments were given, and the reading and writing rooms have been extensively used by the sailors. The Orphan Society cares for over 500 children.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Homes for Destitute Children, in connection with the Evangelistic Association, took place on Tuesday week in the Town Hall, Saltcoats. Mr. John Galloway, Kilmeny, presided. The children from the Homes were present. Dr. Barnardo gave an address, in which he referred to the great improvements that had been effected in the country to make child life better and happier, and dealt with the rescue work carried on by him in London. Dr. Andrew, Stirling, also addressed the children, and Mr. Galloway gave an interesting account of the Homes.

The Christian Prayer Union of Aberdeen held its annual meeting for the promotion of spiritual life on Tuesday, Jan. 4. The meeting was both a pleasant and profitable one. After tea Mr. W. P. Gordon gave a short account of the work done by the Prayer Union and also about evangelistic meetings carried on during the year. An address followed with five heads: First, Aim high; second, Don't neglect the means of grace; third, Live practical Christian lives; fourth, Work for Christ, be an enthusiast; fifth, Consecrate your all to God. Prof. Johnstone delivered an address on the Christian life; while Rev. S. G. Woodrow spoke on how to read the Bible.

Christian Endeavour.

The C.E. National Council will meet in Darlington on Tuesday next, February 8.

The membership of the Christian Endeavour Tenth Legion has now increased to considerably over 5000.

Rev. J. Tolfree Parr, president of the Surrey Chapel Society, has been elected president of the London C.E. Council for 1898, in succession to Rev. J. G. Train.

During the week ending January 29 twenty-two new societies were affiliated with the C.E. Union of Great Britain and Ireland. This makes 124 new societies enrolled during January, 1898.

Blackburn. — On Wednesday, Jan. 26, two meetings for the deepening of spiritual life in connection with the Y.W.C.A., were held, in the afternoon in the Exchange Lecture Hall, and in the evening in the Town Hall. Rev. F. S. Webster spoke in the afternoon upon the defeat of Israel before the Philistines, and its cause (1 Sam. iv.), and the secret of victory, as shown in 1 Sam. vii.; and in the evening on "Sowing to the Spirit" (Gal. vi. 7, 8).

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT.

As the general editor points out in his preface, The Expositor's Greek Testament is intended to do for the present generation the work accomplished by Dean Alford's in the past. The aim is good, and if anything like the great influence associated with the Dean's noble work is exerted by the great undertaking which is now coming to fruition, then the contributors to the work will have reason for much satisfaction.

The Expositor's Greek Testament is, generally speaking, to follow Alford's plan. The work will comprise four volumes, and it is hoped that the completion will be reached within five years from now. The commentators have been selected from various churches, and have been accorded full liberty to express their own views. In the matter of paper and type the first volume is all that could be desired. At the top of each page is the Greek text, accompanied by critical material and select references. The commentary is arranged below in double columns.

The Greek text presented in this edition is that known as the Textus Receptus, on which the Authorised Version of the New Testament is based. This is an arrangement likely to meet very general convenience, in view of the attendant critical apparatus, which has been wisely digested for practical ends. The use of this text involves no drawbacks worth consideration. One characteristic of Alford's great work was that it made a large amount of German expository learning available to English readers. This characteristic is maintained by Drs. Bruce and Dods in the volume now before us.

A careful examination impresses us with the marvellous freshness of the work. The pages exhibit abundant scholarship and great diligence in presenting the views of ancient and modern interpreters; and to do this, with a practical purpose, is a primary object of the commentary. Dr. Bruce, who deals with the Gospel of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, tells us that he has "tried to unite some measure of critical freedom and candour with the reverence of faith." He has done all this; and occasionally we should have preferred more of the reverence and less of the freedom. Christ's descent from David is a matter of little significance with him; the "figment of inerrancy" stands in his way; and harmonisation is referred to with needless contempt. Though finding many things not to our mind, we have been delighted by the suggestiveness of the comment in many directions.

A passage which many think simplicity itself—Matt. iii. 11, 12—but regarding which there has ever been great variety of opinion, is dealt with thus:—

> The whole baptism of the Messiah, as John conceives it, is a baptism of judgment. It has been generally supposed that at the Holy Spirit here represents the grace of Christ, and the fire his judicial function; not a few holding that even the fire is gracious as purifying. I think that the grace of the Christ is not here at all. The pneuma hagion is a stormy wind of judgment; holy, as sweeping away all that is light and worthless in the nation (which, after the O. T. manner, is conceived of as the subject of Messiah's action, rather than the individual). The fire destroys what the wind leaves. John, with his wild prophetic imagination, thinks of three elements as representing the functions of himself and of Messiah—water, wind, fire. He baptises with water, in the running stream of Jordan, to emblem the only way of escape, amendment. Messiah will baptise with wind and fire, sweeping away and consuming the impenitent, leaving behind only the righteous. Possibly John had in mind the prophetic word, "our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away" (Isa. lxiv. 6); or, as Furrer, who, I find, also takes pneuma in the sense of "wind," suggests, the "wind of God," spoken of in Isa. xl. 7; the strong east wind which blights the grass. Carr (Cambridge Greek Testament) inclines to the same view, and refers to Isa. xli. 16: "Thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away."

Dr. Dods's work takes more account of English scholarship, though it is also rich in spoil from Continental mines and ancient writers. Questions of idiom and usage receive careful attention, and there is less that is curious than in Dr. Bruce's bolder writing. One feature of the work is introductions to the various books, discussing contents, characteristics, authorship, etc., and in this part of his work Dr. Dods recognises in John's Gospel a special aspect of Christ's teaching, and deals well with the objection that it is inconsistent with aspects given by the Synoptists. In his commentary he shows wide reading and careful work. On John iii. 5, after noticing various points and opinions, he writes:—

> Luke (vii. 30) tells us that the Pharisees, to whom belonged Nicodemus, were not baptised of John; their reason being that to submit to the same rite as Gentiles, and acknowledge the insufficiency of their Jewish birth, was a humiliation they could not suffer. To receive the Spirit from the Messiah was no humiliation; on the contrary, it was a glorious privilege. To go down into Jordan before a wondering crowd and own their need of cleansing and new birth was too much. Therefore to this Pharisee our Lord declares that an honest dying to the past is as needful as new life for the future. To be born of the Spirit involves a dying to the past, and therefore it is only the Spirit that is spoken of in the subsequent verses; but it is essential that our past be recognised as needing cleansing and forgiveness. These two factors, water and spirit, are not strictly co-ordinate. Water is not an actual spiritual agency in the second birth; it is only a symbol. But in every true second birth there is a negative as well as a positive side, a renunciation of the past as well as a new life created. The same idea is found in Titus iii. 3-5: "We were [of the flesh], but He saved us by the bath of regeneration and the renewal of the Holy Ghost." The same combination is found in Ezek. xxxvi. 25-27: "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you." The water, then, is considered as that which cleanses from sin: the Spirit as the principle of the new life.

Notwithstanding qualifications suggested by considerations of proportion and emphasis, and although not approving the point of view and treatment on many matters of detail, we regard this as a work well worthy the attention of thorough students of the Scriptures. It gives varied views; this plan will prove helpful to different minds. Persons enjoying a measure of scholarship, and disposed to read widely for expository ideas, will here find a great store succinctly given, and many a useful reference to sources of fuller information.

* THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT. Edited by Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, LL.D. To be completed in four volumes. Vol. 1: The Synoptic Gospels, by Rev. A. B. Bruce, D.D.; The Gospel of St. John, by Rev. Marcus Dods, D.D. Each volume 28s. Advance subscription, 30s. for two volumes. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THE BIBLE AND ISLAM.

There has been much discussion as to the extent of Mohammed's indebtedness to Christian as distinct from Jewish teaching. Dr. Henry Preserved Smith, in The Bible and Islam, the Ely lectures delivered in Union Theological Seminary, New York, in spring of last year, discusses the subject with a sufficiency of learning and great care. He tells the story of Mohammed and describes the Koran; and then shows Islam's doctrine of God and the Divine government, revelation and prophecy, the service of God, and the future life, also concerning Church and State. He holds that certain truths of Christianity fired the soul of the Arabian prophet, and adds:

> It is commonly supposed that his impulse was Jewish rather than Christian, and his system does, in fact, more nearly resemble Judaism than it resembles Protestant Christianity. But we shall be guilty of an anachronism if we make this comparison. The Christianity with which Mohammed came in contact was the Christianity of Arabia or Mesopotamia in the seventh century. Its type was, no doubt, that of primitive Ebionism rather than that even of Byzantine orthodoxy.

While admitting that Mohammed was not able to assimilate the most spiritual part of the Christianity of the New Testament, Dr. Smith points out that, for one thing, this was never presented to him. Speaking of the power of Islam, he contrasts with its excellency in bringing men one step from heathenism the tenacity with which it restrains them from taking another step. This book takes what may fairly be called a generous view of Mohammedanism, but it finds the system to be sadly wanting. Missionaries labouring among Moslems will read the pages to profit, and the book may be heartily commended to any who would study the subject under varying aspects. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.)

A new edition of Bunyan's famous allegory, The Pilgrim's Progress, has been issued by Messrs. W. and R. Chambers (2s.), provided with an index and a prefatory memoir by Dr. John Brown. There are numerous illustrations.

The editor of Go Forward (journal for Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers) has issued a pretty illustrated almanack (1d.), well adapted for hanging on the walls of girls' rooms, with daily texts and useful notes. It may be had also in book form.

The first part of a "Diamond Jubilee" edition of Cassell's History of England has been issued. The work will be completed in fifty-three weekly parts (6d. each), and in all there will be about 2000 illustrations. A large picture representing the scene at St. Paul's Cathedral on Jubilee Day is issued in connection with this edition.

The "Upward Life Series" has already enriched the library of seekers after a deeper life. The latest addition to the series is The Indwelling and Presence of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. Canon Gayer. (1s. Marshall Brothers.) An earnest presentation of important truths bearing on inner and spiritual walk with God and devotion to his will.

The gift of speaking to purpose to students is valuable and worthy of cultivation. A good model is afforded in Seekers for Light, by Dr. W. T. P. Wolston. (Nisbet & Co.) Fourteen addresses to Edinburgh students on Scriptural and evidential topics. The formal importance of personal faith is urged in the most explicit and direct fashion, while the privileges and opportunities of the Christian life are developed in a way likely to win the attention of ardent young men.

Though not occupying our own point of view, The Biblical World (2 dols. per annum. University of Chicago Press), always has contents likely to prove of service to students of Holy Scripture. The January issue has an illustrated article on "Nazareth the Home of Jesus," by Dr. Selah Merrill; a thoughtful article on "The Temptation in the Wilderness," by Rev. W. Bancroft Hill; also material from English literature illustrative of the International Sunday-School Lessons. A new department gives a sermon outline, with signed criticisms, exegetical and homiletical.

To warn and advise growing lads is not easy work even for a good and thoughtful parent. In Notes for Boys (and their fathers), on Morals, Mind, and Manners, "An Old Boy" covers a wide ground of instruction. We should be more definite on several subjects; but we would expect a lad who had read these pages to be well prepared for further and somewhat qualifying counsel. Taken as a whole, these "notes," originally penned to the author's own son, are manly and sound, and should not be overlooked by intelligent fathers. The little book is in its eighth edition. (Elliot Stock.)

The importance of interesting young folks in missions is now well understood by our great missionary societies, and many attractive books for children have been issued. The latest is Missionary Heroes of Africa, by S. Geraldina Stock (with seventy-five illustrations). London Missionary Society and Snow & Co. Miss Stock has done her work admirably—telling afresh, in a way the little ones can understand, the stories of early missionary heroes, as well as of Dr. Livingstone, Dr. Moffat, Mackay of Uganda, Bishops Mackenzie and Hannington, F. S. Arnot, Capt. Hore, McCall, Comber, Grenfell, and a host of devoted missionaries of like spirit and enthusiasm for Africa.

Dr. A. J. Gordon's posthumous volume, entitled Yet Speaking (1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.), will have a ready welcome. In these richly spiritual utterances we have distinct echoes of one of the most winning and gracious voices to which our generation has listened. The addresses given are not consecutive in theme and treatment, but were delivered on isolated occasions; and yet there is a beautiful unity pervading the whole. In a touching preface, Mrs. Gordon, speaking of her husband, says: "No Christian ever listened to his preaching without being stimulated to holier living." We can say with equal confidence that the like result will follow the perusal of these printed memorials of a unique ministry.

Some years ago the late Mr. Froude gave, at Oxford, a most instructive series of lectures on the Reformation, which were published and republished with much acceptance. These have now been re-issued in a cheaper form (3s. 6d.) by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. Lectures on The Council of Trent. By J. Anthony Froude. In reading once more these weighty utterances we feel convinced that such a calm, dispassionate, searching review of the rottenness of Rome's system ought to be widely read and pondered. The author avoids the doctrinal and spiritual aspect of the great Reformation movement, but in expounding the moral and social causes which gave rise to this revolt against an abominable corruption and a repulsive tyranny, he affords overwhelming evidence that the rule of Rome is incompatible with common morality and the well-being of humanity. Probably it is a page of history with which those who are now panting after Romish Ritual are very imperfectly acquainted.

Sir William Richmond's lecture on the work of Leighton, Millais, and William Morris, recently delivered to the students of the Royal Academy, is about to be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

The Queen has accepted, with kind and gracious words, a copy of the popular edition of A BOOK OF THOUGHTS, compiled in memory of John Bright by his daughter, Mrs. Curry, and recently noticed in our columns. (3s. 6d. Headley Bros.).

A deeply instructive booklet is JOSEPH: THE BROTHER BORN FOR ADVERSITY. (3d. Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine House, Bodney-road, N.E.) It places side by side lines from the story of Joseph and things related of and by Christ. The typical character of Joseph is shown in a very striking manner, and to the glory and praise of the great Antitype.

Messrs. Macmillan are about to publish Mr. Bodley's long-promised work on France on which he has been exclusively engaged since 1890. The first part is an elaborate inquiry into the relations of the French Revolution with Modern France, and the subsequent sections treat of the Constitution, the Chief of the State, the Parliamentary System, ending with a minute account of the political parties in the nation at the close of the century.

For publishing a scheme of the nature of a lottery, the proprietor of the Rocket was fined £20.

A number of "sandwich women" have been parading the West End of London of late with advertisements—a very undesirable and unwelcome innovation.

There were 3500 fires in London last year, of which 168 were serious, involving the loss of eighty-seven lives. No wonder the subject is under the serious consideration of the authorities.

A joint committee of the Parks and Open Spaces Committee are considering the practicability of laying out plots of ground in certain London parks to assist school children to study practical botany. With very slight cost this could be arranged.

At the many elections which are taking place just now, the brewers and publicans are again showing that with them their trade interests are before everything. On the other hand, at Plymouth temperance men of all parties united to return the successful candidate.

The Duke of Devonshire supports the measure to be laid before Parliament for the reconstruction of the London University as a teaching body. This is a movement that should be supported by members of the "House," independently of political creed. Parliament will reassemble on Feb. 8.

A deputation from the South of Ireland has asked the Government not to oppose the Fishguard and Rosslare Railway Bill, upon which a million of capital is to be expended. The line will provide direct communication with the West of England and London, and would do much to promote Irish trade.

Great anxiety to his friends is caused by the health of the Duke of Teck. He has never recovered from the shock of the death of the Duchess.—It is proposed to form a fund to endow a Home of Rest at Coombe, near Richmond, for poor working women of London. This is to continue a good work originated by the late Duchess.

Numerous cases of great distress from the typhoid epidemic exist in King's Lynn. The Mayor is appealing for further subscriptions. Practical sympathy in such a case as this will be very valuable.—The Mayor of Maidstone informed the Urban District Council that the Corporation owed their bankers £11,200 on account of the typhoid epidemic.

In the Court of Probate the will of Mr. Stokes, the trader-missionary, who was executed by Major Lothair, has been the subject of an action. His daughter produced one will and resisted another. Decision has been given in favour of the last will made in Africa, which makes the Church Missionary Society the residuary legatees. The society will, however, do well to act generously in the matter.

The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland have granted permission for a gathering at Stafford House in April to assist in freeing from debt the Sailors' Home at Millwall.—Arrangements are made for the extension of Willesden Cottage Hospital at a cost of £2500.—Mr. G. Herring, treasurer of the North-West London Hospital, has given £5000 as a donation to its funds, in consequence of the serious decrease of contributions in Jubilee year.—The treasurer of Guy's Hospital has received £20,000 from Mr. H. L. Raphael for building the "Henriette Raphael Nurses' Home," in memory of Mrs. Raphael.

The loss to workpeople resulting from the engineers' dispute is estimated at £4,000,000. What animosities as well as needless suffering the conflict is responsible for! Some 25,000 engineers have voted in favour of the "amended" employers' terms, and 14,000 against. They returned therefore to work on Monday. — An eight hours day to goods shunters, and a ten hours day to some locomotive hands, have been conceded by the Midland Railway directors.—The L.B. and S.C.R. have increased the wages of drivers, firemen, and others, to their entire satisfaction.—A strike on the Cork, Bandon, and South Coast Ry. is in force, all goods traffic being suspended.

When distributing prizes at the City and Guilds' Institute, the Speaker of the House of Commons urged the extension of technical education in the interests of national industry.—Effects are being made to aquire the Ferndale Swimming Baths, Brixton, with the view of utilising them as a Polytechnic. The effort deserves to succeed.—Classes held by the Home Arts and Industries Association at the Royal Albert Hall, have been re-opened for the second term of the winter session.—Preparations for the reopening of Alexandra Palace are proceeding rapidly. Spaces for industrial exhibits are nearly all let. It is hoped that the objectionable features formerly existent will be severely excluded.

The Macedonian committees are organising insurrection.

The Dreyfus case is still creating excitement in Paris. There seems little doubt that Dreyfus is the scapegoat of the Jewish population of France.—The Jewish population in France is considerable: Paris contains 42,000; Bordeaux 3000; on the Eastern frontiers about 19,000; scattered over the provinces 13,200; making a total of 77,200.—Fresh disorders and pillage have occurred at Algiers. Every Jewish shop is either wholly or partly wrecked. Claims to the extent of 3,000,000fr. have been made by Jews whose houses were attacked.

Resentment against plague measures has culminated in a riot at Sinnar, where a hospital assistant was killed, and the camp burned.—Latest reports from Bombay are disquieting concerning the plague. The mortality is over 95 per 1000 per annum. The exodus continues. All business is stagnant.—A disaster has occurred on the Indian frontier to the Yorkshire Light Infantry, who got entangled in a gorge near Shin Kamar; several officers were killed, many men are wounded or missing. A protest by the Cretan National Assembly has been addressed to the admirals against the murder and pillage carried on by Mussulmans.—The Greek Government is making strenuous efforts to induce the Porte to evacuate certain places not belonging to Thessaly now occupied by Turkish garrisons.—The war indemnity loan about to be raised by Greece will be nearly £5,000,000, of which £1,250,000 is for internal expenditure.—Mussulmans of Singapore have sent £500 and 1500 blankets for their distressed co-religionists in Crete.—Christians are relieving their suffering brethren. The relief fund has reached nearly £900.—Disorder prevails in Candia (Crete). Warships at Suda Bay are held in readiness.—The question of the Cretan Governorship is assuming an acute form. The Sultan is determined to refuse his consent to the appointment of Prince George of Greece, which Russia insists upon.—Sir Philip Currie has informed the Russian Ambassador at the Porte that Her Majesty's Government will support Prince George's candidature.

The Y.M.C.A.

The death has recently taken place of Mr. John Pairman, S.S.C. of Edinburgh, who, for the last ten and a-half years, rendered most valuable service to Y.M.C.A. work as honorary secretary of the Scottish National Executive.

The Dundee Y.M.C.A. Bible-class, which is now conducted by Mr. William Stewart, is one of the largest in the kingdom. It has a membership of over a thousand young men, and at a recent social meeting in connection with it well-nigh a thousand young men were present.

Sir Henry H. Bemrose, M.P., presided over a large gathering held in the Victoria Hall, Derby, at which opportunity was taken to bid farewell to Mr. A. K. Yapp, on his retirement from the secretaryship of the Derby Y.M.C.A., to take the position of travelling secretary for Lancashire.

Three meetings were held in the splendid hall of the Northern Polytechnic on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last. The high spiritual tone of the Queen's Hall meetings has been equally noticeable at both Shoreditch and Holloway. The special addresses were delivered by Prebendary Webb-Peploe on "Purity," and Rev. H. Foster Pegg on "Gambling." Gospel addresses were given by Revs. G. H. C. Macgregor and Marcus Rainsford. All the addresses were exceedingly good—the special topics being dealt with in a most masterly way. Every speaker had a thorough grip of his subject, and also of his audience—hearty applause following every telling hit. By kind permission of the commanding officer the next series will be held in the Drill Hall, Woolwich, on Feb. 8, 9, and 10. The continuous prayer of God's people on behalf of this crusade is very earnestly requested. Financial aid will also be thankfully received by the treasurer, Mr. R. L. Barclay, 54, Lombard-street, or the secretary, Mr. F. L. Porter, Y.M.C.A., Hackney.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Glasgow Association has now forty branches, including three for juniors under fifteen, one for nurses, and one for teachers.

The Dundee Y.W.C.A. has been compelled to enlarge its borders, and has just opened a new hall to keep pace with the requirements of the work.

The sixth annual meeting of the Tulse Hill and West Norwood branch was held at the institute, 191, Tulse-hill, on Friday week, under the presidency of Rev. H. Sinclair Brooke. The report stated that there were 184 members, forty-four of whom are total abstainers, and nine are scattered members. Miss Ardell gave an interesting account of the work generally, and Rev. H. S. Brooke delivered an address from Ps. xvii. 5, "Hold up my goings in Thy paths, that my footsteps slip not."

A public meeting for the Y.W.C.A. was held on Tuesday week in the People's Palace, Mile End-road. It was a most satisfactory meeting in every respect, the hall and galleries being packed with an audience of 2500. Tea was provided in the "Winter Garden," after which the meeting was opened by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, chairman. The speakers were the Hon. G. Kinnaird, who gave an instructive address on Y.W.C.A. work and its progress, and Rev. W. B. Mowle, who was evidently greatly appreciated. The choir was formed by 200 members from different branches. An exhibition of lime-light views illustrative of the work of the Association at home and abroad was explained by Mr. W. Joynson-Hicks.

"They beckoned unto their partners . . . . that they should come and help them." Luke v. 7.

Dear FELLOW HELPERS,

I have begun the work committed to me this year amidst circumstances of grave anxiety, and I feel assured that the Lord's stewards would wish me to place the facts of the case clearly before them.

The donations for the year 1897 have been £3,706 less than for 1896, instead of, as heretofore, manifesting a slight annual increase. This means that, if the sum mentioned is not quickly obtained, I shall have to carry a fresh and heavy burden into 1898. Several friends have exhibited a kindly disposition to assist at the very beginning of the year in making up the deficit and removing the load. Amongst others,

(1) "Captain L." sends me five guineas "with kind sympathy," and he adds, "I am prepared, by means of some money left me, to give £100 if you can get ten more to subscribe the same amount by the end of February";

(2) "Mrs. W." promises £25 if 25 others will do the same; and

(3) "An Old Friend" offers £10 10s. if 50 others will follow his example.

(4) "Beta" says "I will give £5 5s. if 100 others will do likewise."

Very gratefully will I acknowledge any response to these kind offers or any other gifts, however small, in support of the great Family of Waif Children who, under God, are dependent upon me day by day for food and clothing and education and Christian care.

Yours in Christ's service among the Children,

Thos. J. Barnardo.

Reaching the "Hooligans."

By J. W. C. FEGAN.

"YOU are quite right. Such an effort is much needed. God prosper your undertaking." So write the veterans. From his enforced retirement at Tunbridge Wells, worn out by thirty-two years' toil in the slums, beloved George Hatton (founder of the St. Giles' Christian Mission) writes:—

> "I have been so delighted in reading your "article in THE CHRISTIAN. I can endorse "your experience—every word of it. I have "long felt very strongly about the closing up "of many of the old efforts. I spent some of "my happiest days in the old Ragged Schools, "and they nerved me for my after-work in "the St. Giles' Christian Mission. Oh! how "I love it still: but, as you know, I am "prostrated, yet kept in perfect peace. May "the Lord give you to see much fruit from "your splendid effort."

From his Yorkshire home, "shattered by heavy labours amongst the lapsed masses," my dear old friend Joshua Poole ("Fiddler Joss"), who more than twenty years ago, night by night, for weeks together was my true yoke-fellow, preaching the liberty of the Gospel to the down-trodden, battered slaves of vice and crime in S.E. London, writes:—

> "The great lack is of preachers who will lay "themselves out to go after the despised and "the despairing—the drunkard, the wife-"beater, the gambler, the pick-pocket, the "harlot. Preachers nearly all seem to want "to be teachers. We need those who will reach "down deeper and deeper to the neglected and "outcast whose lives have been wrecked by "sin."

* * * * *

Of course the pessimism of discouraged or unbelieving hearts hums its threnody.

> "It is a very difficult task to take in hand. "Dark indifference seems settling on the land. "No sense of sin, no sense of accountability "to God, no concern about spiritual and "eternal realities. Everybody is after the "visible, the tangible, the material—more "money, more pleasure, more comfort, etc."

My answer is:—

> "I know this is so. Because I feel it, and recognise it as a sign that 'the time is short,' my spirit is moved within me. But I believe where 'sin abounds, grace does much more abound': I have faith in the Gospel, as 'the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.': I am resting on the promise, 'He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.'"

* * * * *

Surely, what the Gospel has done for cannibals it can do for "Hooligans"! Surely, this Gospel, that has changed hearts in Patagonia and Uganda, can lead sinners in Blackfriars and the Borough into "newness of life"! Has it come to this, that we believe in the power of the Gospel amongst far-away black heathen, but doubt its power amongst our own white heathen? God forbid! "Lo, I am with you alway." Let us count upon this; let us "Be not afraid; only believe."

* * * * *

I have not sought this new work. I am undertaking it with hands already very full, and strength already somewhat taxed, only because I feel God has called me to it. I am practically commencing it with only some Christian "Old Boys" as helpers. We will be thankful to hear from any Christian friends willing to give personal service in preaching services, in Bible classes, in elementary educational classes, in singing and music, and from young men who will superintend the indoor and outdoor athletic arrangements. We can find some interesting work for everyone. Will those who cannot help thus in person make this work the subject of daily intercession, that we may soon look upon some of these "Hooligans" as Hannah ooked upon her Samuel —"asked of God"?

* * * * *

But, remembering that we are justified before men by our works, let me just outline our progress so far and our plans for the future. The workmen have been busy for some weeks past cleaning and adapting the old Christ Church parochial schools for our new Home Missionary centre. The Opening Gatherings will, D.V., be held on Friday, February 25 (afternoon 3.30, evening 7), when we hope all our friends from near and afar will make a special effort to be present. The chair in the afternoon will be taken by Mr. T. B. Miller (Treasurer of the Royal National Deep-Sea Mission), in the evening by Dr. R. Anderson, C.B. (Assistant Commissioner of Police). Amongst others Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites (Salisbury), Pastor W. Fuller Gooch (Norwood), Pastor Frank White (Bayswater), Mr. David Rea (Belfast) will speak. The cost of repairs, alterations, etc., including seating, lighting, etc., of the mission hall, large schoolrooms, classrooms, etc., will be about £600. Towards all this we have at present received about £27! But I am so confident that God has given us this work to do for Him that I believe He will move some hearts to help in this deeper-down effort so that we shall be able to open free of debt.

* * * * *

Beside the initial outlay we shall need quite £800 a year to carry on the work with the vigour and thoroughness which a task of such special difficulty demands. We should much like to add a medical mission, but this means in such a neighbourhood an outlay of quite £300 a year. Will not some friend, for the glory of Jehovah-rophi, undertake the first year's subsidy, that we may gather the afflicted, "with all manner of sickness and all manner of disease," to show "the kindness of God" to them, and tell them of Him who is "mighty to save"?

* * * * *

There are several absolutely necessary items which I am going to detail in the prayerful hope that some sympathetic Christian friends, who cannot live in the slums or offer personal service, may feel led by God to take a share in "reaching the Hooligans" by providing some part of the equipment. Let me say here that in this work we shall have to contend against all the attractions of the world and the resources of the Devil in the centre of the greatest city on earth, and we should on this account have everything good of its kind—as well as on the score of true economy, for experience has taught me that what is cheap is usually very expensive in the end.

* * * * *

We want two American organs—(a) a really good large one for the mission hall, costing about £40 net; (b) a smaller one for each of the two large schoolrooms, costing about £17 net. The style of singing in connection with mission work now is a more important point than it used to be, for through the spread of education all children of late years have been taught the rudiments of tonic-sol-fa; besides in a city like this the roughest can for a few pence hear some of the world's most famous vocalists. It is not extravagance to do anything thoroughly connected with the glorious Gospel. It is worthy of the best.

* * * * *

We want a first-class Lantern. The "Hooligans" have given up going to Sunday-school, and the lantern exhibitions that interested them at treats, etc., a few years ago, would suffer considerably by their frank comparison with the displays they have since witnessed at places of worldly amusement. In all such matters this is an age of rapid advancement; and while maintaining the immutability of revealed truth, we must not overlook the adaptability of human methods

* * * * *

We have not made as much use of Eye-gate as we ought to have done. Take a "Hooligan" to hear even the forceful and dramatic John McNeill, and when you come out ply him with questions. Show a "Hooligan" some pictures, explain them en passant, and afterwards examine him on their meaning, The result will be very instructive—I have tried it. The kind of lantern we require will cost quite £50 net. It will bring precious truths before thousands, and open many hearts, we hope, for the entrance of the Word of Life.

* * * * *

We want a properly equipped gymnasium, for the best means of weaning these "Hooligans" fro loafing habits and teaching them the wholesom ness of the earthly lesson that "every man tha striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things is to let them feel the benefit of healthy exercise and encourage them to seek their recreation "unde the breezy blue," in the cricket field or the countr ramble, instead of the stifling dancing saloon o music-hall. The estimate for this gymnasium i just £37 complete.

* * * * *

It will be such a boon to these weedy dawdler to brace up their flabby organisms, and I per sonally look forward to this gymnasium as a poo where the fish will "shoal," and I can angle fo some in odd half-hours, instead of "roving" alon the troubled streams of our noisy, crowded streets

* * * * *

We want 600 good strong Bibles, all of uniform pattern and of good plain type, and strongly boun —also 600 hymn books and 100,000 assorted narra tive Gospel tracts. Who will help us with a suppl of seed-corn—"the principal wheat" and "th appointed barley"?

* * * * *

"Please, sir, some ladies want to see you," whis pered the door-boy, as I sat writing this article. Pre sently he ushered in two young women. "We've come, sir, to inquire, please, if you're goin to do anythink for lydies at the new Mission, 'co on the bills we've seen it's all for gentlemen, bu over one of the doors it sez 'Girls' Institute.'

"Of course we are, for you and your mothers, too A part of the building is to be kept quite distinc for you, and a lady is going to live there an hold classes, &c., for your education, needlework singing, &c., and, in a kitchen downstairs, instruc tion in plain cooking, &c., &c." Off they went, pro fusely thankful, although I had to tell them the must not expect the "swarrees" and dancing tha one of them told me they used to have arrange for them by some latitudinarian workers in th East End.

* * * * *

The babies, too! Yes; those weary drudges—th overworked, unconsidered, worried mothers are t be relieved for an hour or so of their fretful babes and sit at their ease, joining in the hymns the used to sing in the long-ago days in the far-of peaceful village home and hear the message o redeeming mercy without distraction, while, in a adjoining room, baby is fed and sleeps soundly i a comfortable swing cot, or plays in a saf "pound" under the watchful care of some Chris tian worker. I know no class that has a stronge claim upon our Christian sympathy, or wh need a little relief more than the mothers wh drag out their dreary days in the toil and moil o all-the-family-in-one-room existence. This cloak room-cum-nursery arrangement for the babes wil be such a boon to them. Surely, the Master wil smile sweetly upon it! This will cost about £25.

* * * * *

Now let me, in closing, briefly explain my positio personally. My wife and I, for the work's sake live in our Boys' Home here. All the evenings can spare from other engagements, and all th Sundays my kind friends in different places wil allow me to spend in the slums here, will be give to this Home Mission work to the utmost of m strength. But I have promised my Council t raise the £600 required for adapting and furnishin the premises, and the £800 a year required fo current expenses quite independently of the ordinar receipts for the maintenance of our Homes.

* * * * *

This £600 is needed at once. Indeed, the builde has already sent me our architect's certificate fo £200, and I expect in about a week to have anothe demand made upon me for a similar amount. I these circumstances I ask for the immediate hel of all who sympathise with the work I have out lined to win for Christ some of the sin-fettered burden-bowed men and women—the rowd "Hooligans" and the flaunting hoydens of "th poorest district in all London." I feel I nee not—I must not say more.

Contributions may be sent to the Treasure D. C. Apperly, Esq., 5, Cripplegate-buildings, E.C. to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, Office of Th CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to m here.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

CANON STREATFEILD has accepted the vicarage of Christ Church, Hampstead.

The Bishop of Exeter has been thrown from his horse and sustained several bruises.

The Archbishop of York has instituted Rev. C. M. Potts to St. John's, Masborough, Rotherham.

Mr. J. R. Diggle has been elected vice-chairman of the Young Men's Society, in the place of Canon Elwyn.

The Bishop of London has appointed Thursday and Friday, April 28 and 29, for the next session of the London Diocesan Conference.

York Convocation will meet in York Minster on Wednesday, February 16 and 17, and Canterbury Convocation will also meet the same week.

It is stated that under the will of the late Mr. Hind, of Wandsworth, the churches in that district will benefit to the amount of nearly £50,000.

It is proposed to build a church in the parish of St. Barnabas, Crosland Moor, and Sir Joseph Crosland has headed the subscription list with £1000.

Meetings have been held at Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the Church Association, for humiliation before God on account of national sin, and to consider the lawlessness and idolatry of a large section of the bishops, clergy, and laity of the Church of England.

There is no duly authorised day of intercession for Church home missions as there is for foreign missions, but every year sees an increase in the number of those who observe such a day in response to the invitation of larger Church societies interested in the evangelisation of the masses. The Bishop of Rochester, however, has gone a step further, and in a letter to the clergy and laity of his diocese officially bids them observe Wednesday, March 2, as a "day of prayer and humiliation."

Mr. Colin Campbell, Social secretary of the Church Army, has secured a large block of buildings in Millbank Street, Westminster, which he hopes to open in the course of a month or six weeks as "The Morning Post Home." This home will be used entirely for reclamation work in connection with those who haunt the Thames Embankment and neighbourhood night after night. This special work has been carried on in another of the Society's homes for the last three months with very encouraging results.

Congregational.

A new chapel has been opened at Beech Grove, Newcastle.

A mission has been conducted by Rev. G. Snashall at Ashwell.

At Chingford, Rev. A. W. Anderson has entered on the pastorate.

Rev. C. H. Davies has entered on his new charge at Newport (Isle of Wight).

At Mount Pleasant, Tunbridge Wells, the jubilee of the church has been celebrated.

Rev. E. C. Morgan, of Moreton-in-Marsh, has received a call to Westbury-on-Severn.

At the reopening of Trinity Chapel, Dewsbury, the preacher was Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P.

Dr. Barrett's church at Norwich reports 833 members and a vast amount of activity in all directions.

Rev. J. Thompson has resigned the pastorate at Ruscombe, Glos., after 16 years' ministry, owing to ill-health.

The work at Duke-street, W. (King's Weigh House Chapel), has lately been carried on with considerable success.

By the death of Rev. H. Rawlings, a native of Bristol, the Colonial Missionary Society has lost its oldest member in Queensland, where he had laboured for thirty-four years.

The Gloucester and Cheltenham district meetings were held at Tyndale, Glos., on the 25th ult. Revs. W. Davis, of Tewkesbury; J. Foster, of Cheltenham; Ignatius Jones, of Dryhook; J. F. Brown, of Cirencester; R. D. Ross, Stroud, and others gave excellent addresses.

The work at South Wigston, Leicester, is greatly hampered for lack of room. The old building, consisting of but one room, without even a vestry, and accommodating but 150 people, has had to serve every purpose, whilst three meetings at least have had to be held weekly in the pastor's house. The Sunday-school crowds it to excess, senior classes being absolutely forbidden solely for lack of room. Strong efforts are being made to build, and £200 is yet required. The pastor is Rev. F. E. Perry.

Baptist.

A new chapel has been opened at Fairhaven, Fylde.

At Swaffham, Rev. F. C. Spurr has held a good mission.

A ten days' mission has been held at London-road, Lowestoft.

A good and growing work is reported at Prince's-street, Northampton.

The church at East London Tabernacle has called Rev. S. J. Jones, of Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool.

The vacancy at St. Andrew's, Cambridge, has been filled by the acceptance of the pastorate by Rev. C. D. Joseph.

Most interesting missionary meetings have been held at Walsall by Rev. J. Vaughan, of Orissa, and J. R. M. Stephens, of the Congo.

At Cavendish Chapel, Ramsgate, a fresh and vigorous start has been made since the recent reopening. The whole organisation is full of life and activity.

The minister of Victoria Chapel, Wandsworth-road, Rev. E. Henderson, will, in a few weeks, complete twenty-five years' ministry in connection with the church. It is proposed to mark the event by presenting him with a testimonial. Mr. A. Sullivan, 228, Lavender-hill, S.W., is acting as secretary.

The annual meeting of the London Baptist Association was held last week at Camden Chapel. The meetings were of great interest and more largely attended than mostly. Rev. J. R. Wood, of Holloway, re-opened a discussion—adjourned from last meeting—on "How does the sense of sin express itself to-day?" A profitable debate ensued.

The Bow-road Church (Rev. Fred H. King) held its annual meeting and thankoffering last week. The report shows good progress. During the year 36 new members have been received, and there are now 232 on the roll. The other branches of work show a healthy condition. The thankoffering has amounted to about £60, being much larger than any previous year.

About three and a-half years ago a Mr. Merrill started services in a barn at the rear of his house in Vange, a hamlet some two miles from Pitsea Junction. Recently Rev. W. Williams erected a small iron structure, with the accommodation necessary for a growing work. The people apparently appreciate the movement. The district is being opened up, promising to become a residential resort of some importance, whilst there is no place of worship, Established or Nonconformist, nearer than two and a-half miles, hence there is scope for good work. A church formed on Baptist lines seems to have a useful future before it.

Methodist.

A spiritual awakening is reported among the girls at Edgehill College.

A week's temperance mission has been held by Mr. W. H. Whitehead at Tredegar.

Jubilee services have been held in connection with Wesley's Chapel, Pembroke Dock.

Mission work is being vigorously prosecuted in connection with the People's Hall, Cardiff.

Three young missionaries were ordained last week in the City-road Chapel for service in India.

The Didsbury students' missionary anniversary was held on Tuesday in the Central Hall, Manchester.

A week of special prayer at Stoke Ferry, Downham Market, has been followed by considerable interest.

Successful missions have been conducted at Bream and Clement's End (Forest of Dean) by Rev. W. U. Bassett.

Messrs. Robinson and Fletcher, with the Home Mission car, "Beulah," have concluded a ten days' mission at High Brooms, Tunbridge Wells. Much good has been done.

The London Wesleyan Council met on Monday evening in the Centenary Hall, when Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., read a paper on the "Proposal to Commemorate the Commencement of the Twentieth Century by Raising a Fund of One Million Pounds for Methodist Church Purposes from One Million Methodists."

Rev. Samuel Chadwick, who is in charge of the Leeds Mission, has issued a comprehensive report in anticipation of his anniversary. It deals first with the three branches of the Leeds Mission, and gives the welcome intelligence that there are more than 500 workers, a membership last March of 1568, with 126 on trial. Over 2000 people are in regular attendance at adult Bible classes conducted by the ministers, and there are more than 2000 children in the Sunday-schools.

Presbyterian.

The work at Mount Pleasant, Liverpool, is reported as full of encouragement.

Rev. Robert Stewart has opened a new hall at Benwell, Newcastle. The work seems full of promise in every direction.

Rev. Edward Griffith, after a pastorate extending over thirty-four years, has resigned his charge at Maesgwyn, near Welshpool.

It is said that Rev. J. M. Witherow, of Berwick, being approached with regard to a call to Kensington, has declined, wishing for the present to remain at Wallace Green.

Mr. Edward Jones, J.P., Trewythen, has been appointed treasurer of the Welsh Forward Movement, in succession to his brother-in-law, the late Mr. Edward Davies, J.P., Llandinam.

The financial statements for 1897 of the Presbyterian Church of England have now appeared. The six schemes of the Church show a total income of £14,102, a decrease of £78 on 1896, but an increase of £786 on 1895.

The Regent-square annual report states that the past year has been memorable as one of advance in every department of work. The ordinary income amounted to £3111, and in addition £3896 had been paid towards the cost of the new mission premises, making a total for the year of £7007. The membership stands at 733, an increase of seventeen.

The Salvation Army.

The Army are busy building a new barracks for their No. 4 Edinburgh corps.

A home for the reception of ex-criminal women has been opened in Glasgow.

A hospital is to be opened near San Francisco for the assistance of poor Chinese. The need for an institution of this kind is very keenly felt.

"Pearls," the annual report of Mrs. Bramwell Booth's social work amongst women, has just appeared. No less than 262 officers are engaged in helping Mrs. Booth in the work.

In San Quentin prison, California, thirteen prisoners have become Salvationists. Commander Booth-Tucker has visited the prison with a number of officers, who sang and spoke the Gospel message to hundreds of prisoners.

Fallen Asleep.

At Hernhill, Faversham, on 22nd ult., Right Rev. JOHN MARTINDALE SPEECHLEY, D.D., formerly Bishop of Travancore and Cochin. He had been vicar of the parish since 1892; he conducted a service on Sunday week, and in the early part of the week contracted a chill, which developed into pneumonia. His death was totally unexpected, and has caused much regret.—At Ham Vicarage, Richmond, on 24th ult., Rev. W. B. F. BLUNT, son of the Bishop of Hull, vicar of Ham, and for nine years a well-known worker at St. Mary Abbott's, Kensington.—At Brecon, Mrs. H. C. RICH, jun., a devoted Christian, a generous hostess, and described as "helpful, kind, and bright as a sunbeam."—In the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's-inn-road, on 20th ult., Mr. S. LEA, a deacon of Vernon Baptist Chapel, King's Cross (from the result of an accident on the previous Sunday afternoon), an active and successful mission worker in Somers Town, and had been engaged in Sunday-school work on the afternoon of the accident. He was for many years the evangelistic superintendent of the Christian Men's Union Gospel Mission, Somers Town.—At South Molton, Mr. W. SKINNER, J.P., a very useful worker.—At Stockport, Mr. H. A. SOUTHWORTH, an earnest helper.—In Liverpool, Mrs. JENKINS, wife of the pastor of Park-road Welsh Church.—At Somercotes, Mr. MATTHEW HAYES, on 21st ult., aged seventy-three, a much-loved local preacher.—At Hartlepool, Rev. JOHN EASTWOOD, a retired Methodist minister.—At Sandy, Mrs. SARAH BARRINGER, a much-valued worker and teacher at Beaston.—At Birmingham, Mr. J. E. A Pleasing Testimony.

DEAR SIRS,—I received the Paragraph Bible and Christians all right on the 21st, and the postcards may be useful later on. Re the Bible, it was a birthday present from my eldest son, and I am very pleased with it, and I shall find it a great help in home study. Re The Christians: I was pleased to see they were for the current week, and I was able to get seventeen of them distributed on the same evening, and in most cases to have a chat about them to those to whom I gave them, and two others the following evening.

I have been a subscriber to The Christian for eight years, and have found it a great help. It caused my missionary-box subscription to go up from 5s. to 25s., besides making me an earnest worker in the cause. I am an engine-driver on the Midland Railway, so I was able to point to Rev. Mr. McNeill as an old railway man. I am an earnest believer and preacher in the personal reign of our Lord Jesus Christ, and one of those who work with Mr. J. Thornton to send The Christian to four missionaries.

I am greatly indebted to Rev. F. B. Meyer, as I have found his Scripture Biographies a great help in mission-room addresses. I also take twenty-five "Herald of Mercy" each month, a favourite paper to all I give them to. As a member of the C.M.S. Gleaners' Union and a collector, I give my subscribers copies, and I think if the C.M.S. people knew this they would allow you to print short pieces from the life of Bishop Hannington and others. I have twenty-four copies monthly of the C.M.S. paper, The Awake; and while I am able to get them off among my Sunday-school scholars and others, when I give them their choice they generally choose The Herald of Mercy, so I should like always to see at least one page each month devoted to missionary work, similar to the copies just come in for February, with the piece on the last page, "After Many Days."

One to whom I gave The Christian has promised to take them, and in a few weeks I will try and learn of other fruit and let you know. Hoping and praying that the Lord's best blessing may rest upon you and help you in the work, I remain yours truly,

John J. Jephcott.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

All the Profits are Divided amongst the Assured; already divided, to 1892, £4,600,000.

Claims Paid Exceed £10,000,000.
Invested Funds - - £5,000,000.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at minimum cost, with provision for old age. The practical effect of these Policies in the National Provident Institution is that the Member's life is assured until he reaches the age agreed upon, and on his reaching that age the whole of the Premiums paid are returned to him, and a considerable sum in addition, representing a by no means insignificant rate of interest on his payments.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

WE propose to commence in our next issue a series of brief articles on drunkenness among children. This fearfully growing evil is being fixed upon the attention of those who labour among the young; and we trust that the sad facts disclosed will assist in awakening active interest, and giving direction to remedial measures.

The Temperance party seems to be re-uniting its somewhat broken ranks over the Sunday Closing question. The splendid meeting held last week in the Queen's Hall was full of enthusiasm and purpose. One of the hopeful aspects of this movement is the fact that the Archbishop of Canterbury is using his whole influence in its favour, and is carrying with him a large section of the Church party. The overwhelming proofs to hand of the beneficial effects of the measure in Scotland, Wales, and Ireland furnish a powerful argument from facts. These facts, however, are not well known generally, and one of the first needs of the campaign is the conversion of the hesitating friends of temperance in the community by convincing them of the effects of the measure where it has had a fair trial. This is a question, by the way, in which teetotallers may well call in the aid of the strictly moderate party, who are not opposed to a stricter regulation of the drink traffic.

How greatly the mere presence of a Christian man may influence a crowd of irreligious men, is known to all who have seen anything of shops, offices, and warehouses. The Christian himself may not see or know much about it, but outsiders know. One youth who follows his Saviour consistently will deter from evil and prompt to good others less firm than himself. He is a rock for support, a light for guidance, a witness for revealing his Saviour. A City missionary, who visits London hotels, says that as soon as he appears among the waiters, and cooks, and others, coarse jokes, if they are flying about, cease, sporting papers are hidden away, and a gradual change of ideas and tone of life is manifest in the houses to which he regularly goes. If an occasional visitor can do so much, one who is permanently in a place may be used of God to do very much more.

There is a beautiful aroma about a holy life, which testifies to its consecration when spent amidst the hum-drum routine of the home or the business. It does not need a public activity to exemplify a whole-hearted devotion to our Divine Lord. A quiet life amid quiet scenes, in simple tasks and unpublished ministries, may shine like a sun. In life's byways—"holy and acceptable"—can be clearly impressed upon all that the hands find to do.

How much gain is made at the cost of the ignorance of buyers? Is it wrong to put on a price that you know is above the value? Is it wrong to let an ignorant man sell you an article at a price below its worth? Case in point: An individual offered a work of art for sale at £25 to a body of experts, who saw at once that its actual worth was several thousands of pounds. The majority would have taken it at the owner's price, and said nothing. One only stood out against the sophistry, and the owner was told the value of his possession. An evening paper's comment on the case is :—

> The public have certainly lost a grand chance of swindling some unfortunate wretch out of his rights, but we do not believe it will regret the wasted opportunity.

Is it because preachers of to-day do not look for conversions that they see so few? Or is it because the preaching of our time is lacking in appeal and directness? Surely the necessity still exists for the preacher to say, "Thou art the man," and for the message to be pre-eminently a word of life to the soul thus addressed. The conversion of Mr. Spurgeon came about under the direct appeal (to himself, as he thought) of the Primitive Methodist preacher to whom he was listening.

The following passage from the Church Times deserves special notice in view of the source from which it emanates :—

> He must be blind and deaf to one large side of religious life who fails to take note of the fact that in many churches the attraction for a very considerable number of the attendants is the music and nothing else.

This is a case of "Saul among the prophets," for it is exactly the contention of Anti-Ritualists since the High Church have thrown such undue emphasis on the externals of worship. The fact complained of has necessitated shifting the anthem from before till after the sermon in many cathedral services, in consequence of the number of worshippers who used regularly to leave before the preacher gave out his text. It is time that the High Church party learnt the lesson that it is plain and simple teaching on the realities of faith which does good, and not the elaborate ceremonials on which they lay such fatal stress. It is by appeal to the heart, and not to the eye and ear, that men are saved.

It is a familiar fact that men who are most opposed to the Bible know least about it. They either take their criticism second-hand, or allow themselves to be prejudiced against the whole series of books because they have found some particular portion which the "natural man" cannot receive. The other night a gentleman was arguing against the use of the Bible in Board schools, and turning to one who was sitting near he said, "I have no doubt my friend here will give us his old argument about Jonah and the lions' den!" A little later, when it was reported that a certain representative body had done a generous act, he remarked, "I'm glad to hear that some good thing can come out of Jerusalem!" Those who banish Bible study from their own lives, as a rule, wish to banish it from the lives of others also.

> If life be aught, the saviour of a life
> Owns more the living thing than he can own
> Who sought to slay—the slayer spoils and wastes,
> The cherisher sustains.—Arnold.

On this principle a "Boys' Lifeguard Brigade" has been started at Colne, Lancashire, having for its purpose similar aims professed by those who founded the original Boys' Brigade, but with this great difference, that the boys of the former bear no arms, and are not trained to slay but to save. Their drill is ambulance, fire drill, and saving (from drowning) drill. The uniform bears the Red Cross symbol. This movement is a happy change from the Boys' Brigade, embracing, as it does, all the most useful features of the latter without its increasing militarism. We wish it godspeed in its beneficent mission.

The late Mr. Thomas Porter, of Manchester has left £70,000, the interest of which is to be expended in assisting orphan children from orphanages to make their first start in life. Under the disadvantage of the loss of parent, or parents, it is often difficult to know how to place girls as well as boys so that they may be able to prepare for an honourable position in society. When a promising lad is apprenticed or articled his foot is on the lowest rung of the ladder. A good apprenticeship is a splendid training and qualification. Many a young and lonely life has been dwarfed for the want of just that practised Christian thoughtfulness which led Mr. Porter to make this generous provision. We are exhorted to leave "fatherless children" with God, and He has promised to "preserve them alive." This is one way by which He keeps his promise.

A scheme is being floated by the Wesleyan Methodists to celebrate the close of the century by the collection of a million sterling, from a million persons, for the extension of religious work in that body, which has been accepted with splendid unanimity by the London Methodist Council. There is a scope and courage in the idea which appeals to the imagination; and if the principle emphasised at the gathering, that the strong should help the weak, is fairly carried out, it is well within reach of attainment.

Writing with reference to a recent letter in our columns on vivisection, a medical practitioner "protests against religious papers admitting such subjects." Protests and counter-protests have their place, but by confining ourselves to such measures we should neither learn nor teach. We are not sure that there is much in a remark by our correspondent regarding the views of "the vast majority of Christian doctors." There are fashions in science as well as in society, and it is not at all certain that vivisection is either justifiable or necessary. We could quote great names against our correspondent's contention, but that would not be to the point. The subject has important moral bearings; on that account we are interested in it, and must beg respectfully to differ from our courteous friend.

An interesting series of articles on "How to live long" in the Daily News, sums up the writer's conclusions in a sentence that, however commonplace it may seem, contains a truth that should be deeply impressed on the minds of those in the heyday of life :—

> It is not everybody who can boast of long-lived ancestors, or a good constitution, but there can be no reasonable doubt that the best constitution may be impaired by folly and excess, and the worst may be benefited by reasonable care.

This is a truth that is most easily forgotten in the years when its importance is most imperative. The number of lives wasted yearly through foolish excesses, vicious indulgences, irregular habits, and reckless expenditure of energy thrown away in the mere rush for wealth, would, if they had been carefully husbanded at the right time, greatly swell the number of octogenarians as well as sweeten all the days between. To the man of God, according to the ordinary laws of nature, the promise still holds: "With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation" (Psalm xci. 16).

We learn with alarm, through the Speaker that the bishops have been conferring together with a view of making the Government Bill on Secondary Education a Bill for introducing denominational teaching into these schools.

We have surely had more than enough of this religious controversy in connection with primary education, to the immense detriment of both education and religion, and the embitterment of feeling all round. "When it comes to placing the technical training in the hands of the clergy, it is time to ask how much further England is to be carried in the direction of priestly rule." So says our contemporary; and we agree.

The depressed state of trade in the West Indies is no doubt one source of the present difficulties of the churches and the missionary societies working there. How that is to be met and overcome, it is not for us to say. But the evil is not wholly a commercial one. In the West Indies, as in the Southern States of America, slavery has left a terrible legacy of evils which will not be exhausted for many a year. The Methodists speak of the frightful necessities of the case among them, and the London Missionary Society has a similar cause of troubles. Poverty exaggerates the difficulty, for it throws Churches and Christian work which ought to be self-supporting upon the hands of the societies at home. But even were this removed, much remains to be done in the way of building up character. Individual instances of great strength and beauty may be found, yet time will have to be given before the general body has become firm in power and consistency.

The veteran missionary Dr. Griffith John publishes in the Christian World an interesting Chinese ballad on the iniquity of the custom in that country which insists on the mutilation of the feet of women. He points out the fact that the Christian publications spread broadcast through the land have for years been inveighing against the custom; and it is clearly the humanitarian sentiment thereby awakened which has inspired this striking poem. As an indirect tribute to the influence of Christian pity which is beginning to pervade that cruel people, it is therefore of great value. The progress of the truth is often seen in the social reformations which it inspires; and when the heathen themselves thus take part in them it is a proof that the lifelong antagonism which has barred the progress of the Gospel is beginning to break down.

The demoralising effects of war on all who take part in its fierce struggles is occasionally painfully evidenced in the letters sent home by the combatants. We had shocking illustrations of this in published letters of some of those engaged in the recent Matabele and Bechuana affairs. The present war in India furnishes some fresh examples. In one case it comes from the pen of the Chronicle correspondent. After describing the burning of some Aka Khel villages which ruined the homes of hundreds of non-combatants, some of whom begged our soldiers to end their lives out of pity (one old woman tried to burn herself with her home), this representative of Army sentiment goes on to say: "Everybody, from the General downwards, was pleased with the success of the day's operations. A hot bath, the snowy whiteness of the cloth and the brightness of the silver which adorned the mess-table, and a night between the sheets, were afterwards thoroughly appreciated." Such callous disregard to suffering inflicted, in contrast to the glorification of the comforts of the British camp, while those poor people were left to perish on bleak hillsides, is painful reading. Any employment that can thus dry up the springs of natural pity for the vanquished must be of the devil.

In contrast with the above, one is glad to read a summary of the consular report regarding the peaceful reformation wrought in Chaki Chaki, the chief town of the island of Pemba, under peaceful British influence. A few years ago this place was the dirtiest and most immoral town in East Africa; nine out of ten of the inhabitants were in a state of chronic drunkenness; prisoners were shamefully treated; slavery was rife in its cruellest forms. Now slavery has been abolished, prisons have been remodelled on humane lines, crime has diminished, and the vile poisonous spirits that killed the inhabitants by hundreds are strictly forbidden. Consul O'Sullivan puts this down to representation from Government officials, combined with the excellent work of the missionaries; and he actually invites the Government to prohibit the importation of any drink at all into Pemba. Here is an illustration of what might be done for Africa as a whole, if only Britain worked with sufficient faithfulness to higher ideals.

Connected with many Established churches in the county of London there is a group of curates and sisters who are ever on the wing devoted to the special service of visitation. When Nonconformists realise that one man cannot do everything, they too will adopt the system of the multiple pastorate, and so keep in touch with the homes of the people in a way that is quite impossible to a man who has four or five hundred families in his congregation, by whom he is expected to keep his preaching "abreast of the times."

One of the most characteristic movements of the present reign, as regards criminology, has been the diminution of imprisonments. This, we are told in a report issued by the Howard Society, has had a far-reaching good effect and has made the reformation of criminals much easier than of old. Especially has it helped in the reclamation of children and youths who have committed offences. In the early part of the reign these were sent to prison just like adults; now a child is seldom imprisoned, but is sent to a reformatory, where he comes under good influences. The better and more humane treatment of criminals has also had a beneficial effect, by preventing the embittered feeling with which a harshly used prisoner would go into the world after the term of his detention was over. It must not, however, be thought that because so many of our prisons are half empty, that minor offences are correspondingly lessened. Education has done a great deal of good; but it has only proved its incompetency to deal with the root of the trouble.

Lady Henry Somerset.

THE following letter has been forwarded by Lady Henry Somerset to the Secretary of State for India:—

Dear Lord George Hamilton,—Your lordship invited me ten months ago to give you my view of the dispatch that has been addressed to the Government of India on the health of the Army, and in a letter in which I did so I ventured to suggest some methods moral and disciplinary which seemed to me the only ones likely to succeed, because they had at least the merit of being logical.

I was led to do so by two considerations: first, the dispatch in question seemed to imply that the Government would give every encouragement to every form of elevating agency, and so emphasise the altered spirit in which the subject was approached, and that such suggested supervision would only affect an incorrigible minimum; and, second, that the system I had in mind would be so drastic and penal in its nature as to make State interference odious and finally impossible. That was ten months ago, and in that time nothing has been done, of which the public has heard, to strengthen the forces that make for moral improvement.

What has been done—viz., the repeal of the Indian Acts of 1895, which prohibited inspection, has been in a direction exactly opposite. It seems to have been the object of the Government to obtain the maximum of impunity, with the minimum of protest from those who desire to see the State shape its actions according to Christian views of ethics.

I need not tell your lordship I am not writing to say how strongly I am still opposed to the course which the Government has taken; but I find that my letter to your lordship of last year has been taken by many to mean that I am on the side of the accepted view of State regulation, and I am from time to time quoted as a sympathiser with such views. I am, therefore, writing to withdraw any proposals made in that letter for this reason: that the events of the past year have convinced me of the inadvisability and extreme danger of the system that in April last I thought might be instituted. The absence of any serious effort by the Government to bring about a higher standard in the Army is a final proof to me, that as long as regulation of any kind can be resorted to as a remedy, it will always be regarded as the one and only panacea. My view was that it would be instituted as an odious but possibly effective auxiliary to moral efforts. I find it will always be accepted as a convenient substitute. I take the liberty of addressing this explicit withdrawal of an endorsement in whatever form of the principle of regulation, because it was in a letter to your lordship that I originally incurred the responsibility. I trust, therefore, to your lordship's indulgence to forgive me for troubling you further in the matter.—I remain, my lord, yours very truly, (Signed) Isabel Somerset.

Eastnor Castle, Ledbury, Jan. 27.

The Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institution and Training Hospital, at Tottenham, is, we are glad to learn, not in danger of any such radical reorganisation as was recently apprehended. In fact, we are assured that religious services in the wards and among the out-patients have been carried out since Dr. Laseron's death, in the same way as during his life, with the exception that (as recommended by a committee of inquiry) the permission of the medical officer has been previously obtained before music and singing have taken place in the wards. Under the new scheme, now proposed, the Christian element will not be affected; indeed, full provision is made for the maintenance of religious services. The exclusive right is vested in the Institution to provide the required number of deaconesses and nurses for the Hospital, who will be allowed to speak to the patients on religious subjects; moreover, the sisters will be Evangelical Protestants. The tenour of the scheme is reassuring, and its strict terms by no means justify the fears which we expressed on January 20. It is hoped by modified management to enhance the usefulness of the institution without restricting its spiritual influence.

Romanism and National Welfare.*

AT this moment, when a special effort has been set on foot for the conversion of England to Romish views, it is incumbent on us to make a special study of this question—what the Church of Rome is doing. Already there are some five hundred clergymen of the Church of England who, having been convinced that their ordination was invalid, have secured reordination at the hands of the Papal Legate. England now contains eight hundred nunneries, with twenty thousand inmates, over whom there is no civil control, and by an insidious policy the Press is becoming an engine to direct attention to or from that which the Romish Church would have us know or not know.

The comparative conditions of South America, of Romanist colonisation and present control, and North America, a Protestant country, show what Romanism does for a nation. And Spain, the first to colonise them both, is itself in a condition of hopeless decay. Compare Romish Austria, with all its historical and political advantages, with Protestant Germany. Belgium and Holland, Ireland and Great Britain, on comparison, teach the same lesson. France has been shown by Guyot to be two-thirds unbelieving, with a stagnant population. "The Anglo-Saxon and Germanic races," says that writer, "cover the earth...while France is

DANCING GAILY TOWARDS ANNIHILATION."

The Pope blessed Alva when despatched against Holland, but at once the Dutch Republic rose till it became the leading naval power of the world. When the Protestant faith was established in Scandinavia three insignificant nations sprang into the foremost rank, and now their colonists are the wholesomest element in the United States. When the Prussian dukedom became a kingdom the king was solemnly cursed by the Pope, who did not hesitate to use as his own the words of God by Hosea, "They have set up kings, but not by me; they have made princes and I knew it not"; yet from that moment it became one of the most potent influences in the history of Europe, to whom even the present Pope offers support in China. The Spanish Armada was blessed by a Pope, and England's queen handed over to assassins in the name of the Catholic faith, and from that period dates the greatness of our country; the one check in the growth of which was during those disastrous years between 1660 and 1685 when her throne was occupied by Roman Catholic monarchs. Whatever nation the Pope has cursed, Almighty God has blessed; those under his undisputed sway are constantly passing to decay and ruin.

The sweetness and beauty of so many Catholic lives may be most fully recognised, but it is because of this that it becomes the more a duty to expose the evil of the system which is so disastrous to most. The Papacy is built on documents which everyone now knows to be forgeries. Instance the Clementine Homilies, a mere romance on the strength of which Tertullian based the claim to apostolic succession, assuming the ordination of Clement by Peter, and preparing a fictitious list of early Popes. The whole temporal position of the Pope rests on the Donative of Constantine—a forgery intended to show that temporal power for ever was accorded to them by the first Christian Emperor. In the ninth century they made use of a hundred forged letters purporting to be the decretals of thirty successive Popes, known as the Isidorian Decretals. "On these," says the impartial Hallam, "was built the great fabric of the Papal supremacy"—on simple fiction. Hildebrand, who built the Papacy, rests all his claims on these. A fatal nemesis falls on every man who props his position upon a lie.

The obvious distinction between Protestant and Catholic countries is a different standard of truth.

Catholics are taught that other duties may take precedence of truth, and that the Church is first to be served. Is that not alone enough to account for the decay of Catholic countries? The great prosperity of Protestant countries is due to one invariable principle, that no cause ever can be served by a lie.

Few Protestants are aware of the Romish priests' real claim. St. Bernadine of Siena says: "The priest is greater than the holy Virgin, who conceived Christ once, as by consecrating the Eucharist the priest conceives Him as often as he wishes, producing the great Person of the Son of God, becoming thus, as it were, the parent of God, and the creator of his own Creator!" Is not this the very language of Paul against the Man of Sin setting himself up as God?

Christ identified religion and morality. "By their fruits shall ye know them." But Rome destroys that position, teaching that the Divine power in pope and priest is entirely independent of the character of the man who wields it. Many claiming to be the vicegerents of God, the vicars of Christ, have been such, for instance, as Pope John XII. And from 1471 to 1522, the very time of the Reformation, criminals possessed the See. Sixtus VI. was so bad that the Catholic world breathed relieved when he died. Innocent VIII. and Alexander VI. committed every vice of which human nature is capable. And so on. For fifty years there sat upon the papal throne such vices and crimes as justified the Reformation by the simplest counsels of virtue and religion.

AS BAD AS MEN COULD BE:

PAPAL INFALLIBILITY IMPLIES

the doctrine of infallible interpretations, from which it is impossible to recede. Once having made the gross blunder of accepting the Vulgate, and having based thereon practices and doctrines, the Church of Rome must always maintain it, as in the case of rendering the word repentance by "penance"; yet any intelligent man in the Romish fold who studies his Greek Testament must be aware of an amazing contrast, and must either repudiate this claim of the Church or stifle his intelligence. Is it any wonder that a country declines when its intelligent and thoughtful people are brought to such a pass?

This brings us face to face with a tremendous issue, Christ or the Pope? Christ has told us that He and He alone is the door whereby we may enter the fold and approach the Father, but the Pope claims that we can only reach Christ through him.

So far, in this presentation, only incontrovertible facts have been brought forward. There has been no need for an impeachment or for abuse. There is a great conspiracy in modern England to prevent the people learning the truth of Romish history. The Romish priest never presents us with the full extent of the Pope's blasphemous demands. Just one quarter of the truth—an economical view—is set before us. The claims of Christ—so beautiful in their simplicity—grow more commanding as we perceive the infallibility of his method of bringing the world under his sweet yoke.

The Christian Church:

What is its Scriptural Meaning and Use?

By Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P.

(Concluded.)

THE great question that divides Christendom is how to get this unity, or to decide where it lies. The sacerdotal churches claim that it resides in an unbroken succession of priests from apostolic times. The Protestant Churches hold that it is a spiritual union of the individual soul with Christ. All souls that abide in Christ, as the branch abides in the vine, form the Church; all that hold the Head, even Christ, and derive their spiritual life from Him, are part of his body. Those who have no organic connection with Christ, no matter by what name they call themselves, are no part of his true Church—they are rotten branches. "If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." John xv. 6.

This view, which is undoubtedly Scriptural, brings us to the distinction between the visible and invisible Church. It may be doubted whether these terms are altogether Scriptural. The churches which we read of in the New Testament were bodies of professed believers. They were those who openly associated together as confessing Christ in the midst of the heathen world; yet apostates soon showed themselves, as Judas amongst the Twelve, Ananias and Sapphira in the Pentecostal Church. No one can for a moment hold that the apostates derived any advantage from union with the Church. The Last Supper did no good to Judas, nor the outpouring of the Spirit to Ananias and Sapphira; the light only served to deepen their darkness and intensify their treachery. It must be a false conception of a Church which makes participation in "the sacraments" the cardinal question. It is contrary to the entire body of Apostolic teaching. No jugglery or hocus-pocus of ceremonial religion avails anything with Him who reads the secrets of the heart. "He that doeth righteousness is righteous." "He that committeth sin is of the devil." I John iii. 7, 8.

We are, therefore, led to the conclusion that though the terms visible and invisible Church are not used in Scripture, they correspond with a reality. The visible Church is set forth in the Lord's parable of the wheat and the tares. "The servants said unto Him, 'Wilt Thou then that we go and gather them up?' But He said, 'Nay, lest while ye gather up the tares ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest, and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into My barn.'" Matt. xiii. 28-30.

We may say with perfect certainty that any theory of the Church which makes it all-important to belong to one outward communion is opposed to the spirit and tone of the teaching of Christ and his apostles. A bad man is not less bad because he bows at the altar of a Roman Church, or "communicates" with Presbyterians, "or breaks bread" with Brethren, or rejects all ceremonies with the Quakers; and a true saint of God may live in any of these systems if he abide in Christ.

Yet we are not to undervalue a pure visible Church; it is the ideal system designed by Christ, not fully realised as yet in this sinful world, but destined to be fulfilled. The Divine symbolism of Revelation points to such a fulfilment. "I, John, saw the Holy City, the New Jerusalem coming down from God, out of Heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." "The city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof, and the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it, and the Kings of the Earth do bring their glory and honour into it" (Rev. xxi.).

Some may interpret these words of the heavenly state. Some may refer them to a restored and purified earth. I rather lean to this view myself, but the point is that all visible embodiments we have yet seen of the Church are poor and imperfect compared with God's ideal, and this ideal is destined to fulfilment. The Church of God and the kingdom of God will some day blend together. "There will be new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

This leads to our last point, that our Lord's first adumbrations of the Church were as a kingdom. "The Kingdom of God is at hand." The Kingdom of Heaven is likened to a sower, to a grain of mustard seed, to leaven, to treasure hid in a field, to one pearl of great price, to a net cast into the sea. His disciples, hearing him speak so much of a kingdom, naturally thought of an earthly dominion. "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the Kingdom to Israel?" "Grant that my two sons may sit the one on thy right hand and the other on thy left in thy Kingdom."

How did this term, "Ecclesia," which we call church or congregation, take the place of the Kingdom? Christ was the promised Messiah whom all Jews expected to be a King; He adapted his language to Messianic expectations. No other language could have been intelligible before his death and resurrection. The Church which He purchased with his blood had not then been formed. It was shadowed forth as a kingdom, but when the complete Gospel was preached, after his resurrection, and especially after Pentecost, the collections of believers were more truly described as congregations than as a kingdom. If we remember that the word Church is simply congregation, we shall see its appositeness. It would have been impossible to speak of the kingdom at Jerusalem, at Antioch, at Ephesus, but it was easy to speak of the church, i.e., the congregation; and it was easy to conceive of the larger idea of one common Church containing all local churches redeemed by Christ "out of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues." The apostles at Pentecost received the Spirit of truth whom Christ promised when He said: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now; howbeit when He the Spirit of Truth is come He will guide you into all truth" (John xvi.).

That promise He fulfilled at Pentecost; and it enlarged their conceptions of his redemptive work in a marvellous way, and new bottles were needed to hold the new wine of deeper spiritual truth. Hence, church or congregation took the place of kingdom. Yet I venture to think that when this dispensation has run its course the Church will assume the final form of a kingdom. The King will be visible in his glory—"His servants shall serve Him, and they shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads" (Rev. xxii. 3, 4).

In some real and true sense of the word, but one far deeper than we can picture to ourselves, "the kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever."

NOTE.—For an exhaustive treatment of this subject the writer commends that admirable book, Hort's "Christian Ecclesia" (Macmillan).

THE MYSTERIES OF THE KINGDOM.

(II.—Concluded.)

PASSING to the New Testament, Jesus is born King of the Jews. He preaches the good tidings of the Kingdom of God. His parables veil from the disloyal and unbelieving, but reveal to obedient and loving disciples the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven and of God. He is a King, but his kingdom is not of this world. He was God's King upon his holy hill of Zion, but He was rejected by his own people. "We have no king but Cæsar." And Cæsar's representative wrote his accusation in the three chief languages of the world: "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews."

The Book of Acts begins by telling us that He was seen of his chosen apostles during the forty days intervening between his resurrection and ascension, and that the subjects of which He spoke were the things pertaining to the reign of God. And the book ends with the Apostle of the Gentiles dwelling for two whole years, in his own hired house, in the metropolis of the last world-kingdom, preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Two things have resulted from the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. (1) The Prince of this world has been cast out of his princedom; He is still the god of this world, but no longer its prince. Of the princedom yielded to him by the first man, Adam, he has been despoiled by the second Man, the Lord from heaven. "Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out." (2) The Kingdom of God has for ever passed out of the region of the first creation. Adam has been finally judged, and has come to his doom in Christ. All who have received Him have become children of God, and have entered the Kingdom of God, by a birth, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God (John i., iii., xii.).

The Epistles speak of the Kingdom of God as a kingdom which is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. For man as descended from Adam has been so poisoned by sin, in spirit and soul and body, that except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God." "For our citizenship (our commonwealth, our country) is in heaven, from whence also we look for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall transform the body of our humiliation that it may be fashioned like unto the body of his glory, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself" (John iii. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 50; Phil iii. 20, 21).

It is of this heavenly kingdom that the Epistles speak. As indeed the Gospels had already looked toward and declared that "as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of Man be in his day," "when He cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels" (2 Tim. iv. 18; Luke xvii. 24; Mark viii. 38).

This is the kingdom of which, in its future manifested glory, the Apostle says: "Ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, that ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory" (1 Thess. ii. 11). "For the grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present age, looking for that blessed hope, even the manifestation of the glory of the great God, and of our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 11-13).

Through faith, which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, we who believe have already been translated into this kingdom. The Father already hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, hath delivered us from the power of darkness, hath translated us into the Kingdom of the Son of his love. Even now we are in the kingdom, and the kingdom is in us, who "continue in the faith grounded and settled...to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ [the Anointed, the King] in you, the hope of glory" (Col. i.).

The Revelation is the flower and fruit of all preceding Scripture. It sets forth the two-fold character of the kingdom to which we have referred. On the other hand, Jesus Christ, the Faithful Witness, the Firstborn of the Dead, and the Prince of the Kings of the Earth, is in heaven, and is coming again with the clouds, and all the tribes of the earth shall wail because of Him. On the other hand, John and his brothers and companions are on earth, in tribulation, and in the kingdom and endurance in Jesus. For as when Jesus was on earth He was the Son of Man in heaven, so now that He is in heaven He is in us on earth, and walks amidst the churches.

The kingdom is the bright link which unites the tribulation and the patience. The kingdom, as we have seen, is in resurrection, and we who have been baptized into Jesus Christ, into his death, and, raised to walk in newness of life (Rom. vi.), are in the resurrection, and therefore in the kingdom.

And God is spoken of throughout the Apocalypse as "He that sitteth on the throne," in contrast with the self-exalting spirit who said, and fell by saying, "I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will be like the Most High." The whole book is a bird's-eye view of the conflict between the usurper and the true King. The Word of God is the King of kings and Lord of lords, and on his head are many crowns; and the usurper whose power of darkness has wrought so much dishonour to God, misery to men, and is cast into the bottomless pit, and finally into the lake of fire. And those who, in spite of warning and invitation and appeal, have cleaved to him have their portion with the devil and his angels; while those who are called and chosen and faithful are the bride of the Lamb, and share his glory in the everlasting Kingdom of Christ and of God.

All the mysteries of the kingdom are included in the mystery of God, and the mystery of God shall be finished when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever (Rev. x. 7; xi. 15).

The mystery of iniquity and the mystery of God are two sides of one history, which began with the disbelief and disobedience of the angel who rebelled and seduced the human race, and it is finished with the obedience of faith of all those who to the end shall believe the Gospel of the kingdom of God.

The Bible is the Book of the kingdom. Only when viewed as such can it be fully understood. When viewed as such, it is the revelation of the mystery of God. M.

God's Methods with Man:

Past, Present, and Future.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

V.—The Appearing of the King.

OUR last address dealt with the "week" of years between the Parousia of Christ and his Apocalypse. Let us now consider the events of the interval, both on earth and in heaven. Fear and wonder will arise among those who are left when our Lord comes for his Church, and the effect upon thousands of souls must be repentance towards God and faith in Christ; the line of blood and sacrifice, initiated at the Fall and fulfilled in the Cross, is taken up here, and extends through the millennial period. The late Rev. John MacNeil, of Australia, graphically pictures, in one of his books, how the taking away of a mother from her daughter may be used to turn the latter from frivolous worldliness unto God. But the removal of those Divinely declared to be the light of the world, must leave it in spiritual darkness; and the absence of "salt" will give unlimited opportunity for extension of corruption. Doubtless I speak to many who have laboured in London for more years than I have lived; but the twelve months spent here have burdened me with a conception of its need which by its vastness almost discourages effort. Still, the life of the great city is enormously influenced for good by its godly citizens.

THE EFFECT OF THE CHURCH'S REMOVAL

must be two-fold—a turning to God on the part of many, side by side with an increase of evil and the revealing of the Man of Sin, who cannot have full manifestation until the Holy Spirit which now restraineth is taken out of the way (2 Thess. ii. 7, R.V.) Verse 9 gives the marks of the lawless one's coming and rule—"according to the working of Satan... with all deceit of unrighteousness for them that are perishing." The words of Dan. xi. 36 coincide with the prophecy just quoted. Also, "Who is the liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? This is the antichrist, even he that denieth the Father and the Son" (1 John ii. 22, 23). In chap. iv. 3 we read "Every spirit which confesseth not Jesus is not of God: and this is the spirit of the antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it cometh; and now it is in the world already." The spirit of antichrist is the mystery of lawlessness, the essential spirit of evil and of opposition to God; and it has been in the world from the moment of the Fall until now. The late F. W. Robertson, of Brighton, in one of his remarkable sermons, traces the diversity of manifestations which the spirit of antichrist has had in various ages, such as power, idolatry, mammon; but it is ever the self-same attempt to underwork good by evil,

THE SPIRIT OF OPPOSITION TO GOD.

When the Holy Spirit in its dispensational fulness is taken away from the earth there will be nothing to hinder the working of the mystery of iniquity, which will become concrete and incarnate in one man. Professor Denney, whom I quoted a fortnight ago, shows that Paul regarded antichrist as a person to be manifested at a given time; and I believe this will be in the interval between the coming of Jesus for his people and his appearing with them. Dan. ix.-xi. discovers a great world-power conquering the earth and entering into covenant with the Jews gathered into Jerusalem, in their unbelief; and it is a remarkable fact that there are now more Jews in Palestine, driven thither by persecution, than in the days of Nehemiah. In the midst of the seven years antichrist breaks the covenant, causes sacrifice and oblation to cease, and the terrible day of Jacob's trouble dawns. Then, "upon the wing of abominations shall come one that maketh desolate; and even unto the consummation, and that determined, shall wrath be poured out upon the desolator" (ix. 27). Here we have, in an individual, the most awful manifestation of evil the world has ever seen; one claiming to have Divine power and yet directly energised by Satan himself. During the latter half of the "week" will come the breaking of seals, sounding of trumpets, and pouring out of vials described in the Revelation. Other events will, however, be passing on the earth.

This seven years will see

A MARVELLOUS INGATHERING

to God of stricken, smitten, and afflicted men. The hundred and forty-four thousand of the Jewish nation will be sealed; and the great multitude which no man can number, out of every nation, shall be brought to Christ (Rev. vii.). The R.V. makes an absolutely essential correction when it speaks of "the great tribulation" (verse 14), for here is a scene having no immediate application to the people of God in this dispensation. True it is that the whole Church of Christ shall have all tears wiped away; but the words refer to the great company of those who are brought out of the tribulation coming upon the earth after the taking away of the Church and the manifestation of the man of sin.

How are they to be gathered unto God? I make answer with reserve, because men deeply versed in prophetic truth

DIFFER FROM ME HERE.

Personally I am convinced that not all Christian people will be taken to be with Christ on his return, but only those who, by the attitude of their lives, look for his appearing. They who remain and pass through the tribulation will be awakened by the stupendous events of their times to the privilege and responsibility of witnessing for the truth in that age. Even in the day of Jewish sorrow, God will dwell with his ancient people, who will then become heralds of the Cross, and under stress of plague, famine, and suffering beyond imagination, an innumerable multitude will be gathered unto Christ.

What of the Church during that interval? She is in the heavens with her Lord, all the retarding forces and probationary days of earth being ended. Then will be set up the judgment-seat of Christ, and it is most important to distinguish between that, the bema, and the great white throne. Has 2 Cor. v. 10 reference to a general judgment? Assuredly not, for the Epistles are uniformly addressed to the saints alone. As a sinner, my judgment was accomplished at the Cross of Christ, in view of which the Spirit convinces of judgment, not "to come," but past. To the bema of Christ, I, his servant, must come; and all my service will be tested by his eyes of fire. This need not affright, but should fill us with godly fear and heart-searching as to the kind of work we are doing for God. "We must all be made manifest," for God does not disassociate our work from ourselves. If I am self-centred and unwatchful, so also is my work—wood, hay, stubble (1 Cor. iii. 12). But if my life is surrendered to the King, if I am loyal to Him and absolutely under his control, mine is King's work—gold, silver, precious stones. I like to connect this scene at the bema of Christ with in Revelation, where He is pictured as with eyes of fiery flame. Here is a man whose whole Christian life of service has been hay, wood, and stubble; and the eye of fire consumes it. The man is saved, yet so as through fire. There is another whose work has been gold, silver, precious stones; and the eye of the Master purifies it of dross, burns out evil, until that work sparkles even under the fierce glance of the King Himself. Then shall Christ's Church, not only redeemed but purified as to life and service by the fire of his eye, be presented faultless, without spot, blemish, or wrinkle, in the white light of his Father's glory and holiness. Jude (verse 24) describes this much better than any words of mine can possibly do—"Now unto Him that is able to guard you from stumbling"—not falling—"and to present you before the presence of his glory without blemish in exceeding joy, to the only God our Saviour, through Jesus Christ our Lord, be glory."

Rev. xix. 7, 8 (R.V.) gives what I believe to be the next point—the marriage of the Lamb. The dress of the Bride in this marvellous ceremony of eternal union with her Lord will be that which was purified in the fire of the judgment seat; "for the fine linen is the righteous acts of the saints." To this succeeds the apocalypse of Jesus, "Behold, He cometh with his saints." Thus we have traced the course of events upon the earth—the full manifestation of evil, the consequent sore tribulation, and a great gathering out of Jew and Gentile; while, in the heavens, the Church has been brought to judgment, purified, presented to the Father, and eternally united to Jesus Christ. During that period of awful chaos here, God shall control events to the bringing in of Christ's reign upon earth; and humanity shall realise, individually, socially, and collectively,

THE GREAT LOVE-THOUGHTS OF GOD'S HEART.

I shall probably repeat again and again my personal conviction that ours is an unmeasured dispensation as far as man is concerned. Times and seasons ended for awhile with the cutting off of Messiah, and will be resumed when He takes away his Bride, who is also rejected of men. While that is so, the signs of the times—such as the unrest everywhere, the long-foretold return of the Jews to Palestine, and many-sided Ritualism—these things seem to indicate in the most definite manner that our age now nears its close. When the heart and spirit of true religion has gone, men ever attempt to replace it by outward show. The revival of sacerdotalism, the assumptions of Rome, and her influence upon the Anglican Church (mourned by devout souls in the latter, perhaps, more intensely than by ourselves) all point to a consummation close at hand. Never was there a day when the forces of evil were allied as they are to-day, laughing to scorn the testimony of Christ's living Church. To take one example, the roots and ramifications of the blighting drink traffic have, through limited liability companies, invaded church memberships. Without entering into party politics, we may election victories on one side or the other. It is no less a sign of the times that never was spiritual tone in the Church of Jesus Christ so high as it is to-day; and to that blessed fact I bear testimony with fervent gladness. A really spiritual declaration of the kingdom of Jesus Christ and the purposes of God finds men eager to hear, learn, and obey. All the great spiritual movements of the last twenty years prove that God is giving the promised latter rain, that the end of the age draws nigh, and that the King himself will soon appear. To the old question, "Watchman, what of the night?" men of God upon the heights of vision reply, "The morning cometh and, with it, the night"; but, thank God, beyond the night that comes is the larger day, with its golden age for man.

Falmouth.—The Seamen's Institute of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society has closed a year of much blessing amongst the floating population. That many have been influenced for good is evidenced by their changed life, and the absence of the many drunken scenes which formerly took place. This mission has three comfortably furnished reading-rooms ashore, and a large Bethel, seating between six and seven hundred persons, and some 16,066 visits were made to the reading-rooms last year. The mission yawl has also carried the Gospel to 1316 ships at anchor, and 407 sailors' services were held. As a capital set-off against the public-house, Missionary-Pastor J. C. Badger has organised popular Saturday evening concerts.

The Pharisee at Prayer.

By Rev. JOHN McNEILL.

"He spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others."—Luke xviii. 9.

THE Pharisee is like the beacon lights planted round about our coasts—lights erected on the rocks and reefs to warn the mariner coming in from dangerous seas and stormy days and nights. They have just neared the harbour bar, and are close to home and friends. Says the beacon light: "Give me a wide berth. Roaring reefs and sunken rocks, and unsightly mud-banks are here; and the ribs of many a gallant bark are bleaching all around. Steer far from me." So to us speaks the Pharisee in this parable.

If at any time, publicly or privately, you would set out for this glad harbour, the presence of God and the worship of God, and would find Him to be to your storm-beaten, heavy laden, and tempest-tossed and afflicted soul a haven of rest, come to God in a way as far removed from that of the Pharisee as you can possibly imagine. The roaring reefs and sunken rocks and quicksands are here. Where the Pharisee foundered and went to pieces Christ built this beacon light, for we are steering on the same track and running against the same danger, and He wants to send us past, inside the harbour. The publican is the white light at the harbour's mouth that says to the mariner, "Steer straight for me. Home is here. All your best friends are waiting on the pier head." And every man or woman who wants to go to God to-day, or whenever he goes, let him be as much a copy of this heart-broken publican as he can possibly imagine; casting down every high thought, and bringing every thought and word into captivity to Jesus Christ and the Spirit of his grace, and the teaching of his holy Gospel.

I often think that the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican is a beautiful

DIRECTORY FOR WORSHIP.

We are paying a good deal of attention to-day to public worship. Some think our fathers were too bald in their ideas of public worship. I never had a great hankering after ornamentation in churches, but if I did go in for that sort of thing, I would have in every church and chapel, right over the pulpit, painted by the best artists who could be found, a picture of the Pharisee and the Publican; so that when people entered they might know how to do it, and HOW NOT TO DO IT.

I would also have a special picture at the far end of the church for the benefit of the preacher and the choir. For we have here a special danger to those who like to go to church; who have been brought up that way, just as these Pharisees were. Many a decent, respectable church-goer is pounded to pieces on the reef where the Pharisee went down—pride, self-righteousness, mere empty form; no soul, no sense of sin or of the pardoning love of God.

This man, then, went up into the Temple to pray. Let us look at him, that we may see how not to do it. "He stood and prayed thus with himself." I do not want to parade my knowledge of the Greek; but every young divinity student has at least one Greek exercise to do, and this parable happened to be mine, so that it was impressed on me. The Greek here is very striking. Actually, the praying verb, with the preposition that is always used in the Bible for carrying the prayer across from the person praying to the deity supplicated and worshipped, whether false or true—I say the Greek words mean that the prayer was carried across from the Pharisee himself, praying to himself supplicated, and thanked, and worshipped. It was as though while his lip said "God" his heart said "himself." Your Bible or prayer-book or hymn-book can keep your tongue right, but no amount of tongue or prayer-book will keep your heart right.

The hert's aye the pairt aye
That maks us richt or wrang, in worship as in everything else. You may be saying, or chanting, or singing "God," while down in your peddling little soul you are saying "Self." This man made himself the objective to himself. Some of us stand up and sing with beautiful music, as if we meant it—

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.

Hide yourself! When did some of us ever hide ourselves? Let me strut myself, let me flaunt and swagger, especially in God's house on Sunday! It is the biggest day with many for being on view and on parade.

We never should have known what the Pharisee's prayer was if Christ had not told us. If you had been there you would have seen a man outwardly as devout-looking as yourself—and you are making no small show in the flesh at this moment. Besides, he was in the right place—the Temple. As you came nearer, in addition to his devout attitude, you would have heard the word "God" escape his lips. He would have said it a little louder probably the nearer you came. And you would have gone away saying there was not a devouter man in all the city; and you would have been utterly wrong. For the Lord passed by and beheld his devotions. He seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord's eyes go with lightning glance in upon the heart. I believe one day the Lord was passing by and He saw this man, and, as the Scripture said, He was "provoked to anger." Once for all He has turned this kind of man and this kind of worship inside out; He has exposed for ever the ghastly show of mere well-dressed, well-spoken, well-attitudinised formality in religion, and it never needs to be done again. You might have known that somewhere before the Bible finished would meet its judgment day; and there it is. When I use the word "church" I include chapel as well. For all our denominations can produce this kind of thing. How quietly Christ did it; and how terribly He did it! I may be declamatory and noisy about it, but He did it so quietly. The universal judgment of Christendom ever since has been that that man was held up to everlasting contempt. There he hangs gibbeted; he met his judgment-day before the time. God pity you and me if the same handling should come to us when the Lord Jesus Christ on the eternal throne reckons up our religious profession of a lifetime, our prayers, our churchgoing, our giving—all that belongs to our public worship, and especially that out of which we get our good name and a certain standing among our fellows. God pity some of us when in that great day of his coming He shall take our religious life and ring it on the counter, and bring out, even in our own dull ears, the leaden sound

THIS CHURCH PARADE

THAT MARKS THE COUNTERFEIT.

It never was true. We never built on the rock; we only built on the sand. It was hard-beaten sand, I grant you, but it was not rock, and the first rush of the judgment waters shall reveal to you too late your terrible mistake.

"I thank thee I am not as other men are." Jesus passed by, or we never would have known it. It never entered the Pharisee's mind that he should look different in God's sight. Brightest lights cause blackest shadows. Whatever light there was in the Old Testament, with its shadow—and it was a heavy shadow—how much blacker and darker is the condition of a man who ought to live in the light of the Gospel, but is in the shadow of self-righteousness and simulated worship. The New Testament Pharisee knows as well as the publican that he has no right to say, "I thank thee I am not as other men." When he ought to say "God be merciful to me a sinner," he remains as proud and unhumbled as ever.

"Extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican"—who had come into the Temple and drawn up alongside. In a world like this, and in a city like London, it is easy to knock down the extortioner, the unjust, the adulterer, the outcast, and then get up on the top of that pile and ask people to look at you. But it is infinitely dangerous; the burning eyes of God are upon you. I would not occupy your position five minutes for ten thousand worlds. Just as tall trees and chimneys provoke the lightning, this worshipper, with his high look, and it fell. There he is, a blasted oak on the heath, shattered by the lightning of Christ's indignation and exposure. God save us from it.

PROVOKED THE LIGHTNING OF GOD,

"I am not as other men are." Ah, that is cheap to say. "There is Mrs. So-and-So now; you never found me doing what she does." Well, what are you? It is easy to say you are not this and that; and you would not go somewhere else. In heaven's name, What are you, positively? It is one of the awful sarcasms of this parable that Jesus allows this man to let himself out on the negative side, large and broad; but then, when he comes to the positive side and with the trumpet to his lips blows a loud, long blast to his own praise and glory, all that comes out of it is this: "I fast twice a week; I give tithes of all I can catch."

WHAT A MORAL MONSTER!

This is the kind of man who is great in the little things, and little in the great things. He is great on postures, and vestures, and genuflexions, and bowings to the east, and the like. But he is miserably, ludicrously, heart-breakingly deficient on the great things—mercy, faith, a sense of sin, a broken heart, love to God, a kindly, forgiving spirit to his brother man. Never a word about sin, guilt, the need of pardon. God and he were equals!

Is it not the same sort of thing with us too often? Every Sunday a lot of superfine people go to church or chapel to meet a superfine God. Then they go away home and soundly rate their servants because the dinner is ten minutes too late! "Here is what I am," says the Pharisee. "I fast twice in the week." The Lord did not demand that.

"I give tithes of all I possess." I believe it is one of the divinely skilful points in the parable that the Lord makes this man mention giving last, not because it was least, but because it was biggest. He is a common sort of creature, the man who, in our own day, shakes the big purse in your face and says, "Preacher, do you hear that? Your stipend is there. Be discreet." He virtually wants to make a bargain: especially if it be an Evangelical preacher, whether in church or chapel. This big, strutting, flaunting, purse-proud Pharisee says in effect, "If you preach to me and my family, who occupy the chief seats in your synagogue, the humbling things that undoubtedly are in your Book—that we are all sinners, that there is no difference, that I am just the same as my coachman or my cook in God's sight, I will not have it. I will clear out of your church, and I will take my big purse with me; then where will you be? Let us have some modus vivendi." Oh! I have seen it. In that purse-proud Pharisee you see the men who killed Christ, and the very temper in which they killed Him.

"I give tithes of all that I can get." This is the man who heads the subscription list. Perhaps he is a publican or a brewer or a wine merchant, a licensed grocer or a distiller. Of course, he must have a church connection.

IT IS FASHIONABLE AND REPUTABLE.

He knows quite well that he is working his business at the expense of men's tears and blood and agony, and shame. But he seeks to gloss over the abominations of his business by giving ostentatiously £50,000 to endow a cathedral; or he gives money in certain directions, like Jabez Balfour (I want to be fair all round), hoping that the greatness of his gifts will glamour the eyes of Christ's servants, and they will ask no awkward questions as to how he came by the money which he has so ostentatiously parted with. To all such givers, giving in such a spirit, the Church of Christ in an earlier day, as represented by the Apostles (though the Church was then in a state of naked, ragged bankruptcy), would have thundered out: "Thy money perish with thee, because thou daredst to think that a place in the Church of Christ can be purchased with dirty, filthy lucre."

"I give tithes of all I possess." He kept this to the last, for it was the biggest in his estimation. As if he would muzzle the preacher and ask: "Where will you be if I withdraw myself and my purse?" We will be where we always were. Where will you be? We will be built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone. If I speak to-day to any purse-proud Pharisee, man or woman, or both, I ask: Where will you be if you leave some faithful, earnest evangelical preacher and go to some other man, perhaps, who will fool you to the top of your bent, and seal up your eyes in blindness till you stumble into hell? Where will you be when your ears cease to be assailed by the only preaching that ever will humble you and save your proud rebellious soul? I know that we evangelical preachers, as we would say in Scotland, are "ill to thole." The doctrines of grace must grate on your proud heart, and you do not like them. Hang on to them all the same. It may be like tearing the flesh from the bones. But hang on to them. The pride will be taken out of you, and you will be brought to sit at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in your right mind.

PHARISEES CAN BE SAVED.

The Apostle Paul started on that line, and he was a bitter one. I would not like to have met him, for he was exceeding mad, and was resolved to blot out what he considered to be damnable heresy. He met Jesus one day, and, big and tall as he was, he found he was nothing when he ran a tilt against Jesus. Christ laid him low. May He lay us low, and trample in the dust all our pride. May we go out of these doors unhorsed, baffled, beaten, all the false strength taken out of us; and every soul saying, because in our deepest heart we feel it as never before, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

Do we begin to understand that along the line of our own goodness and what we are, and do, and what we restrain ourselves from, there is no God, no peace, and no salvation? I charge you, cease from pride and be washed in the blood of the Lamb.

To my Larger Congregation.

Bay City, January 22, 1898.

THROUGH the kindness of the Editor I am able to address you from this distant city, on the shores of Lake Michigan, and thank you for your prayerful sympathy.

We had a marvellously quick and good passage, landing in New York last Wednesday morning. Mr. W. R. Moody kindly met me, and is accompanying me to make arrangements for the tour. I dined with Mr. D. L. Moody, who is in vigorous health, and conducting a very successful mission in Jersey City. It was very delightful to be with him for a little, and hear of his work, and Northfield, and see Mrs. Moody.

Thence I went to Albany, where God most graciously opened the door of utterance. There were marvellous crowds at the meetings, much warm-hearted brotherhood from the great band of some fifty to sixty ministers, and the evident tokens that God was owning his Word.

In this city also we are having similar scenes. On this snowy Saturday night, the one busy night of the week, we have had a great audience of ministers and people, who seemed to have received the words on consecration and Divine indwelling into their heart of hearts.

Do pray for me in this tour to Detroit, Chicago, Kansas, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Washington, Cleveland, Brooklyn, that everywhere the Word of God may run and have free course, and that I may return to my beloved congregation, if it be the Lord's will, on the first Sunday in March.

Thoughts for Parents.

Gal. v. 22.

3—PEACE.

Follow peace with all men.—Heb. xii. 14.

PARENTS who are themselves restless and inharmonious cannot make an atmosphere of peace, and they are responsible to a great extent for the serenity of the home.

Unless you keep your own childhood in mind, it is difficult to realise how a sharp tone will rankle.

Let your commands be given in quiet, deliberate tones. Self-rule is the secret of all rule.

The atmosphere of the home is all-important to child-growth, and the ungenial chills of criticism and fault-finding are as injurious to his development as the "explosive storm-bursts of passion."

The secret of the Spirit of Peace is given to those who do the will of Christ, whose life is hidden with God. It is not very common, even among Christians. Cultivate, therefore, if only for the sake of your children, that serene spirit which stays itself upon God. FRANCES S. HALLOWES.

"Homes and Hospitals for the Benefit of Gentlewomen" is a pamphlet which for several years past has been growing in size as it has been brought up to date in corrected issues. We welcome the fifth edition, which we shall value as a work of reference, and cordially commend to philanthropists and those who require information regarding residential and convalescent homes and allied institutions, conducted on charitable or self-supporting lines. Letters to the Editor.

REACHING THE YOUNG.

DEAR SIR,—Through your valuable paper, I should like to suggest to some Christians who may not have thought of it an easy way of doing good.

Although Bible classes and Sunday-schools abound, there are still many children in our respectable suburban roads who do not go to any, and who would be glad of an invitation from a neighbour to come in for an hour on Sunday afternoon to hear of the Lord Jesus. A large house, large means, and large talents are not needful. A heart for the Master, love for the little ones, and a sitting-room in which to gather them, is all.

Some do thus open their houses; but could not many more do it, avoiding the enrolment of those who already attend Bible teaching elsewhere, and thereby be the means, with God's blessing, of winning "many souls"?—Yours truly,

E. E. F.

HOME DUTIES AND CHURCH CALLS.

DEAR SIR,—You recently referred to a very sad side of life—when the exigency of business requires the husbands and fathers to leave home so early in the morning and return so late in the evening that they rarely see their children except on Sundays. Everyone will, I am sure, agree with your remarks, for in the maintenance of home-life, to a great extent, the future of the nation depends.

But there is another aspect also, and that is when fathers and mothers deliberately neglect home and children—forsooth, for church or other Christian work in connection with the numerous and complex organisations which are in all large centres. Men and women allow themselves to become so absorbed as to forget their home duties, and leave their poor children uncared for, to the charge of domestics, or, more cruel still, to the elder daughter of, perhaps, fourteen or fifteen years of age.

As I sit in my pew at church I see fathers and mothers, or one of them only, sitting alone, when they ought to be surrounded by big sons and daughters. I can remember when their pews were filled with children; but the parents were so mixed up with conventions, missions, etc., that they had no time for their children; they never sought to make them their companions and friends, and now the daughters rarely come to church, and the boys are scattered—and there are sad and yearning hearts.

But the neglect of home duties lies equally at the door of those where there are no children. Every man and woman, except those living alone in lodgings, have responsibilities to those with whom they reside. The business man returns weary and tired after the cares of the day, to find his wife absent at a sewing-meeting; or the fault lies with the husband, who will go to some Y.M.C.A. or church meeting, and—oh, the meanness of it—leave his wife to bear the home cares alone. It would be well if we all learned that "a man's best things lie nearest him, lie close about his feet."—I enclose my card, and am, yours faithfully, GALATIANS VI. 2.

Free Church Councils.

A WORK of grace is proceeding at Saltburn-by-the-Sea, where Rev. R. Mackay, of London, commenced a special mission on Sunday week. The effort was preceded by a week of prayer, and a spirit of great earnestness pervaded the meetings. From the very beginning anxious souls were met with, and by Saturday night many were rejoicing in Jesus. Last Lord's Day evening the scene was most remarkable, three rooms of considerable size being filled with two classes of people—those who were claiming the blessing that the preacher referred to, and those who were seeking Christ. Many found Him, to the joy of their hearts. The services will be continued by Mr. Crossley, of Redcar. All the Free Church ministers are working cordially and earnestly together.

Rev. John Matthews retires from the secretariat of the Metropolitan Federation of Free Churches at the end of this month.

Mr. Alderman Spicer, treasurer of the National Council of Free Churches, proposes to convene a conference of local secretaries and others at Bristol, in connection with the forthcoming meetings of the Council there.

The Ancient Merchants' Lecture.—For some time there has been a talk of removing this lecture from the Memorial Hall to some central place in the City, and by so doing better realising the intention of the original founders. A very handsome offer from the present minister and deacons of the Dutch Church, meeting since 1550 in Austin Friars, has been made, and at the annual assembly of the subscribers and lecturers just held the offer has been accepted.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS

February 20.

THE TWELVE SENT FORTH.—Matt. x. 2-15.

GOLDEN TEXT:—"Freely ye have received, freely give."—Matt. x. 8.

THE CHOSEN TWELVE (2).

Apostle: One sent forth. Twelve, corresponding to the twelve tribes of Israel.

Peter and Andrew were brothers. So were James and John. These four were fishermen. Bartholomew; Nathanael (John i. 45); Lebbæus; Jude (the son of James). Canaanite: "Zealot" band of patriots in revolt against the Roman power. Judas was the only disciple who was not a Galilean.

VARIETY OF CHARACTER.

The Apostles very varied. From which we might learn:—

1. Christianity does not seek one uniform type of man.

2. Room for the exercise of every faculty in the kingdom of heaven.

3. We all have our representative among the Apostles—Peter, bold and impulsive; Andrew, shrewd and cautious; John, loving and meditative; James, severely practical; Thomas, the man who must see for himself; Judas, the business economist, etc.

SENT OUT TWO BY TWO (Mark vi.).

Arranged in couples, so that one would form the complement of the other. "Two are better than one." Where the one failed to reach hearers the other might succeed. They could encourage each other. Three might be a hindrance; there would have been room for minority and majority. Two are more than twice one.

FIRST FIELD OF WORK (5, 6).

Not to the Gentiles, else the prejudice of the Jews would be at once aroused and the work stopped. So the Samaritan's time was not ripe to offer Gospel to them.

Israel—(1) Because, by their training they ought to form good soil for the seed.

(2) Because this course would commend itself to the disciples.

Lessons.—We must begin our work at home, children carrying home hymns and teaching.

Compare the sinner to the lost sheep.

THEIR MESSAGE (7).

John's message. Now the King had come: the principles of truth and mercy and right enforced by conduct of disciples. (8) Heal sick, etc. This argument cannot be gainsayed; through Christ has come the large sympathy, the aid to the suffering to-day, hospitals and dispensaries, district visiting, all the result of Christ's spirit and supported by his followers.

They had been taught freely, they must teach freely.

Illustration.—The stagnant pool which gives nothing, but breeds disease; the running stream that gives as freely as it receives and is all the healthier for so doing.

THEIR METHOD OF WORK.

Reliance upon God. They were not to trouble about money, food, or clothes (9-10). Scrip—small bag or satchel. Shoes—highly coloured, worn for show, sandals worn for use (Mark).

Go first to those most likely to receive (worthy) (11, 12). These would be friends. The benediction of a good man's presence. It is "a liberal education" to be with some men. Such blessing could only come to those who thought highly of the disciples and their message (13).

Denunciation of the cities that did not receive. They were not to crawl out like whipped dogs. Their treasure had been rejected, and as those who valued it they should be indignant.

Illustration.—Compare with Sodom (Gen. xiii. 13; xviii. 20-32). The judgment day came for these people. Destruction of Jerusalem. It will come o all who reject God's offer of love.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, February 13.

"A man under authority, having soldiers under me."—Matt. viii. 9.

HERE was a faith that set Christ marvelling. First, because it was found in such an unlikely place. Secondly, because of its greatness: "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel."

This Roman officer applied to our Lord principles with which he was cognisant through his connection with the army. He knew that he had no power over other men in his individual capacity, or apart from his organic connection with the machinery of government. If he said to one man Come, to another Go, to his servant Do this, and his command was immediately obeyed, it was all due to his obedience, in his turn, to the authority which was over himself. So long as he obeyed that authority, he represented it, and it passed through him to compel obedience to his commands. This is the principle he applied to our Lord.

He recognised that Jesus of Nazareth was always acting under the authority of his Heavenly Father, and he inferred, therefore, that He could wield Divine power, as himself could Roman power. As the authority of the Cæsars flowed through his own yielded life, so the authority of God over diseases, demons, and all else would flow through Christ's.

What a profound principle is here! Learn to obey, and you shall rule. All things serve the man who serves Jesus Christ. Absolute consecration to God, in the sense in which a soldier is surrendered to his country, is the condition of a life of power, which shall repel with its irresistible Go; attract with its indisputable Come; and constrain obedience with its winsome Do this or that.

MONDAY, February 14.

"Thy faith hath made thee whole."—Matt. ix. 22.

Wholeness and holiness are identical, the one of the body, the other of the soul. They are closely related to the word Health, and all may be procured through faith. Holiness, wholeness of heart, health, and all by faith. There are three steps to this blessed state.

First, we must believe that it is attainable. For we never feel morally bound to do, or attempt, or choose, what we do not believe to be within our reach. But all questions on the matter are settled for evermore by such words as, "Be ye holy, for I am holy," and "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind."

Second, we must consecrate ourselves to God. In other words, by the help of the Holy Spirit, we must determine and resolve that we will be wholly the Lord's. We must come to a fixed resolve to break off from every known sin, to walk, so far as we know them, in the way of God's commandments, to be and do and suffer all his righteous will. This must be our deliberate resolve for all coming time.

Third, we must believe, absolutely, that God does accept the consecration we have made, and will do all that He has promised, by infilling us with his Holy Spirit, and working in us that which is pleasing in his sight. Nay, we must not only believe that He will do it, we must ask and claim that He should do it; we must exercise appropriating faith; we must, like this woman, establish the vital connection between us and Christ, though it be with a touch through which the healing virtue may pass into our natures. And lo, everything shall live where the pure river of his life shall come. Touch Christ now with the faith which draws his fulness into emaciated and fainting souls, and from this hour thou, too, shalt be whole.

TUESDAY, February 15.

"What I tell you in the darkness, speak ye in the light: and what ye hear in the ear, proclaim upon the housetops."—Matt. x. 27.

These striking words are applicable to us all. Our Lord is constantly taking us into the dark, that He may tell us things. Into the dark of the shadowed home, where bereavement has drawn down the blinds; into the dark of the lonely desolate life, where some infirmity closes us in from the light and stir of life; into the dark of some crushing sorrow and disappointment. Then He tells us his secrets, great and wonderful, eternal and infinite.

But such revelations always imply a corresponding responsibility—that speak ye in the light—that proclaim upon the housetops. We are not meant to linger always in the dark, or stay in the closet; presently we shall be summoned to take our place in the rush and storm of life, and when that moment comes, we are to speak and proclaim what we have learnt.

This gives a new meaning to suffering, the saddest element in which is often its apparent aimlessness. "How useless I am." "What am I doing for the betterment of men?" "Wherefore this waste of the precious spikenard of my soul." Such are the desperate laments of the sufferer. But God has a purpose in it all. He has withdrawn his child to the higher altitudes of the Alps of fellowship, that he may hear God speaking face to face, and bear the message down to his fellows at the mountain foot. Were the forty days wasted that Moses spent on the Mount, or the period spent at Horeb by Elijah, or the years spent in Arabia by Paul? There is a time to hear and a time to speak. Alas, that so many speak without hearing, and proclaim from housetops only their own empty words!

WEDNESDAY, February 16.

"Blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me."—Matt. xi. 6.

A friend has turned these words into another beatitude—The blessedness of the unoffended. The Baptist was tempted to take offence with Christ, first, because of his long delay in asserting Himself as the promised Messiah; and secondly, because of his apparent indifference to his own welfare.

Are there not such hours in our lives still? We say, If He really love us and have all power, why does He not deliver us from this difficult and irksome condition? Why does He not hurl these prison walls to the ground? Why does He not vindicate and bring me out to the light of life or joy.

But the Lord made no attempt to emancipate his servant, and He seems to be unmindful of our sore straits. All He did for John was to send him materials on which his faith should feed, and rise to a stronger, nobler growth. "Go back," He said in effect to John, "tell him what I can do; I have all power, I am the expected King, he is not mistaken; and if I do not come to his help in the way he expects, it is not through lack of power and willingness, but because of reasons of Divine policy and government, to which I must be true. Tell him to trust Me, though I do not deliver him. Assure him of the blessedness which must accrue to those who are not offended at my apparent neglect. I will explain all to him some day." Thus He speaks still. He does not apologise, nor explain. He only asks our trust; and promises blessedness to those who do not stumble at the mysteries of their lot.

THURSDAY, February 17.

"Have ye not read?...Have ye not read in the law?...If ye had known what this meaneth ..."—Matt. xii. 3, 5, 7.

The Pharisees were great sticklers for rites and ceremonies. Their religion consisted in little else than a perpetual round of outward observances. They believed that they were thus observing and maintaining the ancient Mosaic code. In their judgment, great human necessities, like hunger, must be subordinate to their minute exactions. Our Lord, on the other hand, claimed that the laws of God, as written in the nature of man, must have a priority over merely ceremonial enactments. And He showed that his contention was supported by those Scriptures on which they professed to rest their case.

There are two ways of studying Scripture. The one deals with its letter; the other compares Scripture with Scripture, and seeks to fathom its profound and eternal meaning. Do not read as the scribe, but as the Son of Man. Do not rest in the outward rite, but in the spiritual attitude of which the rite was intended to be the expression. Everywhere there is One greater than the Temple, greater than the rigorous exactions of the Jewish Sabbath, greater than the sacrifices and privations on which Pharisaism insisted.

All through the Old Testament you may detect the spirit of the New, the mercy in which God delights, the pitiful appreciation of the frailty and hunger of the nature He has made. The New Testament is in accord with the Old of Scripture and the older Testament of man's nature, as God made it at first.

FRIDAY, February 18.

"Unto you it is given to know."—Matt. xiii. 11.

In explanation of this statement our Lord reiterates his favourite saying: "Whosoever hath to him shall be given, and he shall have abundance." His disciples had already given heed to his words. On the thin soil of their hearts the precious seed had already begun to germinate: and as it throve it prepared the way for more and more to follow.

In the case of the crowds that pressed around him, however, there was no such earnest giving heed. They were content with the interest, the beauty, and grace of his nature-teaching, without a thought of its deeper aspects. Hearing, they did not understand; seeing, they did not perceive; face to face with Incarnate Truth, they thought only that He had a pleasant voice, and could play skilfully on the lyre of human speech.

First, Understand what you hear. Do not be content to have a merely intellectual appreciation of its force or beauty; but open your heart to meditate, and ponder it. It is only thus that truth really sticks its roots into the soul, and defies the birds of the air.

Second, Beware of the response of mere emotion. Too many of these receive the word with joy. Their expressions of interest and pleasure are loud and emphatic. Tears course down their cheeks. You think them the most hopeful members of the congregation. But it passes like the sunshine and cloud of an April day, that chase each other over the hills.

Third, Guard against cares and worldly success. The first of the poor, the second of the rich. Fourth, Practise what you hear. Remember these cautions, and it will be given you to know.

SATURDAY, February 19.

"Looking up to Heaven, He blessed, and brake, and gave."—Matt. xiv. 19.

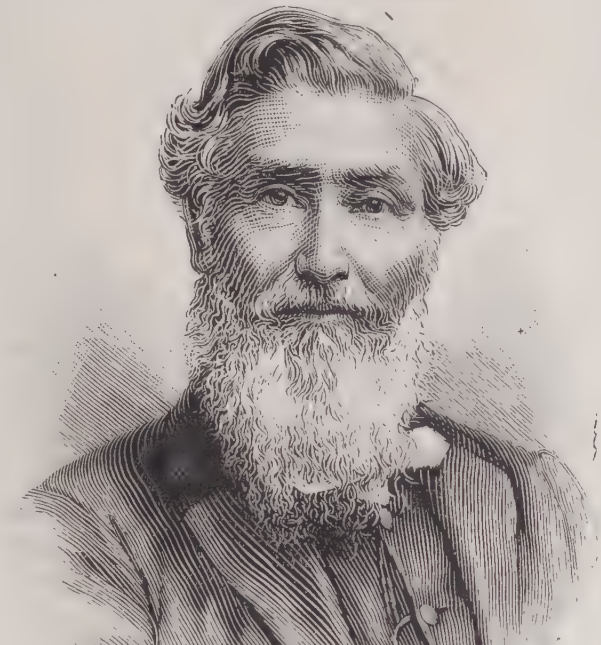
Stonewall Jackson was once asked what he meant when he used the expression, "Instant in prayer." "I will give you," he said, "my idea of it for illustration if you will allow it, and not think that I am setting myself up as a model for others." On being assured that there would be no misjudgment, he went on to say: "I have so fixed the habit in my own mind, that I never raise a glass of water to my lips without a moment's asking of God's blessing. I never seal a letter without putting a word of prayer under the seal. I never take a letter from the post without a brief sending of my thoughts heavenward." "And don't you sometimes forget this?" "I think I can say that I scarcely do; the habit has become almost fixed as breathing."

And if this was the habit of the servant, how much more of the Master. Frequently, in the Gospels, we are told of his heavenward look. It was as though He were always looking up for his Father's smile, direction, and benediction, so that He could be assured that what He was engaged in was in the line of his Father's purpose, and that He might gain the needed power to act and wisdom to speak.

It is only thus that we shall be able to meet the hunger of our times. Our slender stores will not avail for so great multitude. But if we bring them to Him, and place them in his hands, and look up to heaven for his enablement, we shall break and break again till all have sufficed and left. But this habit can only be maintained by those who go into the mountain of prolonged fellowship.

Pasteur F. Coillard,

PIONEER MISSIONARY ON THE ZAMBESI.



THE men who have opened up the African continent for the Gospel message have been characterised by noble faith as well as great energy. To run down the list is to name worthies who, by the common consent of Christian people, are in the succession of the heroes of Israel of old, who, "through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens."

On the roll of fame in work for God in Africa a high place must be given to a man who combines self-effacing humility with heroic boldness and strenuous endeavour. Some years ago we outlined his life-story, and from time to time we have described his work; but the time has now come to give some further account (with a new portrait) of his toils and achievements in opening some of the darkest places of the earth for the reception of Gospel light and salvation. Born in 1833, in Central France, FRANÇOIS COILLARD, on reaching manhood, offered his services to the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions, and in 1857 left for work in Basutoland. The Basutoland Mission has engaged the hearts of some of the most devoted missionaries of two generations; and joining a band who had learned to meet disappointment with unshaken faith in God, and had been enabled to achieve a large measure of success, M. Coillard began a career which, during the thirty-seven years over which it has extended has been ceaseless in activity and fruitful of great results.

Throughout his long period of service M. Coillard has been writing home graphic descriptions of the things he has seen and done, and many who have read these in the Journal des Missions Evangéliques have anticipated the day when the story, so full of incident and charm, so Christian in sentiment and experience, would be available in a volume befitting its substantial worth. This anticipation has now been realised, simultaneously in France and England, and it is a pleasure to draw attention to a book so thrilling in interest and so rich in information as ON THE THRESHOLD OF CENTRAL AFRICA: A Record of Twenty Years' Pioneering among the Barotsi of the Upper Zambesi (15s. Hodder & Stoughton).

M. Coillard had put in many years of hard work among the Basutos, when the native Christians proposed a mission to distant tribes. The Banyaï country, which had already been visited by an earnest catechist, was selected as a sphere of operations, and an expedition started in April, 1877. M. Coillard was accompanied by his beloved wife, née Christina Mackintosh, a niece, four catechists, with their families, and the needful drivers and leaders. It was a terrible journey: a treacherous Mashona chief almost succeeded in an attempt to destroy the whole caravan; and a few weeks after escaping from his power the party was seized by an armed band and carried off to Bulawayo, to be kept prisoners for nearly four months by Lobengula, who was enraged beyond bounds that they had entered his territories without permission! This savage chief, who had not then attained the world-wide notoriety which was his during the late Matabele war, refused to allow the missionaries to settle in the Banyaï country, or anywhere within his dominions. So the caravan proceeded to Shoshong, where the good chief Khama gave hospitality to the party.

The Barotsi country being then indicated as a needy and possible field, Khama, like a good Christian, volunteered to send ambassadors with or before the expedition, urging the king, since known as Lewanika, to receive the missionaries. When the company moved on, however, fresh troubles were encountered—delays incurred by native customs and etiquette, and by the impassable nature of the roads during the rainy season; so it was found necessary to return to Basutoland. M. and Mme. Coillard having taken what, in the terms of convention, they called a "holiday"—or rather undertaken a visit to Europe for the collection of the needful funds—a second expedition was organised. It left for Barotsiland at the beginning of 1884, and July found it at Leshoma, on the right bank of the Zambesi. The country had been rent with revolution, but M. Coillard started for the capital by canoe; and, the ceremonies of introduction being got through, the expedition crossed the mighty river in August of 1885.

The party might well be encouraged in their advance, in view of the welcome previously given to M. Coillard at the capital:—

> You are welcome, servants of God," said Mathaha (the Gambella or chief minister); "you bring us rain and slumber, peace and abundance. It is in the name of the whole nation that we receive you. We have waited long years for you, and thought you had forsaken us; and it is with joy that we see your faces, and hear you say that you are now come, not merely to visit us, but to live among us, with your families. You will soon discover that we have yellow hearts, and that our country is a country of blood. The nation is weary; it sighs for peace, it languishes. Here it is; we place it before you; save it. You see the king is only a child; be his father, uphold him with your counsels. We do not ask for presents, we do not seek for your goods, if you have any. What we ask for is your teaching; what we wish for is peace!

With this eloquent welcome and appeal the mission entered the country, and occupied stations which increased in number and grew in influence as fresh workers from France and Switzerland were added to the staff. If the chiefs professed honesty and generosity, the people showed themselves diligent thieves. If the Europeans were devoted, and in several cases (including Mme. Coillard) were called upon to lay down their lives for God's work in Zambesia, the native helpers were also men of faith, as some of the hundreds of incidents narrated in these pages beautifully show.

M. Coillard and party laboured on year after year, preaching and teaching, and founding mission stations, which were schools as well as evangelistic centres. From the rudest conceptions of God and duty, the people were assisted to realise the truth as it is in Jesus, and as it affects life and godliness; and industrial teaching ranked with the more abstract and juvenile arts taught in the mission schools. Young and old learned hymns, and in due course God gave the increase. Yet there were dark clouds as well as sunshine, and when an epidemic of the fearful ulcers that resist all medical treatment swept off the flower of one of the schools, the people asked what good the Book and its teaching had done them; and, attributing prevalent evils to the presence of the missionaries, they asked for their summary expulsion. The poor folk put on their reasoning caps; and with poor caps there was poor reasoning. The missionary, they said, had promised eternal life on condition of their receiving the Gospel; and yet death was all abroad! He had taught men that the world (same word as "country") belonged to God, which was, obviously, a challenge of their claim that it belonged to the Barotsi! M. Coillard had spoken of coming judgment—could he really be their friend?

Poor missionary! Of course, he explained, and God took care of him. He had many troubles. In 1889, to his momentary satisfaction, he received a quantity of baggage, including cases from London, Paris, the Cape, and Basutoland, which had accumulated at Mangwato, and had been on his track for years. Some had been packed five and seven years previously!

> And now to unpack them! It is the delight of sailors, and also that of missionaries in foreign countries, one of the keenest they can have. But no pleasure here is without alloy, and heart-breaks are often a discipline for the child of God, all the more necessary as they are harder to endure. Here is a case we have been expecting for two years. We cannot open it without a flutter. But what a spectacle! The rain and the termites have got into it, and it gives out a choking smell. It is a mere heap of red earth turned into mud. In turning it over we find in it rags of stuff, deplorable samples of dresses and garments which exist no longer, reels of cotton, haberdashery, seeds in every stage of decomposition; books, too, whose leaves, gnawed into illegibility, do not even offer a clue to the names of the friends who have sent them.

The spirit of the entire book is well sampled by the remark of M. Coillard, when he had opened case after case with the same disappointing result: "Let us forget them, if possible. They were not necessaries, since our kind Father withholds them from us." M. Coillard returned to Europe in broken health about two years ago, and has since then been addressing meetings and stirring up interest in his own country, as well as renewing old friendships in Great Britain. He still lives for Africa and its evangelisation; and as both Basutoland and the Zambesi country are under British rule, M. Coillard should enlist much sympathy in his work.

Our readers will gather that the book describing these pioneer operations touches many interests—scientific as well as religious—and gives the results of observation in little trodden fields, as well as an account of Christian effort carried on with singular devotion and large-heartedness, and in face of mighty obstacles. We strongly commend this book to our readers. The task of translation from the French has been ably executed by Catherine Winkworth Mackintosh, who has edited the work with excellent judgment. The volume opens with portraits of the author and his lamented wife, and contains upwards of forty full-page illustrations from photographs. The book describes the career of a man of deep spirituality of mind; it has many a good story illustrative of Christian life and work; and its missionary information is of great value and importance.

Mr. McNeill's London Mission.

By LADY HOPE.

SIX THOUSAND! three thousand! two thousand eager, upturned faces! This has been the spectacle that we have witnessed daily, the numbers only depending on the size of the building opened.

"Are you not tired of coming so often?" inquired one hearer of another at the close of the third service on the same day.

"Tired!" was the answer; "nothing ever refreshed me so much." "It is as reviving as a breeze from the sea," said another. "No one can ever accuse the speaker of dulness," said a third.

And it is quite true. The life and brightness, the passionate earnestness, driven home with sharp sword points of sparkling wit, make the message intensely real. It takes possession of the hearts of these vast multitudes of hearers, and brings them back again and again with a magnetic attraction to learn still further lessons from the lips of the messenger.

In a very forcible comment on Rev. xxi. 17, Mr. McNeill explained the ideal requirements of a true and successful preacher. "The Spirit and the bride say, Come." He said, "The Divine and the human are united here. The Spirit speaks through the bride. A preacher must have these two qualifications for his work—he must be filled with the Holy Ghost, and, at the same time, intensely human. He must be one with his hearers—not above them, not distant from them, but literally put himself in their place, and speak as one of themselves." He showed that this was the method of our Divine Saviour and Master, who made Himself one with us, and by his teaching and life-work on earth achieved such mighty results—sowing the seed which, after his death and resurrection, were reaped in a rich harvest by the Apostles, as they walked in his steps—men anointed with the Holy Ghost.

The subjects of these sermons and addresses have all been striking ones, amongst them, "David in the Cave of Adullam" as a type of Christ (1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2), "Thomas and his Doubts," with their happy ending in a joyful assurance of faith and clearest testimony. The "Axe-head," with all its teachings—"kaleidoscopic views," as the preacher called them. "The Blind Man," "Christ in the Boat," "The Salvation of the Shipwrecked Crew" (Acts xxvii.), "David and Goliath."

During the afternoons, at St. James's Hall and Exeter Hall, a series of addresses were given on A. xxiii. These were specially noted, perhaps, their strong simplicity and homely, though very pathetic and powerful, illustrations.

One remarkable fact about all these sermons and addresses has been their suitability for, and usefulness to, both saint and sinner; experienced Christians delight in them, "cannot bear to miss one of them"; whilst those who have been hitherto absolutely indifferent now crowd into the seats, and listen breathlessly to every word, with a look of living interest on their faces.

May God graciously continue to prosper and bless the mission.

THE THIRD WEEK.

[By our own Reporter.]

There were many natural apprehensions as to whether a course of afternoon meetings in the west central part of the City would prove as successful as the noon assemblies in the City had been. St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, and especially Exeter Hall, in the Strand, "take a lot of filling," as Mr. McNeill would say, at that hour, for a purely Gospel service. For, as we have already remarked, the evangelist "sticks to his last," whatever kind of audience He may have. He remarked one day that some other preachers might deem it their duty to trench on the region of the world's politics, and he bade them God-speed in any effort to permeate that region with Christian principles. As for himself, though he had his private opinions, and always voted straight, he had but one thing to do—to preach the Gospel alike to rich and poor. And it is so. Mr. McNeill wanders over the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, for his texts; but as "all roads lead to Rome," so every theme in his hands centres around and inevitably leads up to Jesus Christ, as the Giver of pardon and peace to pharisee and prodigal, or as the Source of more abundant life and soul-satisfaction to the weak-kneed or timorous believer.

There were surmisings whether a community like that of London, saturated, as one might say, with weekly doses of preaching, would have an appetite for it strong enough to bring them out on consecutive weekday afternoons. The first meeting in St. James's Hall, on Monday, settled the point in the hoped-for direction. The building was almost full in every part, the great bulk of the company, of course, being women. The same deep and large interest was maintained, if not increased, to the close of the week. The first two afternoon meetings in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday and Thursday, were the biggest of the series. The inclement weather of Friday produced wonderfully little effect in lessening the attendance.

Four of the afternoons were given up by Mr. McNeill to an exposition of the twenty-third Psalm, or, as the late Henry Ward Beecher called it,

THE NIGHTINGALE PSALM.

We recollect, six years ago, in Aberdeen, hearing Mr. McNeill expound this psalm in a single discourse. Since then the subject has grown and expanded so much in his thought and illustration of it that he now takes four addresses to cover the same ground. Very full addresses they are, and it is a most enjoyable, as well as a practically humbling, experience to listen to these four talks about the shepherd and the sheep; the green pastures and still waters of the restful, trustful life; the deliverance from fear in the night of trial, sorrow, and the shadow of death; the overflowing cup and the table of feasting spread in the very presence of the soul's enemies, and the eternal abiding in the prepared mansions. Perhaps the most pathetic bits in the whole of this exposition were those in which Mr. McNeill describes the patient endurance of his invalid mother, lying awake at night, and comforting herself by repeating the psalm; and the robust, simple faith of his father, to whose memory the evangelist pays many a warm and heartfelt tribute. These biographical and autobiographic touches often crop up, and the preacher one day asked that he might be excused for so many references of the sort. There was no man, he observed, with a merry twinkle in his eye, about whom he knew so much as himself, and that would explain the seeming egoisms.

On Thursday afternoon, in Exeter Hall, the unfolding of the shepherd psalm was interrupted so as to give an address on "The Axe-Head that Swam." This old-world story of the schools of the prophets yields in Mr. McNeill's treatment of it no end of Gospel and evangelical teaching. His favourite doctrine of reading Jesus Christ into every Old Testament type and narrative receives in this address some of its most ingenious applications; but there is no strain on one's expository credulity. All the points seem to flow naturally out of the incident, and one wonders they never occurred to him before. These afternoon meetings have been one of the most interesting features of the mission thus far, and a remarkable tribute to the drawing power of Mr. McNeill's way of presenting eternal truth.

THE EVENING MEETINGS

throughout the week have been at Westminster Chapel, a great building with a seating capacity of 2,500, and easy both to speak and to hear in. Unhappily it is hidden away from any main thoroughfare, and requires some exploration to find it out. As a consequence, there has been an absence of the floating element that goes to a place of preaching not because it cares much about it, but because it sees an open door and others flocking in. The chapel has never been quite filled during the week evenings, but night after night a splendid congregation has faced the preacher. And Mr. McNeill has given out of his best. The addresses on the rich young ruler, the four lepers in the deserted camp at Moab, the lame man at the beautiful gate of the temple, and, on the closing evening, the story of Cain and Abel, were of the most powerful and memorable kind. The last, in which Mr. McNeill talked of three beginnings—of family life, of home life, and of Sabbath life—contained much that was specially suitable and helpful to the humbler of his hearers, socially considered. His glowing words on the dignity and nobility of honest toil, and on the sacredness of Christian family life, will not soon be forgotten. The beautiful—one might say the inspired—words of Burns in describing the "Cottar's Saturday night" were eloquently repeated in order to enforce a plea for the upraising or the rehabilitation of the family altar in humble homes.

The three meetings of Sabbath last were fraught with the deepest interest. The first meeting for business-men, at Cannon-street Hotel, on Tuesday afternoon, was largely attended.

Rev. J. McNeill's London Mission.

This week, Tuesday to Friday, 1 to 2 p.m., Large Room, Cannon-street Hotel, E.C.; Monday to Friday, 7.30 p.m., Westminster Chapel, James-street, S.W.

No Meetings Next Week.

Charlie's Golden Text.

"COME, Charlie, and let me hear you repeat your lessons, before you start for the Sabbath-school," said Mrs. Morton to her eldest boy, a bright lad of twelve.

As he obeyed, his mother observed that he was not so happy-looking as usual. However, he repeated his catechism and verses correctly, read over the chapter containing the lesson carefully, and, last of all, repeated the Golden Text.

Charlie Morton was an earnest little fellow, and always tried to understand what he was taught. As Mrs Morton closed the books, she smiled, and said kindly, "You'll be sure to get good marks to-day again; you can repeat all your lessons correctly. Charlie's face still wore a puzzled expression, and at length he said, "I felt strange all the time I was learning our Golden Text, and could not help wishing that the Bible words were different. Last Sunday our text was 'God is love;' and to-day it is 'Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him.' Now I cannot bear to think of God as being like my father, for he neither pities nor loves us."

A look of pain overshadowed Mrs. Morton's face as she heard her dear boy speak thus. What he said was only too true, and for a minute or two she found it difficult to reply. "Charlie," she said, gently, "you must not forget that God made man in his own image. If he were to obey his will, he would be kind and loving and just, and our heavenly Father wishes all his children to become like Himself. Then in another part of God's Word we read, 'As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you.'" That verse satisfied Charlie, for he said sadly, "Oh, mother, I know God is holy, just, and good, but when I think of father it spoils the meaning of the Golden Text."

Charlie Morton had a good Sabbath-school teacher. Mr. Stewart's class was the best behaved in the whole school, the reason being that his boys loved him and always tried to please him. To-day, as he spoke tenderly and earnestly about the great love God had for us, our young friend listened with rapt attention. When at the close of the lesson it came to Charlie's turn to repeat the Golden Text, much to everyone's surprise he repeated it thus: "Like as a mother pitieth her children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him." Mr. Stewart looked at Charlie in astonishment, and said kindly: "I'm sorry you've repeated your text wrong to-day. It's the first time I've had to put a bad mark against your name." "Please, sir, I'm very sorry, too," replied Charlie, feelingly; "but after what you've told us about God I cannot say the right words. My father is not like Him at all, but my mother is."

The boys in the class pitied him, and James Lamson whispered in his teacher's ear that Charlie should get a good mark as usual. But, on making known James's suggestion, Charlie at once said, "No, don't do that, please, it isn't just to the others." The superintendent's bell rang, and soon all the scholars were dismissed.

During the week Mr. Stewart called at Charlie Morton's home. Happily Mr. Morton was earlier home that evening, and soon he and Mr. Stewart were engaged in a pleasant conversation. When at length the latter rose to go Charlie's father volunteered to accompany him part of the way home. Noticing an anxious look on Mrs. Morton's face, Mr. Stewart declined, saying, "Thank you for thinking of such a thing. But seeing you have to be at work so early in the morning, I think you should stay indoors in your cosy little parlour. It's pretty cold outside, and I'll soon tramp home."

Mr. Morton, however, would do as he said, and having put on his coat and his hat, off the two started. As they walked along Mr. Morton naturally began to speak about his eldest son, telling Mr. Stewart what trade he would like him to learn after leaving school. "He's a fine lad, and the best scholar in my class;" remarked Mr. Stewart. "I'm very, very sorry he'll lose the prize this session." "How's that? Has he been careless?" inquired Mr. Morton quickly. "I thought his mother always saw that Charlie had his lessons." "Yes, so she does, I believe; but the strange thing about it is that neither Charlie nor his mother are to blame," answered Mr. Stewart.

"Whose fault is it, then?" queried Mr. Morton, pleased to hear his boy spoken of in such a kindly manner. "What would you think were I to tell you that you have had something to do with Charlie losing his prize?" asked Mr. Stewart in a gentle tone. "Me, sir!" exclaimed Mr. Morton, standing still in surprise; you're talking nonsense now, sir. Why I pay little or no attention to the lad from one week's end to the other." "Well, then, you shall judge for yourself, after I've told you what took place in the class last Sabbath afternoon. Mr. Morton listened silently, and when Mr. Stewart had finished speaking cried out in remorseful tones. "I see it all now, sir! I've been kinder to the owner of the Black Boar than to my own precious wife and children. Will the Lord forgive me for the dishonour I've brought on his name, and this injury I've done to them?" Mr. Stewart gladly led him to Jesus the sinner's Friend.

From that night Mr. Morton became a changed man. Charlie no longer dreaded his home-coming, and soon began to love and trust him. The night previous to that on which the Sabbath-school prizes were to be distributed Mr. Morton had a long talk with Charlie and his mother. They then learned for the first time of the conversation that took place that night between Mr. Stewart and himself, and of the happy results that had followed.

Drawing Charlie affectionately towards him, Mr. Morton continued, "I'm very sorry you will lose your prize this session, but you've won your poor, erring father; and that's far better, is it not?"

Bible Searcher (No. 110).

After reading "Something New" give the chapter and verse where the following are found:—

1. The new heart (Eze. xxxvi.).
2. A new creature (2 Cor.).
3. The new covenant (testament) (Luke xx. to xxiii.).
4. The new name (Revelation).
5. New commandment (John).
6. The new song (Ps. xl. and Rev.).
7. The new home (Rev. xx. to xxii.).

Children under ten do any three, under thirteen any five.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (109).

1. To the tribe of Benjamin (1 Sam. ix. 21).
2. Because the people saw him prophesying, for the Spirit of the Lord came upon him (1 Sam. x. 10, 11).
3. (a) At Mizpeh (1 Sam. x. 17-25). (b) At Gilgal (1 Sam. xi. 15).
4. (a) He acted in opposition to God by offering the burnt offering himself, instead of waiting for Samuel. (b) Saul was not to continue being King, as God was to choose a man after his own heart (1 Sam xiii. 8-14).
5. Jonathan, with his armour-bearer, miraculously smited the Philistines' garrison. God sent an earthquake and a great terror among them (1 Sam. xiv. 1-15). By God's help David killed Goliath, the Philistine giant (1 Sam. xvii. 23-51).
6. Because Saul disobeyed God's command, and instead of destroying everything he spared Agag, the King of Amalek, and the best of the sheep and oxen (1 Sam. xv. 9, 22).
7. By playing upon his harp to Saul (Sam xvi. 23).
8. Because he was jealous of David and wanted to kill him (1 Sam xviii. 10, 11; xix. 9, 10).

Personal.

I am glad to see our lists get longer and longer as time goes on; and it must have been rather a trying ordeal to some of you lately to find your name among so many. I hope, therefore, you will think the plan adopted this week (which was suggested by a friend who thinks a great deal about you) is an improvement.

Many will have noticed the printer's error in Question 6 of last week's Searcher. It should have been "What made Samuel ask," etc. I warmly thank two little nieces for some blotters and cuffs; both will be much appreciated.

ANNIE LAWRENCE.—Your paper was not neat enough for a star, as you had scratched out a word, and the edge of your paper was ragged. EDIE HARRIS.—You will find the answer to your query in 1 Sam. xiii. 13. TREVOR J. MATTHEWS.—Did you send me your best writing last week? MARGERY SMART.—Yes, if you have received a Scripture Union card; but, if not, write for a form to the secretary of the Children's Special Service Mission, 13, Warwick-lane, London, E.C. NELLIE JELFS.—You seem to have understood Question C. Whenever you are in doubt ask someone to explain it to you. GORDON DUNCAN.—I am so sorry to hear of your illness. Thank you very much for sending the photo. HILDA BASSETT.—Unfortunately both your papers were incorrect.

God Claims Me.

ETERNAL God, so strong, so high, so holy,
Thy works and wonders all around I see;
The sun is thine, the moon, the stars unnumbered—
And wilt Thou claim a thing of earth like me?

Thy power brought forth and ranged the giant mountains,
It was Thy hand that hollowed out the sea
And rolled into its depths the mighty waters—
And I, so small and weak, dost Thou claim me?

Yes, though small and weak, I own I claim thee;
I made thy frame, gave breath, and all that's thine:
And when my work sin marred my Son redeemed thee,
To new-create and make thee doubly mine.

Then, Lord, with joy I own Thy right to claim me—
Henceforth, to love and serve Thee be my aim:
Help me to show in purpose, word, behaviour,
How wholly I have yielded to Thy claim.

Oxford Letter.

THE Church Union has arranged another series of lectures, following those given by the Bishop of Stepney last term. Canon Scott Holland takes them, three in number, on successive Fridays. The first was delivered last Friday, on "What do We Mean by Belief?" They promise to be helpful as well as popular.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has begun work in Oxford. There are two chapters, with a total of fifteen members. The chapters are in New College and Brasenose.

Rev. Arnold Foster, of L.M.S., was the speaker at the weekly meeting of the O.M.U. on Tuesday. He gave a very dark description of the physical, social, and moral condition of China. The god of wealth is the only object of worship; morality and religion are entirely divorced; moral truth does not exist as an influence upon the life. But Christianity is telling. "We expect," they say, "lies of Buddhists and Confucianists, but not of Christians." The war has opened the country to educational, medical, and scientific influences. Shall they be supplied by Christians or others?

Rev. J. Robertson, the new pastor of George-street Congregational Church, received a hearty welcome at the recognition service on Tuesday week. Dr. Murray presided, and Principal Fairbairn was among the speakers. Referring to the relation of pastor and people, the former said he knew nothing so tender as that relation. It needed most gentleness on the part of the pastor, and most sympathy on the part of the people, and just because the relation was so tender it was easily marred.

The local papers have for some time past printed correspondence in which residents in East Oxford ask for an Evangelical church to be built in the neighbourhood of Cowley St. John. Writing of the Ritualistic practices at this church a correspondent, last week, says that confirmation is little more than a preparation for the confessional, great pressure being brought upon the young people (by the curates who take the classes) to come to confession. This is almost made a condition of being confirmed.

An important meeting of the Free Church Council for the Oxford district was held in the Wesleyan Memorial Church on Tuesday, Mr. John Massie was in the chair. Rev. Enoch Salt was the principal speaker; and in the course of a very able address he remarked that, speaking generally, it might be said that the Free Churches of this country include one-half of the worshipping population. He asked what the state of the country would be if these Free Churches had never come into existence; and what would follow if on a given Sunday all the doors of all their places of worship were closed, and all their religious agencies ceased to be in operation?

In connection with what is called the "20th Century Crusade to Oxford," a series of public meetings were held from Saturday to Tuesday in the Town Hall. At the meeting on Sunday evening, Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., and Rev. the Hon. W. Talbot Rice were among the speakers. Canon Fleming spoke on Monday evening, and on Tuesday, besides a special meeting for women in the afternoon, a meeting was held in the evening to discuss "The Physical Advantages of Abstinence." Dr. W. Batten, senior physician to the Gloucester Infirmary, was the chief speaker. The meetings have given an impetus to the temperance work in the City.

"Yet Will I Not Forget Thee."—This sweet poem, from the pen of the late Miss Edith G. Cherry, has been set to music by M. R. L., composer of "The Other Side of the Gates of Pearl." Miss Cherry is well known as the author of "The Master's Touch," a poem which has comforted the hearts of many of God's children in times of trouble and anxiety, and as the writer of many other contributions to our columns. The gracious promise which is the subject of the sacred song before us—"Yet Will I Not Forget Thee"—has afforded encouragement and strength to many a weary soul; and in this appropriate setting it cannot fail to lead others to stay themselves upon the Living God, who is ever mindful of his own. The song (price 6d.) is arranged as a solo, with pianoforte accompaniment, and is published by Mr. W. Slade, Hastings, St. Leonards, and Bournemouth; it may also be had of our publishers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS AT HOME.

WE have just left Salt Lake City, on Jan. 10, after having spent a fortnight there, amongst the Mormonites—or as they prefer to be called, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints."

When I was in my teens I came into contact with them in this wise. A missionary of that persuasion came to my native town (Abergavenny, Mon.) and found a fruitful sphere of operation among the workers in iron, in that and the neighbouring county. He held meetings late at night in the village of Llanfoist, about two miles from our town. One evening a very intelligent Christian man made up his mind to go and hear the arguments and invitations put forward, and, if opportunity offered, to answer them. He and we looked forward to inflicting upon the Latter-day missionary a condign and humiliating defeat. We had, however, as the English so often do, under-estimated the power of our antagonist.

I do not remember the opening address of the Mormon missionary, nor the point at which our champion sprang into the arena. But I distinctly recall the fact that the preacher quoted from the Old Testament prophecies, insisted upon their literal fulfilment, and then audaciously but skilfully argued that they had been or were being fulfilled in the people whom he represented. Our champion had not studied prophecy. Probably he was only familiar with its spiritual interpretation, and was at sea when faced with the assertion of its literal fulfilment. When, therefore, this was uncompromisingly affirmed he was unprepared to meet it, even had it been confined to the Jews, to whom these prophecies in their literality belong. And when it was declared that the Latter-day Saints were the people, and the Great Salt Lake the locality to which they referred, our friend was silenced, though unconvinced; and we returned in the early hours of the morning, smaller in our own estimation, and mortified by having probably contributed considerably to the success of the Mormon propaganda.

Of our visit to Salt Lake City I feel a little delicacy in writing. We met here Mrs. Mountford, née von Finkelstein, to whose interesting and able lectures on Palestine we had listened in London. She had been speaking in several of the Mormon cities, and was well acquainted with the president and other leading men of the body, to whom she introduced us. We were kindly and courteously treated by them, both at Salt Lake City and at Provo, where I was invited to address the students of the Brigham Young Academy. I never decline such invitations if able to accept them, and I thanked Principal Cluff for giving me the opportunity of declaring what I believed to be the truth, in a free and candid, though not antagonistic way. From all whom we met we received not only courtesy but in many cases evidences of friendliness, to which we were happy to respond.

In anything I may say, therefore, I desire to express my hearty good-will to all of them as individuals, though my conviction of the delusion of the system is deepened by my visit to the region.

Those whom I asked what they considered the basis of their system all replied that it was the revelations they received. If the revelations were not true they were on a level with other sects; but the revelations proved them to be the one and only true Church. A body making such a claim as this must expect to be closely and critically scrutinised. When we examine the pretentious revelations of "Joseph Smith, the Great Latter-day Prophet, Seer, and Revelator," as he is officially designated in a pamphlet before me, we find the following extraordinary and anti-Scriptural claim:—

THE PRIESTHOOD CONFERRED.

We (Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery) still continued the work of translation, when, in the ensuing month, May, 1829, we, on a certain day, went into the woods to pray, and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins.

While we were thus employed, praying and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from Heaven descended in a cloud of light, and, having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us: saying unto us—"Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the Priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken from the earth until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."

The messenger who visited us on this occasion and conferred this Priesthood upon us said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the Melchisedec Priesthood, and who would in due season visit us and confer that, the higher Priesthood, upon us, which holds the keys of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and right to all the offices in the Church.

Two men go out into a wood, and come back claiming to have had conferred upon them, in the name of the Messiah, by John the Baptist, acting under the direction of Peter, James, and John, the priesthood of Aaron! But the contention of the Epistle to the Hebrews is that the law, as a covenant of works, and the Aaronic priesthood, under which the people of Israel received that covenant, have passed away—that we have a great High Priest who has passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God; that if He were on earth He would not be a priest, seeing that they are priests who offer gifts according to the law; that Jesus has an untransferable priesthood, and is able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him. Consequently the pretension that God has again set up the Aaronic priesthood, and therefore the law which the people received under that priesthood, is a subversion of the Gospel, and a resuscitation of that which has been done away in Christ. It is, therefore, untrue. The claim of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to this priesthood is a virtual invalidation of the Priesthood of Jesus the Son of God in heaven, and of the priesthood of believers on earth. And the assertion that Peter and James and John would confer upon them "the higher priesthood, which holds the keys of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost," is more futile and less plausible than the Popish claim to the same power by virtue of the figment of apostolical succession.

In one sentence the inspiring Spirit has drawn the portraiture and described the character of all such men: "Yea, of your own selves shall men arise, teaching perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." Whenever we find men manifesting this intention, we shall certainly find also the perverse teachings by which they obtain ascendancy over weaker wills.

(To be concluded.)

Evangelisation in Sicily.

MANY will remember the accounts given from time to time in The Christian of the unwearied and successful work of the late Signor Varnier, a converted R.C. priest, in his native island. February 2 is the anniversary of his death, which occurred last year.

His life-work is now carried on by his son and the son of his colleague (also with Christ), Signor Scuderi. These young evangelists are, so far as their scanty means allow, steadily following in the steps of their venerated leaders. They still find the people in the villages and towns of the island ready to receive the Gospel in its Scriptural simplicity, but these are for the most part poor, and therefore the evangelists look to us in this favoured land for help. As we know not how soon this open door may be closed by those who are using every effort to shut it, whatever is done to support these faithful young evangelists should be done at once.

If any of your readers are able and willing to assist, I shall be glad to receive communications for them.

In the Perene.

By Dr. HARRY GUINNESS.

ON October 12 we rode on to St. Ramon, where we had lunch and rest in the substantial house of a Chinaman who is in a good way of business in that little place; in the afternoon we continued our journey to La Merced, and on the following day we easily reached La Perene.

To give you any idea of this little journey would be difficult in a few lines. One actually passed from the icy coldness of Mt. Muggs, 17,500 feet of altitude, amidst the solemn and yet glad stillness and solitude of the Andes, through every intervening clime, till we reached the tropical heat, foliage and life, that made me feel I was once more on the Congo; the main difference here being the glorious hills and the absence of the severe forms of malaria which constitute our main barrier to the fuller possession of Central Africa.

The end of the journey was through a perfect paradise of beauty—rushing rocky streams, hills clothed with exquisite foliage, pathways lined with bananas and plantains, tropic palms, or tawny cactus and aloe. Flitting butterflies of gorgeous hue, and screaming parrots perched in the branches of shady trees, drooping with llanas and forest creepers, and sheltering ferns and curious pendent birds' nests in their outspread branches, constituted a maze of beauty and interest that kept us full of admiration and wonder the whole way.

Sometimes strange geologic strata, bent into curves of natural architecture, reminding one of some vast cathedral door, delighted the eye; and occasionally for a short distance the path plunged into the darkness of the mountain bosom, emerging into the light and warmth of day—somewhat as one creeps out of the old cavern at Castleton, with an intense delight to welcome the exquisite contrast of LIVING GREEN AND LOVING DAY.

The Perene is a lovely valley, through which a river of the same name runs. It is about 2000 feet above sea level, and is the home of an English colony, mainly engaged in cultivating coffee. I spent three days in the colony, and had an opportunity of meeting with several of the men privately, and conducting a service in the camp—the second held during the last five years! I found the men only too glad of an opportunity for Divine service. Among these Scotchmen, Irishmen, and Englishmen—some from universities, some from humbler walks of life, thrown together in a tropic land, attracted by the probable profits of coffee planting, almost all young men, and deprived of any religious advantages—the tendency to demoralisation and degeneration is naturally very strong. My heart went out in deep sympathy for these sons of many prayers and hopes, living in an earthly paradise, but one in which the voice of prayer and praise has so rarely been heard. They live scattered over the surrounding hill sides in properties of their own.

Some of the properties are very large, growing 20,000 to 250,000 coffee trees. Native labour is employed, but it is very difficult to obtain in sufficient quantity; and this fact, together with the difficulty of transport, constitutes the main hindrance to the extensive and rapid development of

THIS LOVELY TRACT OF LAND.

Transport is by mule or donkey as far as the Oroya railroad, and thus it costs as much to transport to Callao the coffee of the Perene as it takes to send home the Brazilian product to the English market.

The life is very lonely, but freedom is unbounded. Collars and white shirts are practically unknown; men sit down to eat with sleeves rolled up and no coats on, and have to keep in condition and be as hard as nails in order to ride in the saddle so frequently and such distances as are common in these parts. Many of them live two or three hours away from "camp," where the one shop is found where every need can be supplied, and where on Sunday they are sure to meet their fellow colonists who ride in to buy necessities for the week, to engage or pay off natives, and to join in a game of cricket before separating once more to their distant homes. It would be difficult for anyone who has not travelled to understand the conditions of life found here, and to realise the need of spiritual help. If some capable, earnest Christian could occasionally go down for a month and live for a day or two with each man, helping in the work during the day, and giving spiritual food to those who so sorely need it, he would be welcomed by almost every man in the valley.

The influence of the doctor and his wife (one of the few ladies in the region) has been most marked, and the comparative cessation of drinking customs is to be attributed to their advent, and also to the fact that the directors in London have recently sent out a present of some cricket things, which have proved more attractive than the bar of the camp store!

"THE DRUNKEN CHOLO."

The poor Cholo natives here are served a miserable rum, which they dearly love. We cannot too strongly deprecate the policy which engages in this horrid traffic, simply because others do the same, and difficulties might arise if the Cholos could not obtain drink at the camp. This "fire-water"—it is nothing more—renders the poor Cholo, or half-breed Indian, a drunken, pitiable object, and is the cause of much debauchery and crime.

There is a striking analogy between the Congo cataract region and this part of Peru. Hundreds and thousands of natives are on the road, engaged in transport work, driving their donkeys, mules, or horses, or coming on Sunday into the market towns, and, like the natives who are engaged in the Congo transport, these poor folk drink the white man's fire-water until it becomes a passion and one of the main vices of the country.

The name "drunken Cholo" is proverbial. On the path one day I had to sew up the broken scalp of a poor fellow who had been attacked by one of these infuriated natives and half murdered. How the drink fiend has cursed this poor earth of ours with his ubiquitous presence and his enslaving snare!

The Government is making strenuous efforts to open up a road between this country and the river Pichis, which by the Pachitea communicates with the great Ucayali, and thus with the Amazon and the Atlantic. Eventually the line of transport will undoubtedly be viâ the Amazon, and the opening up of this new road, now being made under the engineer Capello, will be a great help, not only to commerce, but also to missionary work, as it will open Eastern Peru, with its scattered Indian population, to the Gospel. I hope that we may eventually send someone to Iquitos for the Spanish and Indian work among the Indian tribes.

Poor folk, they are few and scattered, and not like Congo people at all—living in villages and reachable. Most of them are wild, and live here and there in the forest, without numerous communities, and with little or no guarantee of safety other than their own personal astuteness or valour. The great difficulty is linguistic. These scattered tribes all have different, though related, languages. Some of the tribes, like the Indians of North America, are dying out.

But what a world it will be "when Jesus comes"! and when the very creation, which now groans in travails and pains on account of man's sin, will be freed from the curse. "Then shall the earth bring forth her increase, and God, even our own God shall bless us."

The Missionary Pence Association.

We have received the millionth penny collected by our members on the systematic-giving principle, Every collector allocates his or her gift as the Lord directs, and we make no deduction from the same. We are supporting an L.M.S. artisan missionary in Matabeleland as our own missionary.

A million farthings fund, started last March, has so far brought in about 160,000 of these tiny coins. This sum (£166) is quite sufficient to build a Leper Asylum; and the C.M.S. will commence to build No. 1 at Mandla, Central Provinces, India. We hope to erect No. 2 in some other Mission field. We need not speak here of greater results than these in increased prayer and awakened interest.

Emigration of Children.

THE following brief article in the Stratford (Ontario) Herald, January 19, is a great cheer and encouragement to us, as it comes from the official representative of the new Dominion Government after a year spent in visiting the various homes for children emigrated from the overcrowded cities of the old land.

Mr. J. J. Kelso, in his report to the Legislature on child immigration, says that during the past twenty-five years nearly 30,000 boys and girls from the old country have been placed out in Ontario by philanthropic organisations. As only a small number of these children have been traced to penal institutions, the natural conclusion must be that the majority of them are doing well and have happily assimilated with the general population. Most of the agencies are reported as having been doing careful work on the whole.

This work among the children has borne strict examination, but the issue is that they are "happily assimilated" with the general population. Hence we rejoice, thanking God, and take courage. The outcome at the present time for our dear Canadian children is most cheering. Years ago the Lord separated from among our young people a Barnabas and Saul, for work among the heathen. One has been in London, and is returning to China after a furlough. Another, born of God in our Mission among the stone-diggers over thirty years ago, has to-day sent us from China a copy of the second edition of the New Testament (Revised Version), which he translated into the Roman Colloquial. The expense of printing is borne by the British and Foreign Bible Society. May we not exclaim, What hath God wrought by men full of faith and of the Holy Ghost? Hundreds of Chinese, true and active Christians, spreading the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, are the grand result to the glory of God.

To Central Brazil.

MR. G. R. WITTE, who hopes shortly to leave Lisbon for Brazil, writes that Dr. and Mrs. Graham hope to join the mission party as soon as their outfit and means for passage are provided. Mr. Witte says: "It seems urgently necessary for our friends to start from Liverpool not later than the middle of April, because a longer delay will seriously interfere with the possibility of ascending the river Tocantins into Goyaz. As the arrangements are now, I shall be compelled to wait a full month for their coming at Para. I do not altogether regret the enforced stay of a few weeks there, because it will doubtless enable me to make acquaintances, and to establish a line of communication. Mr. W. R. Ronald, 24, Mulgrave-road, Liverpool, will be glad to hear from friends willing to assist our enterprise."

Lepers at Purulia.

THE number of inmates at the close of the year was 514, of whom as many as 492 are classed as Christians and twenty-two as heathens. This total includes sixty-eight untainted children of leprous parents, who are kept separate from the lepers, although forming part of the large family now under the care of Rev. H. and Mrs. Uffman.

Mr. Thomas A. Bailey, who has paid a visit to the asylum on behalf of the Mission to Lepers, writes:—"Before coming I had heard and read much about the progress of the work amongst the lepers here, but my highest expectations have been exceeded. I have visited the asylum several times, and have been to each house in the grounds. This seems to me to be an ideal settlement for these poor outcasts, and I trust there may soon be a large number of such places in this great empire, where these lone and sad ones may realise to the full the warmth of Christian love and the welcome of Him who said, 'Come unto Me.' I witnessed the baptism of sixty-one of these poor people. Old women, with white hair and tottering steps, and bright-eyed children, together with those of every age between, reminded us of the universal character of the Kingdom of God."

There are some urgent needs in connection with this work at Purulia. (1) A debt of some £500 incurred by Mr. Uffman during the famine time when both numbers and cost of food were increased; (2) caretaker's house, £15; (3) completion of children's home, £10; (4) one new house for lepers, £35; (5) storehouse for rice, etc., £15; (6) a new church, £300, the present one being overcrowded.

Home Missions.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE honoured Mr. George Hatton, whose many years of devoted service endeared him to many, writes with regard to the closing and pulling down of five metropolitan gaols as marking a decided diminution of crime, which in a large measure is to be attributed to the Christian agencies now at work amongst the criminal classes. Twenty-one years ago with the present superintendent, Mr. Wheatley, Mr. Hatton had the joy of starting the prisoners' branch of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, and since the start of this prison work 320,000 free breakfasts have been provided to discharged prisoners — all of whom have heard the Gospel, have been plainly warned against sin, and have had, moreover, the offer of practical help in entering upon a new course. This sustained prison-gate work is the key to the success which has attended the operations of the mission; for, left to themselves, the men who emerge from gaol feel helpless against temptation, and hopeless of getting a fresh start in life.

A statement made by Mr. F. A. Bevan says:—"It is no easy task to provide 80,000 ex-prisoners with tools, clothing, or employment, as the Mission has done during the twenty years it has been engaged in prison work. For, as a rule, the inmates of prisons are not labouring men at all, not even unskilled labourers, but men who have lived lives of idleness, picking up a living the best way they could. While, however, we still deal with adult ex-prisoners very largely, we now prefer to show not the raw material, but rather in boys who are, or have been, inmates of our five Boys' Homes, and of many of them we are justly proud. For example:—

"N. W. was one of the first boys we received into our Boys' Homes. He had been charged at the Central Criminal Court with possessing counterfeit coin. For a long time after admission he gave considerable trouble. Patient treatment prevailed, however, and to-day (having risen step by step) he is in business for himself as an electrician. He is a married man, and has asked us if we would mind accepting a donation to our funds from him. We received him nearly ten years ago.

"V. W., admitted May, 1893, had been charged with stealing a mail cart, and sentenced to ten days' imprisonment; this youth was possibly one of the roughest and we have ever had. He constantly visits us, and is most grateful for our aid, laying especial emphasis upon the spiritual blessing he received while with us.

"Sometimes a man and his young son stand in the dock charged together with an offence, and we are asked by the judge to receive the boy into our home while the father is in prison. Quite recently we had such a case. The man is still undergoing his sentence, the boy is under our care, and the mother and her other children are receiving our assistance in the fearful struggle for existence which has come upon her by reason of the criminality of her husband. This case exemplifies three important sections of our work among the adult criminal, the juvenile offender, and the wives and children of prisoners.

"We have now in our Home for orphans or neglected children, at New Southgate, a little fellow aged about ten. His father (now in prison) swept the roads—occasionally, and drank—frequently. When he drank he was inclined to administer corporal chastisement to his wife, who always found it a difficult matter to provide for herself and her children, and at the same time meet the demands of her lord and master, whose desire for liquid refreshments was constant.

"Further, there is the work amongst convicts who, on their release from penal servitude, come to us for assistance. Since we commenced we have dealt with a total of about 7200, and our efforts have borne a harvest of good which it would be difficult to over-estimate. We have been the means of placing large numbers of these in work, and there are to-day in various parts of the country many men who have lived honest, hard-working lives for years, and are doing their best to LIVE DOWN THE PAST.

"This Mission extends its efforts in many directions. It is not engaged only in prison work, but it also relieves the deserving poor, it has a Home for fallen and destitute women, it provides summer holidays for poor children, and has a Convalescent Home for sickly men and women, as well as a Home and Orphanage for the children of prisoners and other destitute children.

"Even the most condensed statement of what the Mission is doing will show that so far-reaching a work needs liberal financial support—and, more than that, it needs constant financial support, because its efforts are constant and its work continuous. Any curtailment of the Mission's work would be disastrous, and we are most anxious to close our year's accounts without any outstanding liabilities." The director is Mr. W. Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.

Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel.

THAT Hebrew Christians should have a prime part in the evangelisation of Israel is maintained as a principle by the directors of most Jewish mission agencies. The work directed by Revs. D. Baron and C. A. Schönberger, with 114, Whitechapel-road, E., as a local centre, is an illustration of the principle and a proof of its wisdom and practicability.

On Friday last the annual gathering of friends of the work was held in two meetings, one in the afternoon in Brunswick Chapel, and another in the evening in the Mission House. At the former meeting several addresses were delivered; the latter was largely devoted to praise and prayer. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, as chairman in the afternoon, rejoiced that the year just closed had been the best in the experience of the work. Reading Luke i. 5-17, he called special attention to the work of the forerunner of Christ "to make ready a people prepared" for the Lord; and suggested that the work of the Church to-day—also of the Jewish Mission—is to do the same with the Second Advent in view.

Rev. D. Baron acknowledged the goodness of God in blessing the work at home and abroad. During his journeys in Austria and Galicia he had come across Jews who had been influenced for good at the classes and meetings in Whitechapel-road. Having referred to the melting away of prejudice against Christ and the Gospel, and indeed to the growing admiration expressed by some Jews for Jesus, Mr. Baron spoke of the need for enlarged accommodation at the Mission House. This was mentioned last year, and it was intimated that £3000 would be required to effect the improvements. It was now announced that the entire amount had been received, and indeed exceeded, by the generosity of friends of the work. In conclusion, Mr. Baron remarked that he was about to take a mission tour in the East, in company with Mr. Gordon, of the Swedish Mission, Budapest.

Mr. A. Boake having made a financial statement, and General Halliday having led in prayer, an address was delivered by Pastor James Stephens, of Highgate, who thanked God for being in any way associated with such a blessed enterprise. Rev. R. Graves Walker followed with helpful remarks on the certainty of God's promises to and concerning Israel. While Gentiles may be partakers of the mercies of Israel, it cannot be said that the promises have gone over to them. So long as physical law continues, whereby the sun and moon give their light, the seed of Israel shall not cease to be a nation before the Lord (Jer. xxxi. 35, 36). God knew that the promise made to the mother of our Lord—"He shall reign over the House of Jacob for ever"—would be understood literally, and as He did not correct the inference, we are bound to receive the promise in its plain simplicity.

The other speakers were Mr. B. Wright, of Birmingham, Rev. Dr. Gritton, who urged workers to encourage converts to take a stand in professing Christ at all costs, and Rev. C. A. Schönberger, who spoke of encouragements by the way. Several speakers referred to the helpful part taken by Mrs. Baron in the work of the Mission.

The London Central Mission.

MUCH rejoicing and hearty thanksgiving marked the anniversary meetings held on Tuesday week at St. John's-square, the Clerkenwell centre of this Mission. At noon a devotional service was held, presided over by Mr. Robert Carr. Later on Rev. W. T. A. Barber spoke of the many ways this Central Mission is being owned of God. Mr. Morgan Harvey, J.P., also supported the claims of the work.

In the afternoon Rev. G. Campbell Morgan preached a very helpful sermon from Luke viii. 45, illustrating Christ's way of dealing with crowds of men. The doings and the teachings of Christ were not things of the past. The Gospels only showed the beginnings of this work and the principle on which Christ would deal with men; and Church history, when it was correctly written, would be the narrative of Christ's continuous working. It was not for them to discover new methods of doing his work, but to discover how to yield themselves to do his will. The problem of an empty church was a problem deeper still—the problem of an absent Christ.

The evening meeting in the Holborn Town Hall was a great success. Rev. John Wakerley made a statement showing that the spiritual work had been well sustained. Week by week they had had what he would venture to say was one of the largest gatherings for prayer in the metropolis. One of the greatest successes had come in the way in which they had been enabled to reach the young men in the City business houses. This had always been a great difficulty, but that year more of the City young men had been brought to God than at any previous year in their history. They had seen within recent weeks some very striking cases of conversion. The meetings for men in the Holborn Town Hall had been a remarkable success. They had had during the year a very welcome gift of a Home of Rest for poor people in the district, which was situate at Tooting Bec Common. This meant an additional financial responsibility, but he was perfectly sure that the money would be well spent.

Mr. R. F. Wood, who presided, dwelt on the importance of the work. He was followed by Rev. Peter Thompson, who was received with a very hearty welcome. Rev. C. H. Kelly said that the outlook was never brighter than it was at that moment.

Friends' Home Mission.

THE annual meeting of the Bedford Institute First-Day School and Home Mission Association was held on Saturday at Bunhill-fields Memorial Hall. The report dealt with work at eight mission centres—in Spitalfields, Bunhill Fields, Hoxton, Bethnal Green, Clerkenwell, Ratcliff, Deptford and Barking, with total attendances at schools and meetings of 13,542. By these and other means the Society of Friends is doing good and sound work in its missions in London, but the need is as great as ever, not only in the districts named, but also in the immediate suburbs, now becoming so rapidly and thickly populated, and where there is abundant room for such Missions, but where Friends are hardly known. If the society is to grapple effectively with the growth of population in the London district, it will need not only much more money but more men and women to devote themselves to the work.

Mr. Chas. C. Morland, chairman of the Association, presided at the annual meeting. Musical selections were given during the evening by the Hoxton Hall Mandoline Band. Mr. J. Allen Baker, in a paper on "What is the most important part of the work of the Mission?" said that he believed the special lines upon which the Mission should proceed were to blend the knowledge of the Gospel with all the work in which it was engaged. This was important, especially to the young, and only by keeping in touch and personal association with them could they succeed in giving them the blessing of Christianity. He spoke of the importance of the temperance work, especially amongst the young, and dwelt upon the importance of the First Day schools for the adults, the Bible teaching, and other work of the Institute.

A discussion followed, in which Mr. P. B. Baker, Mr. J. Fyfe Stewart, Louisa Nicholson, George Gillett, John Hilton, Ernest C. Fry, Mary J. Godlee, Edwin Thorne, William Noble, John Butler, and others took part.

Home Missions in Glasgow.

A HOME MISSION demonstration, attended by 5000 persons, was held in Glasgow on the last day of January, many leading ministers being present.

Lord OVERTOUN, who presided, said the Church of Christ had two great problems—to reach the heathen at home and the heathen abroad. In our cities to-day we had to meet indifference, agnosticism, secularism, socialism, gambling, vice, and the terrible evil of strong drink. There was also the great drain from the country into the towns. That was a reason why country workers should seek to win the young men and women for Christ before they drifted into the towns. The true principle upon which to reach the great cities was the territorial system, whereby one congregation should be responsible for one part of the city. The time had come for the sinking of denominational differences, and the closing of the ranks against the common foe.

Dr. Whyte gave an address on "Three Words to Home Mission Workers on Prayer": (1) Pray secretly; (2) Pray deliberately; (3) Pray with particularity. Dr. Stalker followed on "The Motives for Home Mission Work"; while Dr. Corbet spoke on "Prevention Better than Cure," and dealt with the necessity of getting hold of the children who from their earliest years breathed a tainted atmosphere, and with the necessity of keeping hold of them when they came under the influence of the Church. Rev. R. Howe and ex-Bailie Chisholm also spoke.

The Railway Mission.

A LARGE number of Railway Mission workers met for prayer on behalf of the work of the Mission throughout the World, on January 28, at the headquarters of the Mission, 1, Adam-street, Strand, W.C. Encouraging reports, telling of the conversion of railway men at various branches, were given by the secretary, Mr. R. Nixon.

One branch reported forty conversions among the railway people during the last three months. At another, 120 persons professed to decide for Christ during a three weeks' mission; and at a newly-formed branch at a small station in the North of England ten persons decided for Christ during a week's mission.

The workers commended to God in prayer Mr. Richard Miller, who was present, and who sailed on January 29 for South Africa as a missionary to the railway people in Cape Colony. Mr. Miller will join two other missionaries who have been at work for some years, travelling in the little coach granted to the Railway Mission by the Cape Government Railway. The missionaries visit each station on the line, and conduct Gospel meetings for the railway men and their families, who at many isolated stations have no other opportunities of hearing the Gospel preached.

A meeting of delegates from branches of the Mission in London was held on the same day in the Railway Mission Hall, Wandsworth-road, to bid God-speed to Mr. Miller. A number of the delegates took part in the meeting, which was bright and hearty.

East London Tabernacle.

MR. ALFRED WALTERS, assistant church secretary, writes to us:—

"It will interest your readers to learn that the Church worshipping at the East London Tabernacle has, after much prayerful consideration, extended an invitation to Rev. Sydney J. Jones, of Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool, to the pastorate, rendered vacant through the resignation, some twelve months since, of Rev. A. G. Brown.

"A special church meeting was held recently for that purpose, at which some 850 members were present, and the proceedings throughout were most enthusiastic. We are glad to record that Mr. Jones has accepted the call, a letter to that effect being read on Sunday last to the members after the Communion Service. We expect that Mr. Jones will commence his ministry early in April. It is most gratifying to state that since the retirement of the late pastor all the services have been well maintained."

Central Noon Prayer Meeting.

AT the Aldersgate-street noonday prayer meeting on Monday, Rev. A. Saunders, of the China Inland Mission, formerly a co-worker with Miss Macpherson, gave an interesting statement as to his observations while coming home from China by the Canadian route. He had visited once more the home at Stratford, Ont., and had found many whom he had known as rescue boys now occupying high positions in various callings. The work in Canada is admirably supervised, and the placed-out children are most carefully looked after in every way. Until they reach years of discretion they are frequently visited, their education inquired into, and every means is taken to ensure their health and happiness; in fact, the new regulations introduced by the Canadian Government are largely in the line of the precautions adopted by Miss Macpherson's helpers in Canada. An official inspector who lately visited the Stratford Home, and inquired into the whole plan of working, has expressed himself as highly satisfied with the careful registration and oversight of the children. Mr. Saunders asked prayer and sympathy for this juvenile emigration work. A new party, to start in the spring, is even now gathering at the Hackney Home. Mr. Saunders himself, with his wife and family, and four ladies, hope to sail to-morrow (Friday), per s.s. Australian, for China. They will be thankful for prayer on their behalf.

A most agreeable episode followed, in the rising from among the audience of a young man, who called himself "Tom," and stated that he and his brother—their mother having died—were sent out by Miss Macpherson to Canada in 1871, were settled in a Christian home, were led to the Saviour, and are now doing well.

Rev. KARL MASCHER spoke of the difficulties under which Christian work is carried on in Saxony, specified certain disabilities and persecutions which those who preach the Gospel have to endure, and told, nevertheless, of much blessing in Dresden. One Sunday evening, for example, eleven professed conversion, on the next five, and on the next six came out for Christ.

Dr. GRITTON added a few words as to evangelistic work among the crowds of rough and heedless young people who throng the streets in Hackney and Whitechapel on Sundays.

Prayer Union for Israel.

AN ALL-DAY conference of the Prayer Union for Israel was held at Wimbledon, on Friday, Jan. 28, at the hall of the Y.M.C.A. Rev. D. C. Macgregor, minister of the Presbyterian Church, presided at the morning meeting, when an address was given by Rev. John Wilkinson on Rom. xi., and a Bible-reading by Dr. Neatby on Matt. xxii. 42.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided at the afternoon meeting, when short addresses were given by Mr. I. I. Aschkenazi, Rev. W. Ayerst, Mr. Henry Barnett, Mr. Marcus Bergmann, Rev. A. Bernstein, Mr. W. Greene, Rev. G. H. Händler, Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, and Rev. Samuel Wilkinson. Mrs. Osborn Howe, the hon. asst. sec. of the Union, explained its objects.

A large number gathered in the evening to hear an address from Dr. McKilliam on "The Coming of the Lord," but sudden illness prevented his attendance. An address was, therefore, given by Mr. A. S. Day on Luke xxi. 24-28. The last half-hour of the meeting was spent in prayer. It is a very noticeable sign of the times that Christians are beginning to take a deeper interest in the salvation of Israel, and the Prayer Union for Israel is one of the agencies which the Lord is using for bringing this about.

The address of the Prayer Union is now 16, Westwell-road, Streatham Common, and its quarterly organ is The Friend of Israel (annual subscription, one shilling).

The London Spectacle Mission reports that last year there were 798 applicants. The object of the Society is to help the poor in obtaining spectacles fitted to their needs and work. The secretary has received many encouraging letters testifying to the good work done by the Society in supplying poor folk whose sight has failed them with spectacles such as will enable them to continue their occupations or to pass the time in reading and sewing. The secretary is Miss C. Waring, 197, Sutherland-avenue, W.

Convention at Portsmouth.

A CONVENTION for the deepening of the spiritual life has been held at the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, and has been a means of rich blessin to many. On the first day Mr. Hogben, the director of the "Welcome Mission," presided. A preparation prayer-meeting was held in the morning, January 31st; and in the evening Captain Riley, K.R.R., gave a helpful Bible reading from Isaiah l. 1 to 9, dwelling especially on verse 4. This passage Rev. E. L. Hamilton, of Bath, took up very felicitously afterwards, saying how it had been proved in his own experience. At the morning session on Tuesday, February 1st, Dr. White delivered a forcible address from 1 Chronicles xxix. 5 (latter clause). His leading points were: (1) A call to service, (2) An immediate call, (3) An entire consecration, as typified by the ram of consecration, Levit. viii. 8,22 to 30. Captain Tottenham, of Wimbledon, spoke with convicting power at night.

Mr. Hamilton presided on Wednesday morning, and gave a short Bible-reading from Psalm xxxii. 1-5, in which his hearers got a very cheering view of the "very happy" man, whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is covered, being also convinced of the necessity of confession. This was followed by an impressive address by Captain Tottenham. In the evening Mr. Hamilton spoke with great power from John xx. 19 to 23. His leading points were: (1) The Holy Ghost with men for justification; (2) the Holy Ghost in men for sanctification; (3) the Holy Ghost on men for service.

On Thursday Captain Tottenham presided at both sessions. In the morning Mr. Hamilton spoke from John xiv. 16-18, and brought before his hearers the Holy Ghost as Resident Teacher in the hearts of sanctified believers. At the evening meeting, after reading some notes of praise from those who had received the Holy Spirit in a rich measure during the convention, Captain Tottenham delivered an address founded upon John xv. 26-27, proving from the Word of God that when one is filled with the Holy Spirit witness is borne to the world, the world is convinced of sin, and the believer guided into all truth. At the close Mr. Hamilton made an impressive personal appeal, in response to which many raised the hand in token of acceptance of the gift of God.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

A WELL-ATTENDED meeting of workers and friends was held on Friday evening at the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway. The chair was taken by Dr. W. G. Kemp, and Rev. George Soltau gave an address upon the overcoming life. He began by dividing the audience into three classes, overcomers, non-overcomers, and non-Christians. He warned his hearers of the danger of half-and-half Christianity; better be out-and-out on one or other side. Satan and his hosts are always busy with Christians, and more than all with consecrated Christians. A simple, but strong, faith was insisted upon as absolutely essential to deliverance from the power of temper and other sins. When we take the Lord at his word, and definitely trust Him, He delivers, and keeps delivered just as we trust Him.

The secretary, Mr. J. T. Isaac, announced that the Rest was much in need of copies of the Scriptures in Russian, Lettish, Spanish, and Yiddish, and asked for help in this direction.

The Welcome Home, Canning Town, E.—The many losses among our sailors caused through the late heavy gales lent special interest to the muster of the "Christian Life Boat Crew," in the Fo'c'sle of the Welcome Home, Iron Bridge, Canning Town, which was filled to its utmost capacity, on Tuesday week. Miss Child dwelt upon the text for the month, Heb. xiii. 5, and gave a cheering report of lives rescued and souls saved. Many present took part, and at the close several joined the crew.

The After-Care Association, for poor persons discharged recovered from asylums for the insane, held its annual meeting last week at 84, Brook-street, W. Sir W. Broadbent, Bart., M.D., was in the chair, and the report stated that 147 cases had been before the council in 1897. The speakers included the Archdeacon of Westminster, Revs. E. S. Hilliard and W. St. Hill Bourne, Dr. Savage, Dr. E. W. White, Dr. H. Rayner, and Dr. Norman Kerr.

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. JOSIAH NIX AT WARRINGTON.

A MISSION recently held in the Bold-street Wesleyan Chapel, Warrington, by Mr. Nix, has stirred the whole town, and has been a remarkable success. Preparations were made for the mission in various ways, notably by a previous week of prayer, and by the formation of a large united choir. From the first the congregations were large, on the last nights of the mission hundreds being turned away. On the first Sunday afternoon Mr. Nix addressed with special tenderness a large number of Sunday-school scholars, nearly two hundred of whom professed to yield themselves to Christ. In the evening services the addresses were short and the teaching consecutive. Each night a point was made and driven home. The possibility of immediate decision for Christ and acceptance by Christ was urged; and an appeal made for an open and fearless confession. The ready response to the appeal was most striking, the number of inquirers during the mission representing more or less all the congregations in the town, amounting to 730. In addition to these 800 temperance pledges were signed in the same open manner, a fact of special significance to all who know under what unfortunate conditions temperance work is necessarily conducted in Warrington. The mission will be long remembered by all who took part in it as a high tide of blessing; and by those who have been led to religious decision as the time in which they passed from death unto life. AWAKENING IN CARRADALE.

CARRADALE, in the peninsula of Kintyre, Argyllshire, is at present the scene of a remarkable awakening. Mr. Samuel Mackenzie began a series of meetings on Jan. 14 in the new Mission Hall, and from the first the Spirit's presence was manifest. The interest in and attendance at the meetings increased daily, and after the first week, under the pointed and earnest addresses of the evangelist, the work of ingathering began, numbers testifying each night to having given themselves to Christ. Mr. Mackenzie is accompanied by and greatly aided in his work by Miss Mackenzie, his daughter, whose rendering of sacred song has contributed in no small measure to the success of the movement. Highlanders are generally slow to give expression to their religious convictions, but when once awakened and brought into liberty, their conversion is thorough and their testimony very bright. Since the first fortnight the meetings have been held in the Free Church as more central for the district; the movement, however, is not confined to the Free Church. The meetings are warmly supported and largely attended by members of the Established Church, which is sharing in the blessing, while the wave has swept over the entire Free Church congregation. The prayers of readers are earnestly requested for the spread of the movement over the whole peninsula and the neighbouring Island of Arran. Geo. S. Macleod.

F.C. Manse, Carradale.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. Richard Spragg has been conducting special services at Pontnewydd and Cwmffwrdoer. The word preached was blessed to many souls.

The Weaver Bros. have had a time of real blessing in connection with their mission in the Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow. Much interest has been awakened, and the meetings have been fruitful in result.

A very successful united mission has been been held, under the auspices of the Peterborough Free Church Council, by Mr. Henry Thorne. The numbers assembling at the afternoon Bible-readings increased daily. The Drill Hall was packed every night—in fact, a hall much larger could have been crowded, so great was the interest manifested.

An eight days' mission has been held at Wellingborough by Rev. Daniel H. Carr. The services, both on the Sundays and week-days, were well attended, and the interest increased as the mission proceeded. A number of conversions took place night by night, and a large number of the scholars have given themselves to Christ. It is believed to be but the beginning of a gracious revival.

A series of Gospel meetings have been held in the Christian Institute, Alva, under the united auspices of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., by Mr. John G. Smith, of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission. The Lord gave blessing to many.

Mr. Moody has made an engagement to go back to New York in March to conduct meetings for eight days, March 13 to 20 inclusive. The building that will be used for the purpose is the Grand Central Palace, with seating capacity of 7000. On the same floor as the main auditorium are two smaller halls, which can be used for overflow or after meetings, each capable of accommodating from 800 to 1000. Mr. Moody proposes to hold meetings morning, noon, and night throughout the whole day, commencing with prayer-meeting at 9 o'clock, and another prayer-meeting at the noon hour. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, of Philadelphia, and local ministers will be invited to lead meetings daily.

A three weeks' mission, in connection with the Walsworth-road Chapel, Hitchin, has been held by Mr. C. Galletly, of the Evangelisation Society, the first week at a branch chapel in Whitwell, and the last fortnight at Walsworth-road. The mission has been a season of great blessing. The evangelist's bright, yet earnest addresses have been used by God to lead many to own Christ as their Saviour, and his talks to Christians have been greatly blessed to the workers.

During the past fortnight services have been held at the Mission Chapel, Gorse Hill, by Mr. James Sprunt, with the result of leading many to confess the Saviour. Every afternoon Bible readings were given, and were greatly blessed.

A week's special mission has been conducted at Antrim-road, Belfast, by Pastor E. T. Mateer. The attendances increased every evening, and there was much evidence of power in the preaching of the Word. Several professed decision for Christ.

During four of the Sundays in January Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Harrison have been at the St. Giles' Christian Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, St. Giles, Mr. Harrison speaking for Jesus, and Mrs. Harrison singing the Gospel. It has been a time of refreshing, for God has blessed saint and sinner. Upwards of fifty have come in to the vestry to be conversed with personally about salvation. The Lord has "filled our mouth with laughter and our tongue with singing."—W. W.

The first week in the New Year opened at the Great Assembly Hall, E., with a prayer-meeting each night, which was attended by a large number of Christians, and a short address was given by Rev. John T. Vine. Praise was offered for the gracious blessing vouchsafed in the past. The subsequent weeks were richly blessed, and, considering the indifferent weather that prevailed, the audiences were far above the average on Sunday nights. The inquiry room has been filled with anxious men and women, and some remarkable and most encouraging conversions have been the result.

Mr. W. Graham Scroggie, of the Pastors' College, has held a three-month's mission at Willesden Hall, Willesden-lane, with encouraging results.

A ten-days' mission has been conducted by Mr. W. Monro Collings, at Trinity Hall, Hawley-street, Margate. The meetings were well attended, and God's blessing was manifested in the salvation of precious souls and the restoration of backsliders. A special feature was the afternoon "Bible Talks on the Christian Life," which were very helpful in stirring up the Lord's people to greater love and devotion. At the last meeting on February 1, many testified to blessing received during the mission.

A most successful series of Gospel meetings has been held in Castlereagh-road Chapel, Belfast, by Mr. Wm. Rimmer, and a large number have professed to decide for Christ.

Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded on Sunday night last a fifteen days' mission at the mission-room of Messrs. J. and T. Garnett's Cox Green Mills. The large mission-room was well filled on week-nights, and literally packed out on Sundays. Many sinners have come over on the Lord's side, and Christians have been edified and blessed. On Saturday evenings testimony meetings were held, when great numbers joyfully testified of the work of grace which God had wrought in their lives.

Stanger; Upper Gornal, James Lovell; Tunbridge Wells, J. H. Cooke; Newport, Salop, J. B. Rochfort; Curbar, J. Brown; Lydbrook, J. Whiting; South Eston, M. Aspland; Rhyl, J. Shields; Patrington, C. Noakes; Radstock, H. Bray; Hamilton, N.B., Richard Hill; Kilmarnock, N.B., J. W. Galletly; Paisley, N.B., D. Pittendrigh; Elgin, N.B., R. Lapsley.

Rev. George Soltau.

AFTER an absence of nearly twelve years, Rev. Geo. and Mrs. Soltau have just returned from the Antipodes. For seven years Mr. Soltau held a pastorate at Launceston, Tasmania; since then devoting his time to missions for the deepening of spiritual life, and holding conferences in the Colony of Victoria and New Zealand.

Mr. Soltau, who is looking forward to undertake similar work in the United Kingdom, brings with him letters of warm commendation from ministers of all denominations in New Zealand, whose churches have benefited, including the Bishop of Nelson, two archdeacons, the Moderator of the Presbyterian Church, etc.

Mr. Soltau will be glad to give any information he may possess to young men thinking of proceeding to the colonies to settle. His address is 37, Pyrland-road, Canonbury, N. Mrs. Soltau has undertaken the charge of the Pyrland-road Training Home for China Inland Mission candidates, which has hitherto been conducted by Miss Soltau, who recently accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Taylor to China.

Requests for Prayer.

For a mission by Mr. William Forbes, at St. Neots.

For mission at Hertford, 13th to 22nd, by Mr. Goudie.

On behalf of Gospel work in a small village in Ayrshire.

For a mission in Gayton parish, King's Lynn, Feb. 20 to March 4.

For a mission by Miss Haddon, at Coleham Mission-room, Feb 13 to 20.

For a special mission to commence on Monday next at Hyde Park Hall.

For a mission at Braughing, Herts, by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander, Feb. 13 to 22.

For a Mission in Rodbourne and Swindon, Wilts, Feb. 14 to 20, by Rev. J. B. Barraclough.

For the work for God in Prague (Bohemia), and that his own people there may be kept in peace.

For special services for children in Weston Park Wesleyan Chapel, Feb. 13 to 20, by Mr. C. D. Smith.

For an eight days' mission, February 12 to 20, in connection with the opening of a new mission-hall at Burnley, Lancashire.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.—All over the land there are ladies giving spare time to working woollen and other articles for the fishermen of the North Sea. In order to encourage and stimulate these willing workers, a competition has been arranged, full details of which may be obtained by sending 3d. and an addressed evenlope to Miss Z. Jameson, Eastella, Hull.

The House of Rest.—At the monthly meeting on Friday Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor gave a Bible reading on "The Ministry of the Holy Spirit," which he classed under six heads: (1) the ministry of the Holy Spirit in the work of creation; (2) in the inspiration of the Bible; (3) in convicting of sin; (4) in the work of regeneration; (5) in the work of sanctification; and (6) in equipment for service. Mr. Macgregor's words were full of deep spiritual teaching.

Obituary.

DR. BRYCE ROSS, KAFFRARIA.

One of the most devoted of South African missionaries has lately passed away at Wiltondale, near Kei Road station. Born at Lovedale in 1825, his father being one of the pioneer missionaries of Kaffraria, he gave his whole life to labour in South Africa. After theological and medical training in Edinburgh and Glasgow, he joined, in 1853, the staff at Lovedale. A few years later he went to assist his father at Pirie, Kaffraria, where a whole populous valley has been evangelised by one family —father, son, and grandsons. The life of Dr. Ross is described as "long, laborious, earnest, and fruitful. It embraced the whole range of missionary work, from care for the conversion of individual souls to the care and planting of out-station churches, constant preaching, the supervision of schools, and the translation of the Bible into the Kaffir vernacular."

REV. E. THEODORE HITCHENS.

The death has occurred of Rev. E. Theodore Hitchens, minister of Eccleston-square Congregational Church. The deceased minister conducted the funeral of one of his deacons a fortnight ago, and took cold; pneumonia and congestion of the lungs supervened, and he died on Thursday afternoon about four o'clock. Mr. Hitchens was born in 1860, and trained at Western College, Plymouth. On leaving college in 1884, he became assistant minister to Rev. G. B. Johnson, of Torquay. In 1887 he removed to Teddington, and in 1893 became assistant pastor with his father, the late Rev. Dr. Hiles Hitchens, who died about a year ago. Since then he has had sole pastoral charge. Mr. Hitchens took a special interest in work among the Jews, and in the protest against Romanism and its erroneous teaching and enslaving principles.

MR. SAMUEL STIDOLPH.

This quiet, devoted worker passed away to be with his Lord on the 2nd inst. Converted to God over 35 years ago, he was for several years attached to Stafford Rooms, where he worked zealously helping young men to Christ. Later on, he gave himself entirely to the work of the Lord, and for the last seventeen years has laboured in connection with the Union Hall Mission at the Queen's Park Hall. He loved tent and open-air work, and he will be greatly missed by those with whom he laboured, and by the sick and poor amongst whom he visited. The writer saw him the night before he passed away, and on leaving said, "I commend you to God; underneath are the everlasting arms, and He will carry you on his bosom." To which he responded, labouring hard for breath, "Ah! yes, bless Him." Early the next morning he fell asleep in Jesus. His widow, who is very delicate, needs the prayers, sympathy, and help of the Lord's people. C. S. T.

MR. HUGH M. MATHESON.

It is with deep sorrow that we have to announce the death of Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, early on Tuesday morning, at his residence, Heathlands, Hampstead. He had a sharp cardiac attack on Sunday, January 23, and has been in a prostrate condition ever since. At the advanced age of seventy-six his strength did not rally, and the end came peacefully on Tuesday. The funeral will take place at Highgate Cemetery on Saturday next at 2 p.m. No doubt many friends will testify by their presence the high esteem in which he was held.

"Living Waters" Missionary Union.—This Union has for its object that members pray regularly for missionary work, and endeavour to give or collect at least 1d. a week in support of missionaries who definitely undertake to represent them in the Mission Field. They also seek to interest as many others as they can in the work of evangelising the heathen. They may belong to any Christian denomination. The Union already has seventeen missionary representatives in India, China, and Africa. Those willing to join should send their names, with three penny stamps, to the hon. secretary, Miss Agnes M. Boys, Beverley, Sidcup, Kent.

The Late Dr. Moulton.

THE morning papers on Monday recorded, to the sorrow of the entire Christian community, the death of Rev. Wm. Fiddian Moulton, M.A., D.D., Head Master of the Leys School, Cambridge. Death took place suddenly on Saturday afternoon, whilst Dr. Moulton was out walking in the neighbourhood of the School. The sad intelligence excited feelings of great regret in Cambridge University circles, where Dr. Moulton was well known and highly esteemed. The loss to Wesleyan Methodism is very great; since Wesley himself and Adam Clarke no man of such ripe scholarship and erudition had occupied a place in the ministry of the Church, whilst in the outside world his reputation was wide and far-reaching.

Dr. Moulton's father, grandfather, father-in-law, uncle, and elder brother were all Wesleyan ministers, while on his mother's side he traced his descent from John Bakewell, an intimate friend of the Wesleys, and one of the earliest local preachers. Born at Leek, in Staffordshire, in 1835, Dr. Moulton received his early education partly from his father, and partly at Woodhouse-grove School, near Leeds. Leaving this establishment in 1850, he was sent to Wesley College, Sheffield, where he displayed extraordinary talents, which speedily won him a front place. At length he matriculated at London University, taking his B.A. degree three years later with honours in mathematics; and in 1856, at the early age of 21, he gained his M.A. degree, and with it was awarded the gold medal for mathematics and natural philosophy. This success was followed by others, for he succeeded in carrying off the University prizes for Hebrew, Greek, and Christian Evidences. The year 1854 marked his first scholastic appointment as master at Queen's College, Taunton, a post which he vacated four years after, on entering the Wesleyan ministry.

He then undertook to serve his Church in the Theological College, Richmond, where he remained for sixteen years, first as assistant classical tutor, and later as professor of Hebrew and Greek. In 1872 he was elected into the Legal Hundred, after he had been only fourteen years in the ministry, this honour being rarely granted to any minister whose ministerial record is below twenty-five years. The Leys School being founded in 1874, he was appointed Head Master, and under his oversight the institution speedily took a foremost place in the educational world; its students have carried off a great number of valuable scholarships and prizes at both the older Universities and at London, while the unsectarian Evangelical character of the teaching has attracted members of leading families of all the great Evangelical churches.

The year of his appointment to the Leys was also marked by a signal recognition of his talents in the academic world. The University of Edinburgh bestowed on him the degree of D.D. in recognition of his scholarship and literary abilities, and three years later the University of Cambridge conferred on him the honorary degree of M.A. In 1890 Dr. Moulton responded to the wish of his brethren and was made President of the Wesleyan Conference. His year of office was signalised by the celebration of the centenary of Wesley's death.

As the author of many works of Biblical literature Dr. Moulton's fame may be called world-wide. He was one of the Committee of Revisers of the New Testament, and assisted the late Bishop of Durham in the revision of two books of the Apocrypha. He was associated with Dr. Plumptre in the production of the "Bible Educator," was the author of a "History of the English Bible," and joint author with Dr. Milligan of the commentary on St. John's Gospel, in the "Popular Commentary." He also wrote a commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews, and prepared the marginal references of the Revised New Testament. The work on which his widest reputation rests is his translation from the German of "Winer's Grammar of New Testament Greek." He not only abridged and corrected the original, and verified all the references, but added original matter of the utmost value. The learning and the patience required in the production of this work were such that it has been said that no contemporary scholar but himself could have produced it.

Cultured, refined, and gentle as he was, his sermons were pervaded with the atmosphere of scholarship. His sympathies were broad and generous, and his influence was always exerted on the side of freedom, enlightened advance, and universal good will. He leaves a widow and two sons, both of them in the ministry.

In Memoriam.

GEORGE L. PILKINGTON, LAY MISSIONARY.

SCHOLAR and athlete, high and dauntless son
Of faith and hope and holiness in one,
Brief life of splendour thine! God's will be done.

And shall such splendour perish? Nay, the dark
Of darkest Africa retains thy mark
Love-luminous for ever; for the Ark—

Of God's redemption treasures thou didst bear,
With manna fresh from heaven, divinely fair,
And Aaron's blossoming rod that broke despair.

True Levite in Jehovah's camp wert thou,
To bear the Ark of God thy loftiest vow,
To stand and bless an alien race till now!

For the great Master touched thee, "Rise and come,
Leave home and kindred, find in Me thine home;
No jewel-mines for Christ like heathendom.

And thou shalt be the King's interpreter,
Breathing low music in sin's dying ear,
Meek belted knight of God, brave pioneer!"

Anointed thus with consecrating oil,
Fresh from the Master's chrism, soon love-toil
Swift to those pierced feet brought glistering spoil

Scarce three-and-thirty years! So lived thy Lord;
Scarce seven swift summers, and the Spirit-sword
So waved love-flashing, wild dark lands adored.

Shall aught efface thy shining track? Shall sin
Roll back barbaric waves of hellish din,
And Christ his own creation fail to win?

Believe it not; the world shall yet be His!
And thou shalt see it—share the Conqueror's kiss—
Glorious young brother, storm-swept into bliss!

Middleton was wounded. Captain Fenton died from his wounds.

Personalia.

Rev. F. B. Meyer writes: "We have had a very good voyage, thanks to the many prayers offered for me; and I am looking for much blessing."

Dr. A. T. Pierson is, we regret to hear, ill at his home in Brooklyn, and has been compelled to decline the call to China to hold spiritual life meetings on the lines of the Keswick movement.

Rev. J. Stevens, D.D., who resigned in December the charge of Union Church, Shanghai, hopes to reach London this day. He is open to engagements. Address, Carn Brea, 132, Woodbridge-road, Ipswich, Suffolk.

Dr. John Hall, of New York, has, at the earnest request of his flock, withdrawn his resignation and consented to continue his pastorate for one year longer, when he will have "rounded out seventy years of life." An assistant pastor is to be appointed.

Pandita Ramabai is now on her way from Bombay to the United States, where she expects to spend a month or two. The charge of the schools at Poona and of the famine orphan settlement at Mukti have meanwhile been undertaken by Sunderbai Powar and Miss Abrams.

Lord Kinnaird, while in Calcutta, gave addresses to the College Y.M.C.A.—that is, the branch which works among the Bengali student class. He was listened to with marked attention throughout, though probably at least nine-tenths of the 600 students who heard him in the open air and in the hall were Hindus. He sails from Bombay on 26th inst., reaching home about the middle of March.

Rev. Geo. C. Needham has been holding Bible conferences for the promotion of Christian life and work in connection with evangelistic services at Cleveland, Boston, Germantown, and Harrisburg. Dr. Erdman and Mrs. Needham were with him in the last-named city. Congregations gathered three times daily, and at times 1700 people were present. The Needhams do not yet see their way to visit Japan for the furtherance of Bible study. Their next fields are Newark and Keyport. There have been many decided cases of conversion. Their address hereafter is Germantown, Philadelphia.

Young Folk's Guild.—Mr. Scott Burn, C.E., is advocating the creation of a "Young Folk's League, or Guild of Reverence for Years, and of Help for the Aged Poor." He suggests that such a guild would be an appropriate memorial of Her Majesty's sixtieth year which the nation has just celebrated. Mr. Burn, who has had a large experience amongst the aged poor, is also pleading in favour of the multiplication of "House-homes" for them. He urges that the best plan is to keep the old people, wherever practicable, in the houses where they have lived, and to organise a more comprehensive system of care for them there. "Make them sure of the rent," is his plea—addressing in particular the Christian congregations who have poor attached to them—"that they may live on, and die in the old home." Rent, however, is not nearly all that is required for the poor; many other needs arise, each to be dealt with separately. He asks that the young should make these aged folk their special charge. There are already Guilds and societies of Christian Endeavour which are interested in various schemes. Some of them may think out and apply this idea. Any wishing further information should address, Mr. R. Scott Burn, C.E., Musselburgh, N.B.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop Suffragan of Southampton (Dr. G. C. Fisher) has resigned.

Canon Norman, of Houghton-le-Spring, is about to resign owing to ill-health.

The Church Zenana Society is threatened with a deficit on the year of £4300.

During the past week a mission has been held in All Saints', Haggerston.

Rev. J. O. West, of Duddeston, has been appointed to Rowington, near Warwick.

The Pastoral Aid Society has issued a call for a Day of Prayer for Home Missions, on March 2.

Bishop Tucker, writing in The Times, insists that the time has come for full and complete abolition of slavery and the slave trade.

Considerable difficulties have arisen over the proposed new bishopric for South Yorkshire, and it is probable the scheme will stand over for the present.

Very interesting meetings were held in various parts of the country in connection with the Day of Humiliation and Prayer arranged by the Church Association.

Rev. J. C. Pigot, vicar of St. Thomas's, St. Helens, having resigned in consequence of indifferent health, is about to remove to a small rural parish near Aylesbury.

A well-attended meeting was held last week in the Guildhall, Canterbury, in furtherance of the movement for the erection of a monument to the memory of the forty-one Protestant martyrs who in the reign of Queen Mary were burnt at the stake at Canterbury.

At the annual meeting of the London Clerical and Lay Union, held in the Leopold Rooms, St. Bride-street, the chairman (Prebendary Webb-Peploe) delivered an address on the position of Caleb and Joshua on being left by Moses to lead Israel into the promised land. So, he said, at the present time we are set to uphold the truth of God, a small but faithful minority amongst whom were not faithful.

The report of the work connected with Christ Church, St. Giles', shows constant and earnest effort on behalf of the poor. The vicar, Rev. S. A. Griffiths, maintains that it is a church "built for the poor," and he gives himself specially to their aid. It is interesting to note the link between home and foreign work in the fact that one of the best workers has just started for mission service in Fuh Kien, China.

Congregational.

At Tetbury Rev. E. Spry has entered on his new charge.

Rev. Aubrey L. Matson has been recognised as pastor at Hingham, Norfolk.

Rev. A. H. Sayers, late of Frodsham, has accepted a call to Boston Spa, Yorks.

The London Missionary Society have accepted Messrs. E. B. Riley and E. Evans for foreign service.

In consequence of ill-health Rev. J. Thomson has resigned his charge at Toller-street, Kettering.

At Castlegate Chapel, Nottingham, there are now 730 members, with every token of successful work.

The pulpit at George-street Chapel, Oxford, has now been filled, Rev. J. Robertson having been recognised as pastor.

Rev. W. H. C. Palmer, of Tunbridge Wells (Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion), has been ordered a complete rest for some months.

Rev. Walter Huckett, late of Vonizongo, Madagascar, is to start for Apia, Samoa, on Feb. 18, to take over the C.M.S. work among the native and foreign population.

Rev. Thomas Dunlop has given notice to resign the pastorate of Emmanuel Chapel, Bootle, which he entered upon twenty-two years ago in succession to Principal Alexander.

Rev. I. Curtis Meserve, D.D., late of Newhaven, Conn., U.S.A., has accepted the pastorate of Craven Hill Congregational Chapel, Lancaster Gate, W. His reputation as a worker and preacher is a source of much hopefulness for the future prosperity of the church.

Baptist.

Rev. J. E. Barton has closed his ministry at the Corn Exchange, Gloucester, after five years' labour.

After an absence of ten months, through ill-health, Rev. W. F. Edgerton has resumed his work at Harlington.

Rev. E. Henderson has become president of the London Baptist Association, with Rev. J. Bradford, of Leytonstone, as vice-president.

In consequence of ill-health, Rev. Dr. E. Parker has been compelled to resign the presidency of Brighton-grove College, Manchester.

Regent-street Church, Smethwick, has commenced a new mission in the Bearwood district, a neighbourhood in which the population is rapidly increasing.

Queen's-road, Coventry, reports 465 church members and active life and usefulness in every department. The early Sunday morning schools number 480 men.

Rev. Sidney Scott Sarson, who took the charge of Gorse Hill in connection with the Swindon Tabernacle, has resigned owing to the sudden death last year of Rev. F. Pugh, with whom he was working.

The Spurgeon memorial chapel now in course of erection in Bexhill will, it is hoped, be completed by June and ready to receive the visitors who flock to this seaside resort. Still, however, £1500 is needed to meet the cost. The need for such a centre of Gospel testimony is peculiarly great, as Bexhill is a hot-bed of Ritualism and Romanism, and we are informed that even spiritually-minded Church people feel thankful to see Beulah Chapel rising.

The twenty-first anniversary of the Highgate-road Chapel, and the twentieth of the pastor, James Stephens, M.A., was held on February 2, the pastor presiding. The church secretary reported that eighty-one new members had been added during the past year: forty-three on a first profession of faith. On the other hand forty-one had been dismissed to other churches, or from removals or non-attendance had been dropped from the church roll; while ten had fallen asleep in Jesus. The net increase had been thirty. The total present number of members was reported as 754. The reports as to the Sunday-school, the Y.W.C.A., and other agencies of the church were decidedly encouraging. The services at the mission hall in Falkland-road, under the superintendence of Mr. Haffenden, had considerably increased, and an impression for good is being made on the neighbourhood around. The total giving for the year has been £1775 (exclusive of the amount contributed for the support of the pastor). Of this amount £773 had been for foreign missions, and £1002 for home objects, including £186 towards a new room for the men's Bible class. The meeting was addressed by Rev. G. D. Hooper, Rev. D. Baron, Mr. L. Wilson Haffenden, the mission hall superintendent, and the pastor.

Methodist.

Rev. D. H. Carr has held a most interesting mission at Wellingborough.

A ten days' mission at Millom by Rev. E. Davidson has been followed by much blessing.

Quite a number have been added to the church at Conisboro', as the result of a recent mission.

Grand meetings in connection with Women's Foreign Missions have been held at Eastbourne.

Rev. Joel Peters has held a special mission at Kingsley Park, Northampton, with many signs of blessing.

The church at Skegness has been revived by a special series of spiritual life services, held by Mr. Bandey.

Rev. J. Boulton, one of the survivors of the original band of Primitive Methodist pioneers, lies seriously ill at Darwen.

Rev. Albert Bage, of Whiteinch Mission, Glasgow, has been invited to succeed Dr. Fergusson at the Birmingham Central Mission.

During last year sixty places of worship have been built by the Primitive Methodist Connexion, upon which over £61,000 were expended. Property belonging to the communion is estimated at £4,000,000.

A scheme is under consideration by the London Wesleyan Council for raising £1,000,000 to commemorate the commencement of the twentieth century. It is hoped that a million Methodists will each guarantee a pound. So simple and easy a plan deserves success.

The annual missionary meeting in connection with Didsbury College was held on Tuesday week at the Central Hall, Manchester. Mr. George H. Ryves presided, and speeches on mission work were made by Mr. Samuel Brunt, Mr. W. H. Bunting, Mr. Edwin Owen, and Mr. B. Gregory.

The membership of the Wesleyan Connexion in Great Britain has increased by 56,680 during the last twenty years, yet the yearly collections for the Home Missionary Society are now £3000 less than in 1877. In fact, for several years the income of the committee has been below the expenditure. Last year about 400 "struggling circuits" received grants amounting in the aggregate to £26,536, while an additional £1500 was voted to the army and navy work.

Presbyterian.

Forest Hill Church reports 384 members.

Dr. MacEwan's church at Clapham reports 700 members.

The work at Upper Norwood, under the care of Rev. J. G. Train, is growing and full of promise.

A most interesting report has been issued of the new church at Finchley. The membership has reached 138.

A meeting to welcome Rev. George Hanson to his new charge will be held this evening (Thursday) at Marylebone Church, Upper George-street, W.

Nechells Church, Birmingham, reports 235 members. Under the pastoral care of Rev. W. F. Holt the work shows many signs of progress and encouragement.

The Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England will meet in Liverpool in April at Sefton Park Church (Dr. Watson's). Rev. W. Hutton, of Birkenhead, is moderator-elect.

Society of Friends.

John F. Hansen, of Mount Vernon, South Dakota, has arrived in England on a visit to the churches of London and Dublin yearly meetings.

Sarah A. Naish, of Bristol, who had gone out to America to accompany Harriet Green in her missionary work in the West, has been obliged to return home on account of her continued ill-health.

Biblical lectures in connection with the Scarborough Summer School are being delivered in various centres of Friends, including London, Bristol, Manchester, etc., and are being well attended.

Arnold Wigham, Jessie H. Burtt, and Celia M. Armitage have arrived in Zanzibar on their way to join the Friends' Pemba Industrial Mission. Theodore Burtt, who has been out about a year, has rendered splendid help to the cause of freedom in those two islands under the British protectorate where slavery has notwithstanding been permitted to exist.

The Salvation Army.

The annual week of prayer and self-denial in this country is fixed to commence on the 19th March.

General Booth has been warmly welcomed by 200 students and professors at McGill University, Montreal.

Two hundred and sixteen officers in Australasia have volunteered for work in Java, India, and Japan. Parties of these will shortly be despatched from Melbourne.

The Earl of Aberdeen, Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, presided at General Booth's meetings at Ottawa. The Minister of Finance and other leading officials expressed their great admiration of the work of the Army.

Fallen Asleep.

At Courtlands, Tunbridge Wells, on 31st ult., Rev. D. BARCLAY BEVAN, aged eighty-four, formerly vicar of Little Amwell, Herts.—At 18, Fitzwilliam-place, Dublin, on 1st inst., Dr. JOSEPH CARSON, aged eighty-two, Vice-Provost of Trinity College, Dublin.—At Hereford, on 31st ult., Canon C. JAY JONES, for thirty years vicar of Westbury-on-Severn, and for nine years rector of Staunton.—At Clacton-on-Sea, on 28th ult., Mr. WILLIAM PESTER, aged sixty-seven, for upwards of forty years an active leader and faithful preacher, and liberal giver in Methodist movements at Warwick-gardens and West Kensington. — At Chesterfield, Rev. T. H. BLACKSHAW, for thirteen years pastor of Soresby-street Congregational Chapel, Chesterfield, an able and useful minister. — At Shrewsbury, Mr. HENRY CARLESS, for many years a willing helper at Castle-court Church. — At Grimsby, Mr. J. R. RIGGALL, J.P., aged sixty-eight, a prominent leader among the Wesleyans. — At Leeds, Mr. ROBERT SLADE, who has been actively engaged in the work at Queen-street for more than half a century.—At Lenton, Mr. RALPH WOOD, well-known in Christian circles in Nottingham.—At Kingsbridge, South Devon, Mr. A. J. HEWETT, secretary of the Christian Endeavour Society, and a most devoted young worker.—At Ridgmount, Mr. THOMAS FRANCIS, an earnest helper in Christian work since 1839.—At Fulbourn, Mr. WILLIAM JOHNSON, aged eighty-seven, a generous supporter of the work at Zion Chapel, Cambridge, and of missions generally.—At Romford, Mr. JOSEPH LAKE, for thirty-two years a useful Sunday-school superintendent.—At Pontypridd, Rev. S. LEWIS, a useful minister for many years at Cardiff and Machen.—At Dublin, Mr. WM. J. BANKS, formerly of Kilkenny and Kingstown, aged eighty-four years.—At Belfast, Mr. ROBERT ABRAHAM, M.D., of Aughnacloy, aged thirty-eight years.

"THE PARTING OF THE WAYS."
WHICH WAY SHALL I TURN?
This question is asked us daily. It is asked us
BY THE POOR AND HUNGRY who know not "which way to turn" for food, clothing, and firing;
BY THE DESTITUTE AND FRIENDLESS
(many of them mere children) who stand hesitating upon the verge of a criminal career;
BY THE WIVES & CHILDREN OF PRISONERS
"left behind" to face disgrace and semi-starvation.
WHICH WAY DO THEY TURN?
They turn to US in large numbers. We supply the bodily needs of THOUSANDS ANNUALLY.
We stand at
"THE PARTING OF THE WAYS."
Seeking to turn them all to
NEWNESS OF LIFE.
We, therefore, conduct
4,167 GOSPEL SERVICES ANNUALLY.
YOUR PRAYERS AND SUPPORT SOLICITED.

Many others were visited in their own homes.
Through the Lord's goodness we have been enabled to do good work among the inhabitants of the Lebanon.
More Christian Nurses must be sent.
Will you send us £50, which will maintain a nurse for a whole year? £16 will pay her passage out.
Who will volunteer for the work? Go ye into all the world.—Mark. xvi. 15.
Contributions however small will be thankfully received.

1,463 of the Lord's aged poor, of both sexes, and members of the various branches of the Church of Christ, are now on the books; and upwards of £10,500 per annum are distributed amongst them in pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas. To meet this amount the ordinary income is inadequate. The pensioners live in all parts of the country, and most of them are upwards of seventy years of age.

In the four homes—Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Brighton, and Stamford Hill—180 of the pensioners have peaceful and happy abodes. A visit to these buildings is invited.

FRESH CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE SOCIETY AND ASYLUMS ARE EARNESTLY SOLICITED.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

THE usual flow of speech on public affairs has recommenced with the opening of Parliament. In the debate on the Address there was a frank statement on the part of Ministers in both Houses of the grave position of isolation in which Britain finds herself among the nations of the earth, in whose minds there is a deeply rooted idea that in all our international policy we are actuated by selfish private motives. How far this is the fruit of our past deeds it is needless to inquire just now. What effect it should have on our national consciousness is clear—self-examination before God, and self-restraint both in speech and action. A time of testing and trial is good for nations as well as individuals.

The threatened potato famine in certain districts in Ireland was another feature in the debate on the Address. There has already been an attempt to deal with this evil through private philanthropy, but the trouble seems sufficiently widespread to demand some help on the part of Government. The danger is that the time for action may be wasted in speechifying. Whatever differences of opinion may be found in Parliament and out of it regarding the Irish question, there can be none as to the call for generous treatment of those who are in dire suffering and poverty through the failure of crops, and other causes beyond human control. There is large room for the legitimate action of public pity and sympathy, without incurring the risk of pauperising the poor and suffering.

It has ever been the pride of the English nation that the Divine hand is always recognised in the Speech from the Throne, and that the Queen is a deeply religious woman. It seems almost incredible that in France, on the other hand, the President (whatever his private convictions may be) never mentions the name of the Deity in any public speech or document, nor officially enters a place of worship. When the Czar recently visited Paris his first act was to attend divine worship in Notre Dame. President Faure accompanied him, but it was as a private gentleman, not as head of the State. Says the Echo :—

> The majority of the French people are not responsible for this, but only a bigoted minority, who brag about being Voltairians, forgetting that even Voltaire was not an Atheist, but a Deist.

The Anti-Jewish Crusade in France, of which the popular feelings roused by the Zola trial are a kind of weather-gauge, seems to be assuming alarming proportions. Interviews with M. Max Nordau, one of the leaders in the Zionist movement, and with M. Drumont, the leader of the Anti-Semite party, both witness to the increasing bitterness with which the Jews are everywhere regarded. The former avers that the crusade is fomented mainly by Roman Catholic agencies—a statement which is strongly combated by the latter. Both, however, think that another Bartholomew Massacre is only held back by the firm attitude of the Government. M. Drumont's charges are that the Jews are a drag upon French progress and civilisation, and that their influence is undermining the ramparts of that country's virtues, morality, and religion. Whatever be the truth or falsehood of these charges, it is certain that the social atmosphere on the Continent is electric with suspicion and hatred against this ancient race.

There is a thoughtful and temperate article on "Is England Jew-ridden?" in a weekly contemporary, in which the possibility of a similar outbreak of Anti-Jewish fanaticism is discussed. So far we have been almost untouched by this feeling of race-hatred, but the same charges as find favour on the Continent are gradually being disseminated here. The writer details seven common counts against the Jews, for which he gives considerations pro and con. The only charge which he thinks substantially true is that the Jew so seldom assimilates himself to the national life by intermarriage and identity of interest, thus enjoying the privileges of a citizen while living the life of an alien. The frequent accusation that the poor Jew tends to lower the rate of wages is found untrue, except in the cheap clothing trade, and this has not been "filched" from the British workman, but imported from Germany. On the whole, there is little fear of a dangerous Anti-Semitic movement in England, for which we may be devoutly thankful.

Both from Italy and France come remarkable reports of unrest amongst the Roman Catholic priesthood. While a society has been formed in Rome to pray for the conversion of England to the Romish faith, numbers of priests are abjuring Romanism and embracing the simple Protestant faith. The study of the New Testament has opened their eyes to the grievous errors of the ecclesiastical system in which they have been educated. A public profession of Protestantism was made only a short time ago by four ex-priests in Florence. The editor of an Italian religious newspaper, the Labaro, says :—

> As many as one hundred and fifty priests have applied to him to help them to positions in the Protestant Church.

How wonderful is the silent working of the Spirit of God when the Scriptures are read with an honest attempt to know what is the mind and will of God !

We are surprised to find that the Spectator has joined the ranks of those who advocate the Roman Catholic claim for the establishment of a University of their own at the public expense. In an article on the subject it is stated, in discussing Mr. T. W. Russell's recent contention, that he > takes up the unassailable ground that it is the Roman Catholics of Ireland, not the Protestants, who must be the judges of what is and what is not contrary to Catholic consciences. The Roman Catholics have decided that they cannot conscientiously use the existing University system. They must, then, be given the opportunity to create a University with an atmosphere as Catholic as that of Trinity College is Protestant.

This is a curious reading of the unassailable doctrine of liberty of conscience. Every religious body is, of course, entitled to maintain its own institutions at its own expense, but it is not for that reason justified in asking a Protestant Government to appropriate national money to this purpose. Against this principle the whole strength of Protestant thought and feeling revolts. Considering that our Universities have been granted religious freedom because they are national institutions, to uphold Irish Catholicism in the form of a sectarian University would be a retrogressive step indeed.

Young men would do well to study Rev. Silvester Horne's plain speech in his treatment of the question, "Why do not young men attend places of worship?" in last week's Independent. It is useless to deny the fact as regards the majority of churches. Mr. Horne is somewhat pessimistic as to the reason :

> That the robust male intelligence is too superior to find any sort of satisfaction in church or chapel is (he says) a ridiculous assumption.

The average young woman is "almost incomparably superior in this matter to the average young man," as those who have tried to work amongst both classes can testify. Young men, as a rule, "continue to be mere animals until they have travelled some considerable distance beyond their majority," concentrating their minds on sport, not unassociated with the questionable practices of gambling and betting.

This is straight talk, which deserves the serious consideration of all concerned in the higher interests of young men. That the rising manhood of the nation should be so neglectful of church life, with its call to their better nature and its grand opportunities of service on behalf of others, is a calamity to religion as well as to themselves. Such churches as are fortunate enough to attract them are doing a great work, and are filled with a robust spirit. The minister must make himself accessible and companionable with the young. The secret of attachment is generally found to consist in some work which is given them to do. There will be a brighter time in store for religion when young men are brought to see their responsibility and opportunity in the religious life.

The idea that we can only serve God acceptably and usefully when we serve Him of set purpose and consciously, has a troubling influence on tender souls. It is a mistake. Our breathing is a thing we are least conscious of when our health is best. And this is somewhat of an analogy. The healthy soul lives Christ always, is guided and controlled by Him when least conscious of his nearness. We speak and act according to the ruling power of our being, even when we do not directly refer things to that power. "Much of the best service done for Christ is of an indirect character." This fact does not militate against our longing and seeking and praying to realise the presence of our Lord in times of leisure and quiet, and even in the odd moments of busy hours.

There are few classes of books more harmful and unsettling in their effects than those that promulgate "new Christs" and "new religions.' The implication behind them is that the historic faith and the One Redeemer have in some way been found wanting, presumably because, after so many centuries, society is still honeycombed by the old canker of sin. This feeling seems widespread, and sufficiently strong to upset some people's faith altogether. In view of it two things should ever be borne in mind. Nowhere in the New Testament is there any suggestion that the present world is to be so cleansed from sin as to be a perfect society ("When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"); and, secondly, the nostrums proposed in place of Christianity are purely theoretical, and contain their own refutation, for none of them make the slightest mark on the evils against which they are aimed. What have Secularism, Materialism, Socialism, and Positivism done to lighten the world's evil? Nothing. Some religions profess a high ideal, but make no provision for the man who has failed in its attainment. Christianity is the only religion that seeks out the lost and raises the fallen.

A new edition of "The Pilgrim's Progress" by Dr. John Brown of Bedford gives some interesting information concerning the early circulation of this immortal work. It is commonly thought that, like most good books, its popularity did not begin till long after the death of its author. On the contrary, it seems to have sprung into immediate fame, 100,000 copies being sold during Bunyan's lifetime, i.e., within ten years of its first appearance. It was also printed at Boston in 1681, and a Dutch translation appeared in 1682. Among other renderings, it has now appeared in the languages of Assam, Borneo, West and Central Africa, the South Sea Islands, and some American Indian tribes. Altogether it has been translated into eighty-four languages and dialects, and its popularity is as great as, if not greater than, ever, being the best known of all religious works next to the Bible itself.

Dr. Brown has also published his recently delivered lectures on "Apostolical Succession in the light of History and Fact." It is a thoroughly scholarly and temperate examination of the Roman and Anglican claims, its tone of studious moderation being one of its most impressive features. This is not the work of a fanatic, but of a well-informed and courteous divine, whose opinions must weigh even with his opponents. Until this work appeared there was no up-to-date statement of the Non-conformist-Evangelical position. Stress is specially laid on the mischievous practical effects of restricting supernatural grace and spiritual power to official lines, "as producing estrangement, exclusiveness, and intolerance among Christian men."

A needed protest is being made against the kind of teaching that is creeping into our Board schools under the heading of physiology, in which certain cruel experiments on live animals are described, and object-lessons of a revolting character are sometimes introduced by the teacher. There is a cold-blooded air about such passages as the following, which occur in the authorised text-book :—

> In order to study the functions of the roots of the spinal nerves it is necessary to perform experiments on living animals. If the spinal canal of an animal be laid open, and the anterior roots...be divided, the animal will lose all power of voluntary movement in that limb...but the power of sensation will remain....If we irritate those ends of the posterior roots still in contact with the cord, the animal will exhibit unmistakable signs of the most acute pain.

Apart from the much disputed question whether it is justifiable to advance science through the sufferings and death of dumb animals, the effect of such teachings on the sensitive minds of children must necessarily be disastrous. It cuts indirectly at the very roots of pity and sympathy with the lower creation, and is bound to do moral injury.

The women of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union are greatly stirred by recent developments. Protests have come from France, Sweden, Canada, the United States, and Australia. Resignations of prominent and influential persons have become painfully frequent, the latest being that of Fru Elizabeth Selmer, of Copenhagen, one of the most influential Continental workers, and of the Danish branch of the W.W.C.T.U., of which she is president. The retractation of Lady Henry Somerset may do much to restore harmony, provided her friends will act in wisdom, and not place their esteem for an individual before the interest of the great cause, the whole future of which will largely depend on the action taken in the next few weeks.

With all staunch teetotalers the Sunday closing question will be a burning one until some definite and remedial step is taken. For ourselves, we are quite prepared to view the agitation upon it from an essentially religious point. God has given the Sabbath to man for the highest spiritual purposes. A licence to break the Sabbath, by whomsoever issued, does not touch the law of God for Sabbath observance written so emphatically on the pages of Scripture. Man himself needs one day in seven as a rest day, and God intends him to have it for the spiritual nurture of his immortal nature. In every phase of life the spiritual needs claim supreme consideration. Man's first duty is toward God—man's first call is to faith in God's Christ—and where these control conduct, there can be no hesitancy about Sabbath observance on purely religious grounds.

From an article in a contemporary we learn that there is a great deal of gambling going on in the Army, though betting is strictly forbidden; that officers as well as men are deeply involved; and we are told that it is sometimes ludicrous to find an officer who is well known to be addicted to the habit, lecturing his men against its ruinous consequences. Outwardly precautions against opportunities of indulgence are fairly complete, but when the authorities are tainted with the ruling passion it is not to be wondered at that these precautions are not so strictly enforced as they might be. The only adequate remedy is that the leisure hours of the rank and file should be better provided with healthy recreation and moral training. No repressive measures will be effectual till this is done, for the old adage about "idle hands" is as true of human nature in the Army as outside it.

The young street ruffian is compelling attention by the audacity of his exploits and his dangerousness to the public peace. The Echo, which has been making him a somewhat special study, regards him as the evil product of the condition of life in which there is no healthful and enjoyable recreation. That is only partially true, for many a small town which has places enough for healthful recreation has also a little knot of youths who are capable of making life far from dull. Still, it is true enough to give point to the demand of our contemporary for recreation, as well as education, to be provided by the State:

> Now, the further question arises—Where is the recreation to be given? In the big halls of the Board schools and in the yards of the same schools. And let this fact force itself into our brains. Where the population is the most dense, the streets most crowded, and football, cricket, and such games least possible to poor lads, there the Board schools, with their fine halls and large yards, are most numerous. This is no dream of a dream. The writer has been a recreater these fifteen years in the great city of the poor.

There is no insuperable reason why this suggestion should not become fact. The sooner the better.

The movement just now being revived in favour of "early-closing" is one which claims not only sympathy, but also practical support, from everyone. It is absolutely essential, whether from the point of view of mental, physical, or religious development, that sufficient time should be allotted to rest and recreation. Disclosures from time to time in the Press show how great are the evils which result from unreasonably long hours behind the counter as well as in the factory; and if by the spontaneous action of the British public a universal early closing system is not enforced, it will become imperative to render it compulsory by law, however galling this may be to the free-born but short-sighted Briton.

The Early Closing Movement should command our active interest as among the definitely Christian movements of the day. How can the moral and spiritual welfare of our shop assistants be attended to if they are driven from morning till night, week in, week out, like machines, till their Sundays find them too weary to appreciate the opportunity of public worship, and too worn out even for private devotions? Not one, but two nights in the week should see our shops shut up, not merely a few of the most respectable here and there. No one would then be the loser; all would benefit from having better workpeople.

In spite of its drinking, gambling, and immoralities, we are told by travellers that the Alaska-Klondyke region is the safest and most orderly gold-mining district in the world. The bowie-knife and the revolver are unknown in the North-west, and theft is non-existent. There are no police; all disputes are fairly settled by miners' law, represented by a committee called the Yukon Pioneers. Here is a fine field for mission enterprise, and we are glad that the Canadian Churches are realising their opportunity, and have already sent out some missionaries, while more are going in the spring. It is estimated that no fewer than 200,000 people will be carried into this country before the summer is over; and these will have special need of the influences of the Gospel in the midst of a wild and barbarous country.

The phenomenon of "money triumphant' appears simultaneously at home, on the Continent, and in America. If the rich are wise, they will be careful how they use their power, for any harsh exercise of it will excite resentment. The present is pre-eminently a time when pastors and teachers should "charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good."

Mexico.—Writing from Apartado, 28, Orizaba, Mr. Eglon Harris says: "Convalescent mercies have been continued, and we can now rejoice in good health and renewed strength. There are still some cases of smallpox among the believers, but in none does it seem likely to be fatal. Last week, in the principal temple, our paper, El Sembrador, was often mentioned by the priests, who warned the people neither to read nor touch it. We are glad of this distinction between its teaching and that of Rome. I am about to send copies of 'The Pilgrim's Progress' to all the state governors and members of Congress."

Regulation No Remedy!

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S RETRACTATION.

IN our last issue we inserted in full the letter of Lady Henry Somerset, in which she withdrew from her unfortunate position in relation to the State regulation of vice in India. We refrained, for the time being, from comment, that her retractation might speak for itself. We feel, therefore, the more free to remark upon it now.

We rejoice, in the first place, that it has come at all, for it justifies the principles for which we and other repealers have contended all these years. Lady Henry is convinced of "the inadvisability and extreme danger" of her former proposals, and recognises now that—as long as regulation of any kind can be resorted to as a remedy, it will always be regarded as the one and only panacea...[and] will always be accepted as a convenient substitute [for moral reform].

It is therefore with thankfulness that we note her ladyship's explicit withdrawal of an endorsement in whatever form of the principle of regulation.

This is all good so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough; and, alas! it comes too late to undo the fearful harm caused by her action last year.

A public retractation is a hard and painful process, and we sympathise with Lady Henry in the mental strain which it must have cost her. But she has not been the only sufferer. It were no small thing to sow division and discord in so gigantic an organisation as that over which she presided, so that at the present time the movement is crippled and its machinery out of gear. This might well have elicited an expression of regret, which we hope may yet be forthcoming in some communication to the Association she has so grievously injured.

But more than this. Encouraged by her act, the Government claimed the women of England as its supporters, defied moral sentiment, and, on the crest of the wave of this unhappy dissension, carried the re-enactment of the infamous C.D. Acts among our sisters in India. It will take long and weary years of uphill work to undo the mischief that her ill-advised and hasty action wrought. Meantime, how many Indian women will have succumbed to a shameful life, and gone down to a dishonoured grave? It would not be unreasonable, therefore, to expect her now to demonstrate her sincerity by using her great gifts and influence in every kind of endeavour to secure the repeal of this obnoxious legislation.

The weakest point of Lady Henry's letter is the erroneous assumption on which it is based: that her proposals themselves were moral, and that if the Government had instituted reforms they might have successfully co-existed with regulation. But how can regulation under any circumstances be a remedy? The very terms are self-contradictory. What is morally wrong can never be experimentally right, and this proposition neither casuistry nor expediency can set aside. The only remedy is obedience to the law of God; and if external aids be needed, let them be found in some active measures for the mental, moral, and spiritual improvement of our soldiers in their leisure hours. This is where reform is needed.

The Prince of Wales has presented a window to the Sailors' Institute at Falmouth, which is a branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. At the meeting held at the institution Mr Edward W. Matthews, the general secretary, said on behalf of the parent society that they had received many gifts from his Royal Highness.

Our Child Drunkards.

I.—THE FACT.

MOLOCH was an idol worshipped by the Ammonites with human sacrifices. The Rabbins say that it was made of brass or copper, and placed on a brazen throne. The head was that of a calf, with a crown upon it. The throne and image were hollow, and a furious fire was kindled within them. The limbs of the image were also hollow, so that the fire could penetrate into the whole body. When the arms were red hot, children were thrown into them and were thus burned to death. The sacrifice was accompanied by the noise of drums and timbrels to drown the cries of the victims. Milton describes this murderous worship in "Paradise Lost"—

First, Moloch, horrid king, besmeared with blood
Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
Though for the noise of drums and timbrels loud [fire
Their children's cries unheard, that passed through
To this grim idol.

We regard with unspeakable horror this custom of sacrificing children in worship of heathen deities, whether practised among the Ammonites, Jews, or Hindoos, and yet we have a similar practice at our very doors in Christian England. No longer is Bacchus formally bowed down to in this country, yet the real practical devotion to this idol is deeply rooted among our people. The drinking habits of adults have long been recognised, but it is also a fact that the children of the nation—its future fathers, mothers, and citizens—are being deliberately infected with the cruel, caustic craving for intoxicants, and in their nursery days being developed into habitual drunkards. Dr. More Madden (not himself a total abstainer) says:—

J. L., aged 8, who was admitted to St. Joseph's Hospital, Dublin, Jan. 8, suffering from delirium tremens. In an adjoining bed we had at the same time another juvenile victim of alcoholism, viz., G. R., a newsboy (8), suffering fram blood-poisoning, marasmus, and eczema. Before admission this boy had been in the habit of going to the public-house for his drunken mother's daily supplies of whisky, and on each occasion was rewarded by a sip of the ardent spirit, until its taste and use had become second nature to the unfortunate child, who then afterwards invested his own little earnings as a newsvendor in the same way.

At the same time, in another of my beds, was a little girl (5½)...During her ravings in the course of the disease, and afterwards during her convalescence, this poor child babbled continually, and craved earnestly, to use her own words, for "a drink of porter from the gallon"; and we learned that, from the time she could totter under its weight, she was sent to the public-house for a can of porter, out of which she was accustomed to take a little taste no each occasion....I have now a poor little creature, only 2½, who refuses every suitable nutriment, constantly imploring the good sister for a drink of porter, instead of milk or other food presented to her.

On one occasion, and that, unfortunately, not an exceptional one, I saw three children, all under 10 or 11 years of age, reeling drunk out of a public-house in one of our leading thoroughfares on a Sunday afternoon. One was unable to stand unaided. Another was vomiting at the door of a gin-palace and using filthy imprecations. This sad scene, and those obscene words, uttered in what should have been the gladsome and innocent voice of childhood, appeared to me the strongest possible appeal for legal interference with the traffic of which such were the results.

These facts are painful enough, but we need not cross the Channel to find their equal.

Next week we shall deal with the cause of this fearful abomination.

Canon Christopher, speaking in Oxford at the missionary breakfast on Saturday, said that it seemed to him Uganda was one of the most wonderful chapters in ecclesiastical history that he had ever read. They did find instances in ecclesiastical history of the wonderful and rapid spread of missions in rude tribes, but modern missionaries did not baptise wholesale like they did in those middle ages. They saw the people of Uganda coming forward in their thousands for baptism, and, personally, he considered it the most marvellous instance of missionary work that he knew in the whole history of the Church.

The Testimony of Jesus

Concerning Himself.

By Rev. DR. JAMES CULROSS.

CHRIST THE CENTRE.

THE New Testament is conducted on the principle of giving Jesus Christ the central place. It is not Church, or creed, or doctrine, or even the Bible itself, but the living Christ. The Christian man does not say I know what, but "I know whom I have believed." In the centre of New Testament doctrine there stands a living Person, who loved me and gave Himself for me, and in whom I repose all my hope and trust.

It was the error of the Jews in the time of Christ that they sought salvation in the Book instead of that Person to whom the Book pointed. So Jesus said to them, "Ye search the Scriptures," in which they were right. Their error lay here: "Ye think ye have eternal life in them." But these very Scriptures in which they thought to find life "testified to the Christ," and "ye will not come to Me that ye might have life." The same fatal error is to be found to-day. Men seek for life where it is not to be found.

A single parable may make the truth clear. You live in a country hamlet, and are suffering from an illness which baffles your medical attendant. He advises you to consult a specialist in a neighbouring city who has made your disease a study, and who has cured many who have been suffering like you. You go to the great city accordingly. On your arrival, being a stranger and not knowing your way, you consult a directory, containing a map of the place, with all the streets and squares, and a list of all the professional men and the places where they live. By a little searching you discover the name and address of the physician whom you wish to consult, and the hours when he may be seen. You proceed to the street where he lives; there is his name on a brass plate; he is at home, and can see you; you lay your case before him; he tells you what to do; you do it, and are cured. Who cured you? Not the directory, but the physician. What, then, was the use of the directory? It enabled you to find the physician. And such is the use of the Bible—it tells about Jesus Christ, and brings us to Him. It is not itself our Saviour, but it leads us to the Saviour, directing us to Him. We tell Him our story, and put ourselves into his hands; and He answers our trust by saving us.

YOU FIND THE HOUSE,

Of course there is a Bible in your house. It is a poor house indeed where there is none. Time was when it took gold to purchase a copy; now one can be had for pence. Obed Edom counted himself happy when the Ark of God was under his roof; it made his dwelling a kind of holy place. "The Lord blessed Obed Edom and all his household." A still greater blessing is given, if you only knew it, in the possession of this book. How do you use it? Does it lie in your best room in morocco and gold as an ornament? Is it covered with dust out of sight on a shelf? Or is it worn with much handling, and perhaps soiled with tears? It was Christ's book, which again and again He brought forth: "It is written." It was through his opening it that the hearts of the Emmaus friends were made to "burn within them." It were worth learning to read in one's old age, were it only for the sake of this book alone. The blessing that is in it cannot be told for greatness.

An incident may illustrate this. A wayfarer who had been trudging for hours on a dusty summer day, and who longed for a draught of fresh water, knocked at the door of a wayside cottage. The parents were quarrelling, and the frightened children were gathered crouching in a corner, ragged and half starved to look upon. It was evidently no place where they were accustomed to sing "Home, Sweet Home." The stranger drank the water which was given him in a broken cup, and as he did so he happened to spy a Bible high up on a shelf. Before passing on his way, he spoke kindly to them—for he was a Christian man—and then he sang a little Christian song to the children, and added with a bright look, "Dear friends, I know what would help you.

THERE IS A TREASURE IN THIS HOUSE

of which you are not aware, which would at once make you rich and happy. Will you search for it?" His parting words, though not understood, were not forgotten. When the wife was not looking, the husband searched for the hidden treasure; when the husband was not looking, the wife did the same. At length she discovered it. It was the Bible on the shelf, which her mother had given her as a gift on her wedding day, and which had lain for years unopened. She "happened" to cast her eye upon it, and the thought occurred, What if this is the treasure the stranger meant! She took it down from its perch with trembling fingers and a choking in her throat, and found on the fly-leaf in her mother's handwriting, "The word of thy mouth is better to me than thousands of gold and silver." Eagerly she began to read it. It was all new and very wonderful. By and by she began to pray, and to read it to her children. One day her husband came home, raging like a wild beast. She answered quietly and meekly, and marking the surprise on his face she said, "I have found the treasure the stranger spoke of," and at the same time she laid the Bible reverently down upon the table. He bit his lip and was silent. From this time they began to read it together, and to cry to God over what they read. Gradually the light entered their hearts, the light that shines from the face of Jesus Christ, and with the light a simple trust and a peace that passeth understanding.

It need scarcely be told what followed. It was like the working of a miracle. All things became new, both within and without, looks, tones, ways, as well as hearts, and the lowly home was changed into a nook of Paradise. This is the true use of the Book; it leads the wandering and unhappy soul "to Me"—to Jesus Christ the Saviour.

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

THE readers of The Christian who are praying for God's blessing on my American tour will rejoice to hear of the marvellous way in which He has owned my words in Detroit and Chicago. The largest churches have been crowded to the doors; all the Evangelical ministers have united in extending to me their welcome, and have attended the whole series of meetings, and, above all, the power of the Holy Spirit has moved upon us. I have never felt more deeply his gracious co-witness and help.

At the meeting in Chicago, in which the ministers of the city said farewell, and at which about 1000 ministers and students were present, we had a never-to-be-forgotten blessing. I am now leaving for Kansas, St. Louis, and Washington. I ask for prayer that I may be safely brought back to my own pulpit for the first Sunday in March. F. B. Meyer.

Suggestive Readings.

THE MYSTERIES OF THE KINGDOM.—III.

"Why speakest Thou unto them in Parables?" "Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, but to them it is not given." Matt. xiii. 10, 11.

THE OCCASION OF THESE PARABLES.

THE parables of our Lord which gave his disciples to understand the mysteries of the Kingdom began to be spoken after the Pharisees had said, "He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the demons casteth out demons." And after his friends and kinsmen, among whom was his mother, came seeking Him; some of whom even said, "He is beside Himself." Then He replied: "Whosoever shall do the will of God, my Father, Who is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." For the New Creation is not natural but spiritual, and they who do the will of God are born of God, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection (Matt. ix. 34; xii. 22-50; Mark iii. 21, 35; Luke xx. 36; Rom. vi. 1-11).

The same day, we are significantly told, "went Jesus out of the house, and sat by the seaside"—as "his own" received Him not, He goes where whosoever will may hear his voice. Then He began to speak in parables, which were intended to reveal to them that were within the circle of his believing followers, and to veil from them that were without, the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven.

WHY CALLED THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

For a reply to the question, Why does Matthew use the term "Kingdom of the Heavens," while the other Evangelists say "Kingdom of God"? we must refer to Daniel iv. 25, 26. King Nebuchadnezzar must go among the beasts, and seven times pass over him, until he knows "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will...And his kingdom shall be sure unto him as soon as he shall have known that the Heavens do rule." The Most High is in antithesis to Nebuchadnezzar; and the heavens to Great Babylon which he had built. The Gospel of Matthew was written for Jews. They had, however, no king who could be referred to in antithesis to the Most High; but they had the expectation of an earthly kingdom with earthly glory; and therefore it was appropriate for Matthew to use the term Kingdom of the Heavens. Although the two terms, as used above in Daniel, are equivalent, as they are also as used by the Evangelists, yet, strictly speaking, Kingdom of God is a larger term than Kingdom of the Heavens, for the former speaks of God the Creator, the latter of the heavens which He created. The Jews needed to be pointed from the earth, where their hopes were concentrated, to the heavens, which are higher than the earth, as the thoughts and ways of God are higher than the thoughts and ways of men.

THE VISION OF ISAIAH VI.

Isaiah's remarkable prophecy (vi. 11, 12), which is quoted more frequently in the New Testament than any other Old Testament prophecy, appears to me to mean that flesh and blood could not be healed so as to be fit for the Kingdom. The worn-out garment cannot be patched with a new piece; the new wine must have new bottles; "If any one be in Christ he is a new creation." The Evangelist John profoundly adds: "These things said Esaias when he saw his glory, and spake of Him," in whom, sent of God, in the likeness of sinful flesh, the old creation was judged and doomed, that the sons of God, the children of the resurrection, might be made free, by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, from the law of sin and death; that the righteous requirement of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit."—John xii. 41; Rom. viii. 1-4.

If men as related to Adam could be converted, and forgiven, and healed, it would be of no lasting benefit; their fallen nature would again bring forth fruit after its kind. Therefore, the Evangelist who adds concerning the vision of Isa. vi. "These things spake Esaias when He saw his glory and spake of Him," is the one who says, "As many as received Him, to them gave He right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name; who were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." "Ye must be born again." And he it is who records the Lord's intercessory prayer, "And now, O Father, glorify Thou me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was....And the glory which Thou gavest me I have given them: that they may be one as we are." If the old garment had been patched; if the new wine had been put into old skins; if Adam's seed could have been turned and healed, and nothing more, they would not have gained the right to be children of God in the Gospel sense, for they would not have been born with the birth which is "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man; but of God." Nor could they have received the glory which the Son had with the Father before the world was. Nor could they have entered, nor inherited, nor even perceived the Kingdom of God: which flesh and blood cannot inherit, and which can only be seen and entered by those who have been born again. (John i., iii., xii., xvii.)

This great truth of the Gospel was indeed contained in the very record of Isaiah's vision: "Then said I, Lord, how long? And He answered, Until the cities be wasted without inhabitants, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate [desolate with desolation]....And if there should yet be a tenth in it, this shall again be consumed; (yet) as the terebinth and the oak, though cut down, have their stock remaining (even so) a sacred seed shall be the stock thereof." How true it is that

The New is in the Old concealed;
The Old is in the New revealed.

That sacred seed is "the firstborn of every creature;" the root as well as the offspring of David; and He said, "Before Abraham was I AM"—the eternal self-existent One. We were baptised into his death, that, like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Rom. vi. reveals the truth that was concealed in Isa. vi.

THE SOWER AND THE SEED.

The fundamental parable of the Gospel is that of the sower. It is unrestricted by dispensational limitations. It was uttered beside the Sea of Galilee of the Gentiles, and the sower is Jesus, the Son of Man. Not Jesus as the Jew's Messiah, nor as Israel's King; but Jesus in his relation to the human race. "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man" (37).

THE SEED IS "THE WORD OF THE KINGDOM."

This definition of the Gospel seed (verse 19) must never be lost sight of. The Gospel is the Gospel of the Kingdom. The word is the word of the Kingdom. The word of the Gospel is therefore the word of the Gospel of the Kingdom.

In Acts viii. there are seven definitions of Apostolic teaching :—

1. They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word.
2. Philip preached Christ unto them.
3. Preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.
4. Samaria had received the word of God.
5. Testified and preached the word of the Lord.
6. Preached the Gospel.
7. Philip preached unto him Jesus.

These certainly are not seven Gospels, but seven definitions of the same Gospel, and the idea prevalent through all of them is the Kingdom of God—the Reign of God.

In Acts xx. the Apostle Paul, in two consecutive verses (24, 25), speaks (1) of the ministry he had received of the Lord Jesus to testify the Gospel of the grace of God; and knows (2) that all among whom he had gone preaching the Kingdom of God should see his face no more. Here "the Gospel of the grace of God" and "the Kingdom of God," if not interchangeable terms, are, as in the above case, different aspects or relations of the same Gospel. Only from the throne could grace come.

THE DISEASE AND THE REMEDY.

It is a sound axiom that "to know oneself diseased is half the cure." If we know the disease from which our fallen race is suffering we shall be able better to understand the remedy which the only wise God our Saviour has provided for us. The disease is that we have become impregnated with the mind, the nature, of the rebel and usurper. God is the great King. Lucifer sought to be God. When Adam was created God put all things under his feet. But Satan tempted him with the desire to be as God, and by yielding to the tempter he became his captive and his slave. After 4000 years of this bondage, during which Satan was the tempter and tyrant of mankind, and the accuser of all who believed God, the glad tidings of deliverance and salvation were announced. They could only be of one kind—the restoration of the race to the Reign of God. "The Reign of God is at hand: repent ye and believe the glad tidings." Ruin came by believing Satan and submitting to his evil rule. Salvation can only come by believing God and by obedience to his rule of love. Jew and Gentile rejected the good news, and crucified their King. That summed up the case against man as he was descended from Adam, and proved that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. But the Gospel remained the same: just as Jeremiah's testimony was unaltered, though the king cut up and burned the written copy. It was rewritten, with the addition of many like words.

Whether it be before or after the death and resurrection of our Lord and Saviour; or whether it be the Kingdom within, which is righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, or the coming of the Kingdom in its mighty and manifested glory: there is, and in the nature of things there can be, only one Gospel for fallen man—that God will pardon his rebellion and receive him back in allegiance to his rule. That is the beginning: all else follows. M.

The Treatment of Hydrophobia. — The February issue of The Zoophilist is accompanied by a supplement giving particulars of 373 victims of the Pasteurian system of inoculation. With much more pleasure our contemporary reports, on the authority of Dr. Edward Haughton, the medical officer in charge, that a patient treated at the London Buisson Institute, Upper Norwood, is alive and well. The patient was a keeper in the Dogs' Home, who was twice bitten by different dogs, and twice treated. We have on previous occasions informed our readers that the Buisson treatment is by means of a system of baths.

HOME MISSIONS.

Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel.

THIS useful institution having attained its majority, Rev. Thomas Jackson, its present superintendent, invited a number of friends interested in the work to gather at the Institute for prayer and thanksgiving. After singing and prayer, Mr. Jackson explained that the work has been signally owned of God, some 7000 lads having been brought under direct Christian influence, many of whom are now filling positions of responsibility in business life and Church work. The Institute premises are a noble monument of the devotion and faith of Mr. Henry Hill, the founder, and of the many Christian workers who co-operated with him. All that was embraced by the past services of the Institute to the youth of London was traceable on its human side to a letter which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, and he ventured to affirm that among the many philanthropic and Christian agencies that had been either originated or greatly stimulated and helped by that paper, the Working Lads' Institute was not among the least. Mr. Jackson added that in a spirit of absolute dependence upon God he had entered upon the work, and he invited his friends to share with him the joy that prosperity evoked.

Various speakers testified to the great blessing that had been conferred upon families in the district through the influence exerted by lads attending the Institute, and of the counter attraction furnished by it to the low music halls and public-houses of the district. The captain of one of the large steamships that visit the London docks recently testified to the debt of gratitude he owed to the Institute. The manager of one of the largest firms in New York a few weeks ago stated that both spiritually and socially he owed his all to the Institute. A letter was read from the leading member of a provincial firm, in which he stated: "As a boy of sixteen years of age, and new to London life, I was fortunate enough to join the Institute as a member. Both helpers and students were the cause of assisting to mould my character in the right direction." Other testimonies were given to the value of the work done in the past years. Persons who may wish to see any orphan or country lad befriended that has recently come to London, and who is in need of a Christian home, may communicate with Rev. Thomas Jackson, 137, Whitechapel-road, E.

A Pressing Need.

COMING here as the minister's wife a short time ago from the South, where I was privileged to do some little work for the Master, I feel that He calls me to do something for Him here also. We have over 3500 souls connected with the congregation, scattered among twelve villages. There is one church for all these and five district meeting-places. These meeting-places are poor beyond description, with mud floors, mud and stone walls, thatched roofs, and no regular form of seating. In such houses mission and aggressive Christian work in a climate like ours is exceedingly difficult, if not dangerous, particularly in winter.

To attempt any regularly organised Sabbath-school work in these meeting-places, where the children in many instances are ill fed and poorly clad, is simply impossible. One of these districts claims our attention first. It is more than three miles from the church, with a population of over 700, and no place for meeting, either week-day or Sabbath, other than as already described. The people are very poor, being all fisher folk, and, notwithstanding their poverty, they have already begun to contribute towards the expense of a meeting-house among themselves. I cannot help admiring their general sobriety, cleanliness, and great respect for any who belong to Christ. My husband tells me that he knows of no family amongst them without worship night and morning.

Our difficulty is how to maintain and use definitely for the Lord this devoted spirit without a meeting-place. The young need special attention, for many of them leave us for various parts of the world, and we wish to secure them for Christ before parting with them. This cannot be done without a common meeting-house and the power of the Holy Ghost. (MRS.) CATHA ISOBEL MACLEOD.

The Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society.

THIS well-known society has since 1841 been closely identified with the progress of the cause of Medical Missions. Since that time the society has sent out considerably more than one hundred fully qualified medical missionaries into the foreign field, and at the present time thirty-two (including eight ladies) are in training. The students are drawn from all parts of the United Kingdom and Colonies, they belong to all the Evangelical denominations, and are free to offer their services to any missionary society. The directorate of the society is equally unsectarian, and comprises many well-known medical men; Sir Thomas Grainger Stewart, one of the Queen's physicians, being president.

The society has been enabled to establish several flourishing medical missions in the foreign field, and still supports such in Nazareth, Damascus, and Agra (a Training Institution for Indian Christian young men). In addition, twenty years ago, the Livingstone Memorial Medical Missionary Training Institute was inaugurated. This is placed in the very midst of the moral and spiritual wastes of our home heathenism, for the alleviation of human suffering and the salvation of the lost, and at the same time for the training of the young missionary who thus follows in the footsteps of his Master. During the past year the new cases treated numbered over 12,000; 17,181 visits were paid to the dispensary, for surgery and dressings 7668, and the visits to patients numbered 15,560. The Convalescent Home had been occupied by 225 patients, who made an average stay of fourteen days.

The society has not been for some time enjoying the income necessary for this great work. In spite of the most earnest efforts on the part of the officials, the ordinary contributions remain almost stationary. This is a matter which calls for earnest consideration. That a society doing such a noble work should find its operations hindered is to be regretted. It is hoped this will be remedied at an early date.

The British Medical Society is to pay its third visit to Edinburgh in July, and it is purposed to have a demonstration of medical missions by having a medical mission museum arranged for. The superintendent is Dr. Sargood Fry, 56, George-square, Edinburgh.

On the Blackdown Hills.

THE twenty-seventh narrative of facts concerning the Lord's work on the Blackdown Hills in Devon and Somerset has been issued by Mr. W. J. H. Brealey. From the interesting story we learn:—

"The work of the Lord in all its various branches has been sustained by the good hand of God, and the earnest band of diligent fellow-workers have continued their self-denying and patient work with the utmost unity and fervour. The day and Sunday-schools still continue to give reason for thanksgiving to God, and from them souls have been won for the Lord Jesus. The Gospel and other services have been continued in the various mission rooms with much to cheer, numbers and interest continuing unabated in most cases; and the Gospel, being preached with no uncertain sound, is made a blessing to the hearers.

"Sometimes the seed sown springs up at once, at others no present results are seen; but the Word of God, being 'incorruptible,' must live, and, though buried for long years, cannot be lost when once it is sown in the heart. Many deeply interesting cases of conversion have cheered us in our service."

Among the events of the year mention is made of the death of Mr. J. B. Radcliffe, who carried on the work at Bishopswood, and the removal of Mr. Brealey from Clayhidon to Clevedon. Mr. Showell and his fellow-helpers have been well sustained in their work, and Mr. Brealey has been blessed in his own endeavours and his occasional visits and oversight. Mr. Brealey's address is 10, Albert-road, Clevedon.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS AT HOME.

(Concluded.)

THE perverse teaching of the Higher Critics, so-called, plays into the hands of all such delusions, and is calculated to foster the production of more spurious Scriptures like the Book of Mormon. For men must have something to believe, and as the "Higher Critics" pervert the Holy Scriptures, draw away from the truth, and draw away disciples after themselves, they leave them at the mercy of the many false Christs and false apostles, anti-Christs, whom the Lord Jesus and his apostles predicted in the latter days.

Nevertheless, there is much to be learned from "the Latter-day Saints." Their tithing system provides them with funds, and obviates the need of collections, of which there are none. The division of their community into wards, with visitors to every family, keeps them in touch with each individual, so that, theoretically at least, there is no poverty. At the same time, this visitation may serve the purpose of espionage, so that not only the circumstances, but the thoughts and tendencies of the visitee be known and reported at headquarters.

The present President, Wilford Woodruff, is a kindly, simple-hearted, and honest man, in his ninety-second year. I regretted my inability to accept his invitation to drive me out to his house, which would have afforded the opportunity of personal intercourse with him and his family. Previous presidents have been shrewd, astute, and able men; sometimes uncompromising and unscrupulous in their love and exercise of power.

We met at Salt Lake City, and travelled to San Francisco with, Mrs. Stenhouse, author of "The Tyranny of Mormonism" (Sampson Low & Co., London). She told us many things, always speaking kindly of the people, but lamenting a life wrecked by delusive teachings and tyrannous rule.

A Christian man of business told me that he thought the Mormons were as good as any; and he would rather have them on his books than others, whether professing Christians or not; for he was more sure of getting his debts paid.

A disciple of Col. Ingersoll, on the other hand, who has given much attention to Mormon history and literature, is very strong against their teachers and leaders.

Every young man is liable to be sent out as a missionary, and if Brigham Young found one becoming lax in the faith, or even loose in conduct, he would send him out without purse or scrip as a missionary. The young fellow had to read his books and study the teachings, and this withdrew him from the mischief which Satan finds for idle hands to do; and such missionaries would often return steadied by the weight of responsibility, strengthened by contact with men, and educated by what they saw and heard in the lands through which they travelled; from our point of view, qualified also to spread a mischievous spiritual contagion. There are 1500 of these missionaries in various parts of the world. And among other changes of tactics, they are no longer endeavouring to bring converts to this Zion among the mountains, but to establish centres in every possible new locality.

Of course, the rank and file know little of the doctrines which they profess to believe. If even the majority of the members of Evangelical Churches would be unable to state clearly almost any of the truths they are understood to hold, it is not strange that these should be no better instructed. It is often pathetic, and even pitiful, to hear questions on abstruse subjects asked by some who have no knowledge of foundation truths.

The Tabernacle and the Temple are two remarkable structures—the former for its ugliness, the latter for its architectural beauty. This was forty years in building; it was begun in 1853, and dedicated on the same date in 1893. It is impervious to the public, only being used for marriages, baptisms for the dead, laying on of hands, and other functions. The Tabernacle, where the general meetings are held, looks from the outside like a Noah's ark turned bottom upwards. Inside it is commodious and convenient, and its acoustic properties are excellent. It seats 9000 people, and 2000 more can be crowded into it, yet a pin dropped at one end can be heard at the other. It is shaped like an egg, and the roof, made of wood, is the largest in the world unsupported by pillars. It possesses one of the finest organs in the States, and has a choir of 600, for whom seats are provided on each side of the organ, and of whom about 400 habitually attend. The leader of the choir, Mr. Stephens, is a Carmarthenshire man, who went out when a child, and by sheer industry, with a minimum of education, developed the musical talent which was born in him. He gained the first prize at the Mormon Jubilee for setting to music the Pioneer Ode, and the second prize at the World's Fair was won by him and his choir, the first being taken by the choir from Wales.

The Bible in China.

A VERY striking movement in favour of the spread of the Gospel has lately taken place in China. For some time it has been known that the Bible has had an entrance into the Emperor's Palace. First, it was the young Empress who had been under the influence of Christian teachers, and it was said, soon after her marriage, that there was daily prayer, and that the Bible was read frequently by some of the ladies in the Court.

Little was heard of this movement for some years, then came the presentation of a copy of the New Testament to the Dowager Empress on her sixtieth birthday. She graciously accepted the gift, but its effect on her mind is but little known. A few days after the presentation, however, one of the Palace officials called at a book-shop where Bibles were sold, and inquired for a copy. He purchased one of the best that was to be had, but returned in a few days to point out a flaw in the printing, and request an exchange for a more perfect copy. The bookseller, on opening the book, remarked some Chinese characters which were written in a very remarkable style. Commenting on them, the Palace eunuch told him that it was the Emperor's own writing, that the Emperor had been reading the book, and desired a more perfect copy. Selections of Christian books likely to interest have since been sent in from time to time to the Palace, and kindly received. Now comes of answer to the prayers which have accompanied and followed them. I quote from a recent number of the North China Herald and Consular Gazette, one of the most reliable and influential papers in the Far East:—

"The young Emperor has himself opened the little door which admits the first small stream of a flood of mighty waters...We see the result of this in what we have heard has happened during the autumn examinations. The unfeigned surprise with which, for example, the following question was read by ten thousand students in one of the examination halls may be imagined: 'What do you know of the re-peopling of the earth by Noah and his family after the Flood?' The examiner sent down from Pekin who put this question had been reading the Old Testament, copies of which are now in circulation among the higher classes in the metropolis. The text-book recommended was the Old Testament; in consequence there was a great demand for whole Bibles, and fifty copies were sold in one day. This is the course events are taking in China at the present time, and the change is certainly a remarkable one. The statesmen of China, her scholars, and her students are studying the Bible because it is the classic of Christian countries. They have to become acquainted with Western religion, Western science, Western political economy, and Western philosophy, and they naturally read our Bible among the other books current in Western countries."

For years past efforts have been made to reach the young Emperor with Christian truth, and these have not been unsuccessful, so we may hope that the reasons put forward by the North China Herald are not the only ones which have induced him to introduce—or allow to be introduced—the Bible as a subject for study by Chinese students. One of the earliest ways, I am told, by which any teacher of Christian truth got admission to the Emperor was the following. Thank God that other and purer teaching has reached him since; yet it may be of interest.

Some years ago the Romanists had a cathedral near to the Emperor's Palace in Peking, permission to build it having been extorted after the Tientsin massacre, I believe. This was a great eyesore to the Chinese, who, after many efforts, managed to have it given over to them, on arranging for the building of another in another part of the city. A priest told me that in vacating this they purposely

The Emperor heard of and visited it, and the consequence was that he applied for someone to teach him to play, and was supplied with a native Roman Catholic teacher, from whom after a while he learnt many things, and came to be interested in Christianity. He soon found out that there were other teachers, and has been led on, by God's providence, even to read His own pure Word of Life.

God has very graciously answered prayer. Some half-dozen of 1893 have become between seventy to eighty thousand Christian Chinese in 1897, but let us not slack in prayer for Kuang Su, the young Emperor, or his hundreds of millions of interesting people. Let us plead that God may yet save a hundredfold more, and lead the Emperor himself to the foot of the cross. Let us also ask that the door so graciously opened may be kept open.

Should the present German expedition be the beginning of a move to partition China among European Powers, it may mean a serious, and a very serious, hindrance to the spread of the Gospel there. Let us claim for China the fulfilment of the promise, "I have set before thee an open door, that no man shall shut it."

The Gospel in South America.

IN a recent letter, Señor Olsson, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, reports the opening of a Mission Home at La Plata, where new workers will stay for a time to study the land and its language and needs. Mr. J. A. Price has taken charge of this important institution. At Buenos Ayres Mr. Olsson has opened a mission-room, which has been taken in charge by Mr. W. D. Smart, who is at the head of the Training Institute for native workers. During Mr. Olsson's absence in the interior, Mr. Smart will act as secretary and treasurer of the Mission.

Mr. Olsson adds: "Good news has been received from Chili, Peru, and Ecuador. Mr. Weiss, who is working in Victoria, in the south of Chili, reports sixty converts in two months. Pray that all hindrances may be taken out of my way, and that I may commence my journey; also that sufficient money may be forthcoming for the work on the Pacific Coast, and in the Valley of the Amazon."

One of the workers associated with the Mission, Mr. W. A. Cook, has visited Goyaz, in the heart of Brazil. He writes: "Everywhere I found a readiness to receive the Word of God; the people seem disgusted with Romanism. The capital of Goyaz is ready for occupation, and the work should begin with a series of evangelistic meetings....There are many Indians scattered all along the Araguaya river, and they earnestly invite us to instruct them."

Communications regarding Mr. Olsson's great undertaking may be addressed to Mr. H. S. Ridings, 31, Carson-road, West Dulwich, S.E.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, February 20.

"Be it done unto thee even as thou wilt."—Matt. xv. 28 (R.V.).

THIS was a remarkable permission. It is not often that Christ takes the key to his stores out of the bunch which hangs at his girdle, and entrusts it to a soul, saying in effect, Take what you will. It is a great matter for God to say, "Of the work of my hands, command ye Me," as though He were prepared to take his commands from his child. What conditions must be fulfilled before such words are spoken to ourselves?

1. We must intercede for others. This woman came for her child. We must always be on our guard when we ask much for self, lest somehow our requests be prompted by self-aggrandisement. If we do ask for power, wisdom, or likeness to Christ, let it be that we may help others better. The Apostle says that Christ "loosed us from our sins...and made us priests." (Rev. i. 5, 6, R.V.) We all need this loosing, that we may become intercessors.

2. We must put Christ in his right place. The Canaanitish woman came to Him as the Son of David, and He answered her not a word. She had no claim on Him as such. That He was the Jews' Messiah couldn't help her. She gave him that title by courtesy and hearsay. It was necessary that by his silence she should be driven to find Him for herself. When she said, Lord, help me, worshipping at his feet, she was a step nearer the goal.

3. We must answer his affirmations with yea. He told her what she was. She was an alien and outcast. She was not part of the chosen family; she must understand her true position, and take it. And she did. She said, Yea, Lord. If you can perfectly accept God's will, so that it shall take the place of your own, God can let you have your way, because it will be his.

MONDAY, February 21.

"Peter took Him, and began to rebuke Him, saying, Pity Thyself, Lord: this shall not be unto Thee."—Matt. xvi. 22 (marg.).

Throughout his life, these words were perpetually flung at the heart of Christ. Spare Thyself this hunger, the devil said in the wilderness, on the threshold of his public ministry; spare Thyself this agonising death, he said again in the garden, on the eve of the crucifixion.

It is noticeable that the cross was surrounded by voices that repeated the same words. They that passed by it wagged their heads, and said, "Thou that destroyest the temple and buildest it in three days, save Thyself." The chief priests mocked Him, with the scribes and elders, and said, "Can He not save Himself?" The soldiers also mocked Him, coming to Him, offering Him vinegar, and saying, "If Thou art the king of the Jews, save Thyself." And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on Him, saying, "Art not Thou the Christ? save Thyself and us." All these voices spoke after the methods of human wisdom.

This made our Lord turn so quickly on Peter, saying, "Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art a stumblingblock unto Me." How often are the same words addressed to us: "Pity thyself. Have mercy on your sensitive human nature; do not be too lavish with your money; give yourself a little more licence." But it cannot be. You cannot save others and yourself as well. Those that would follow Jesus in his steps of redemptive help to mankind, must deny themselves, take up their cross, and follow Him into rejection, shame, spitting, and the grave.

"As they were coming down from the mountain."—Matt. xvii. 9 (R.V.).

The Mount of Transfiguration might, if the Lord had so willed it, have been a footstool by which He could have stepped back into his native home. It does not seem unlikely that all mankind would have left the world by some such gradual fading into the world of spirits, had not sin entered into the world, and death by sin. As a perfectly sinless man, Adam would have gone this way, changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; and the second Adam, in the course of his human life, reached the same point from which he might have been clothed upon with immortality, and translated that he should not see death. If this were the case, and there is every reason for thinking it, what new beauty there is in this coming down from the mountain side.

Of his own free will Christ tore Himself away from the open door of heaven, from the blessed society that appeared on the border-line, from the near proximity of the embrace of his Father's bosom, and deliberately turned to face an altogether different exodus. He knew all that awaited Him, the agony and bloody sweat, the cross and passion, but He did not hesitate. He heard the call of the cross. He knew that only through death could He destroy him that had the power of death, and deliver men. He knew that as the Lamb of God He could put away the sin of the world only by sacrifice. Moreover, He knew there was no alternative. Through the dark haze He saw the multitudes that no man can number, and heard the rapturous song, "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God." And for the joy that was set before Him He came down from the mountain, endured the cross, despising the shame, and through death became crowned with glory and honour as the Divine Saviour.

WEDNESDAY, February 23.

"If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother.—Matt. xviii. 15.

"Where is thy brother, child?"

"I don't know, Lord; I have not seen or spoken to him these many days; and, as far as I am concerned, I would not mind if I never saw him again; he is as good as lost to me."

"Hast thou wronged him, that this gulf has yawned between you? Remember that I said, if when coming to the altar, thou shouldest remember that thy brother had some complaint against thee thou wert to leave thy gift, and seek to be reconciled; then come and offer thy gift."

"Yes, Lord, I remember well. But that is not the case now; my brother has nothing against me; he is in the wrong, not I; he has trespassed against me, not I against him. It is therefore for him to come to me, not for me to go to him."

"Is it likely that he will come to thee?"

"I do not think it is, Lord. He is not one of thy disciples; and it is most unlikely that he will ever cross my threshold to apologise and ask forgiveness."

"Then thou must go to him, and tell him his fault between thee and him alone, and do thy best to win him back."

"But I think he is most likely to put the wrong construction on my going, and to account that I feel myself in the wrong."

"Thou must go and tell him, and try to win him."

"But we are of such different temperaments, that it will really be better for us to live apart."

"Thou art thy brother's keeper, and thou must win him out of his fault, and lovelessness, and wandering. He is getting harder and more callous every hour. He is drifting away, not from thee only, but from Me. I know he was in the wrong at first, but thou art in the wrong now, and thou must go and tell him his fault, and try to wash his feet and win him back.

THURSDAY, February 24.

"Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it was not so."—Matt. xix. 8.

This is a very profound principle, which is of immense value in dealing with Scripture. There were certain precepts and commands given to Israel, which are not of lasting obligation, because they were stages in their moral discipline and education. It would have been impossible to lift them suddenly from the degradation into which they had sunk in Egypt, to the glorious levels of Isaiah or the Sermon on the Mount: so God's dealings with them were graduated and progressive.

Such were the regulations about a plurality of wives, the keeping of bond slaves, the treatment of captives, the destruction of their foes. Thus, our Lord says, Moses interposed a parenthesis of legislation, which was a stage higher than anything known among the surrounding nations, though it was not God's earliest or highest code.

What was true of Israel, is true of us. We do not realise, in the first stage of our redemption, all that is included in the word "Sin." We are like men enveloped in morning mist, which permits them to descry only the bolder outlines of the cliffs around them, but as yet veils the minuter eminences or depressions. As the mist clears surrounding objects become ever more distinctly defined: so that we know more of God, we know ourselves better, and realise what sin is, and come to see it where we had never guessed its presence. Thus we condemn to-day what we permitted five years ago. Christ makes us more sensitive than Moses could. As hearts lose their hardness, the unspeakable sinfulness of sin becomes more apparent and grievous.

FRIDAY, February 25.

"We are able."—Matt. xx. 22.

This is the cry of youth—ardent, impulsive, self-confident. It does not wait to calculate the ridges and hummocks that lie between it and its goal, but supposes that it will be able to skate the entire distance over the glistening azure-blue ice. Without hesitation it counts on being able to brave all difficulty, surmount all hardship, drink the cup, and be baptised with the baptism: Over and over again we have cried in the dawn, as our guide has recounted the perils of the coming hours, "We be well able to vanquish them all."

But these men slept in Gethsemane, forsook the Master when He was arrested, and one of them at least failed Him at the cross. Creature-might cannot carry us in the hour of our greatest peril. We can vaunt ourselves as we may; but we have to learn that we can only follow Christ in his cup and baptism, after we have been endued with the Spirit of Pentecost.

But how different were the experiences of these two men. To one the cup and baptism came swiftly, when he fell beneath the beheading axe of Herod (Acts xii. 2); to the other they came in long, long years of sharing in the patience of Jesus Christ. These are different aspects of the same fellowship of suffering. We may not be able to cherish the assurance of sitting right and left of the throne, if that means power, authority, glory. But if it means nearness to Jesus, we may count on it with the utmost assurance. If we overcome, He will give us to sit with Him upon his throne, in a fellowship cemented by common sufferings, experiences, and victories.

SATURDAY, February 26.

"All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matt. xxi. 22.

This was a very remarkable answer, showing that the Lord, in his human life, was the Author and Finisher of the life of faith. He did not quote his Divine power and Godhead as the cause of the withering of the fig-tree; but proceeded to give a lesson on faith, asserting that what He had done they could do, if only they had a similar faith, and doubted not.

Where we get wrong in prayer is that we are so self-willed. We set ourselves to pray for things; we vow to sit up all night to bring God round to our way of thinking; we use strong cryings, tears, and protestations; we try to work ourselves into a frame of faith; we think we believe; we shut the doors of our heart against the tiniest suggestion or suspicion that we do not believe. And then we are surprised if the fig-tree does not wither, or the mountain remove.

Where are we wrong? It is not hard to see. There is too much of self and the energy of the flesh in all this. We can only believe for a thing when we are in such union with God that his thought and purpose can freely flow into us, suggesting what we should pray for, and leading us to that point in which there is a perfect sympathy and understanding between us and the Divine mind. Faith is always the product of such a frame as this. It is impossible to doubt that God will grant petitions which He Himself has led us to desire.

God's Methods with Man:

Past, Present, and Future.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

VI.—The Dawn of a Golden Age.

We come now to consider the apocalypse of Jesus—that is, his coming to the earth with his people after the events in the heavens described last week. What will be the condition of things upon the earth at this appearing? The world will be groaning under the most awful despotism it has ever known; for the removal of the Church will have issued in the triumph of Gentile power centred in the antichrist who shall exercise unparalleled rule over the nations, and who will then be at the zenith of his fame. Half way through Daniel's missing week of years the Man of Sin will break his covenant with the unbelieving Jews, gathered in Jerusalem, who will become a persecuted, oppressed, and despised people. During this period, too, there is to be terrible martyrdom of those who, through the stress of the times, yield to the claims of Christ, as presented by his remaining witnesses. All the latest discoveries of science and the developments of earthly progress, so called, will be pressed into the service of antichrist. Some of us have read certain books, the titles of which I cannot recall for the moment, in which the authors have allowed their fancy loose rein with regard to coming wars. I believe that in a popular periodical a story of this kind has been running, the writer working out in a speculative way what is likely to be the ultimate issue of the present arming of the nations and the endeavour to find new and improved methods for the expeditious slaughter of men. Think of the high efficiency attained upon the great continent of Europe in warlike machinery. In the writings referred to there is, unconsciously it may be, an element of truth. The lawless one will avail himself of all the results of scientific research and invention; and Christ shall return with his saints to find the peoples of the earth of an oppression far more terrible than all previous experience can furnish, and exceeding the wildest flights of imagination.

In this connection we may refer again to the Scripture quoted on a previous occasion (2 Thess. ii. 7, 8), where we learn that the lawless one is to be destroyed by the epiphany of Christ's parousia; that is, by the stage of his coming spoken of in other places as his apocalypse or manifestation. The same event is exactly foretold in Zech. xiv. 1-5. In previous addresses I have made quotation from Rev. xix.; and if you will read from verse 11 to xx. 4, you will find a description which in its simplicity is more powerful and clear than anything that can be said about it. When Jesus is revealed from heaven with the whole company of his saints, his coming will be the destruction of the Man of Sin and the confusion of the confederacy of the nations against God and his Christ. His presence shall scatter the evil which has been brought to so prominent a head, being rampant in the places of earthly authority. The destruction of the Man of Sin will be the day of Christ's vindication before all the earth. The Master has been hidden now for nineteen hundred years, and the scoffing world says: "Where is the promise of his coming?" Alas! that the infidelity of the ungodly should have crept into the very Church itself, so that there are not wanting those who have tried to undermine our holy faith by seeking to rob it of everything that is supernatural and beyond explanation by laws which men think they understand. But as surely as God is upon his throne the Man of Nazareth and Capernaum, the Man of the city and of the village, He whom crowds heard speak in the olden days, is coming back to our earth, and shall destroy the most awful representation of the spirit of lawless godlessness that the world has ever seen. Christ's people also shall be vindicated when it is seen that the foolish, weak, and non-existent things put on wisdom, strength, and very present power. Then, too, shall the earth have its opportunity as never before.

May I warn you against spiritualising this truth? Christ's reign will be more direct and absolute than that of any monarch whose name is upon our tongues to-day. With all my heart and soul I believe that the only effective rule for humanity is an absolute monarchy. For a little while the heavens have received Christ; but earth's true Monarch is coming back with infinite compassion for a world which drave Him out. In connection with that hope of the Church, "the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God," who are now unknown as such and persecuted (Rom. viii. 19, R.V.). Christ's righteous judgment will solve many problems, heal all manner of wounds, and wonderfully

BLESS POOR OPPRESSED HUMANITY.

Following upon the end of Gentile power and policy, in the destruction of the Man of Sin, and the sweeping away of all war in the great battle of Armageddon, comes the restoration of the whole Israel of God (as distinct from the Jew only) to their true position among the nations. The ten tribes, lost for centuries, shall be found and restored to their land for the fulfilment of God's purposes in his dealings with the whole world. The prophecies of the Old Testament concerning God's ancient people have never been wholly fulfilled; and it cannot be that the inspired Word of the living God should prove a failure. Deut. vi. 4, 5, is the core of the whole matter. The unity of God is a great abiding fact there, coupled with heart and soul love for Him on the part of the nation. Connect with that passage Isa. xliii. 12. Israel is God's chosen nation for manifesting Him to the world by their absolute freedom from its corruptions. Such an ideal has never yet been carried into practical effect; but I submit to you that, because it is Divine, it must yet be fully realised.

In suggesting to you a few principles of interpretation for distinguishing the Bible prophecies concerning Israel which have not yet been realised, I ask, Are such to be fulfilled? If not, we are driven into one of two positions: Either they are not inspired, or, being inspired, God has made a mistake. I decline to adopt either alternative. I have given up reading any book outside the Bible itself for proof of its inspiration. Though I am not far advanced in life, yet every day I live this blessed Book is gripping my inner consciousness more and more, and compelling my obeisance to what must indeed be (and not merely contain) the very Word of God. The second alternative being obviously untenable, it follows that the prophecies are intended to be fulfilled. The distinguishing principles suggested, then, are as follows:—

1. Prophecies speaking of Israel as a whole, in fulness of blessing, are yet future. All the glorious predictions concerning the triumph, victory, and magnificence of Israel are unfulfilled.

2. References, not merely to the restoration of the nation but to its conversion, are ahead of us, because God's ancient people are not yet regenerate in heart and life.

3. When the prophecy speaks of Israel restored to wander no more, it is in the future.

4. Descriptions of the utter and final overthrow of Israel's enemies are unfulfilled.

5. When the coming of Messiah is connected with national deliverance the prophecy is unfulfilled. To some of us it is remarkable that the nation did not understand its own prophets. How did a devout Jew of the olden time read Isa. liii., with its picture of the suffering One? Well, he passed it over because he did not understand it, after the manner of many Christians in our own day in regard to other matters in the Book. Part of a Jewish prophecy has been fulfilled in the coming of the rejected One; but all predictions which connect his coming with national deliverance are still unfulfilled.

6. When it is declared that Israel as a whole shall be a channel of blessing to all other nations the prophecy is unfulfilled.

7. When the prophecy was uttered after the return from Babylon it remains to be fulfilled.

Take two instances in illustration: first, Isa. xlix. 18-22. The children of Zion's bereavement, the lost tribes, shall yet declare to her that the place is too strait for them to dwell. While I am not able positively to deny that we as a nation are identical with the lost ten tribes, I am by no means satisfied of it; but I have no quarrel with those who hold that view. At all events, and back to the old land for which He has declared his love shall come the scattered earthly people—not Judah alone, but all the Israel of God.

GOD KNOWS WHERE THEY ARE;

The second example is Zech. viii. 7, 8, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Behold, I will save my people from the east country, and from the west country: and I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness." That is a prophecy never yet fulfilled; and I believe one of the very first things after the apocalypse of Jesus with his saints, and when the Man of Sin has been destroyed, will be the gathering of God's ancient people to their own city. The consideration of God's purpose therein must be reserved for another occasion; but I may say that the gathered ones will become the greatest missionaries the world has ever had. They shall preach the everlasting Gospel and be God's messengers to other peoples, carrying all the truth of the kingdom which they rejected when Christ came of old.

Rev. xx. 2, 3, shows that when the King comes, and has destroyed the very incarnation of earthly evil, an angel from heaven will lay hold upon Satan and bind him for a thousand years, so that his deceiving of the nations shall cease during that period. Passing by, for the present, his subsequent loosing for a little season, it is to me one of the most glad and blessed prospects that Christ is to inaugurate his reign upon earth by locking away from the nations the arch enemy of the human race. Let me repeat that this coming of its King is earth's greatest hope. I have every confidence in the victory of righteousness, not on account of the organisations of the present day, but because I have faith in God and in the consummation of his purposes by this coming of Christ to set up his reign among men.

Surely He cometh, and a thousand voices
Call to the saints, and to the deaf are dumb;
Surely He cometh, and the earth rejoices,
Glad in his coming Who hath sworn "I come."
This hath He done, and shall we not adore Him?
This shall He do, and can we still despair?
Come, let us quickly fling ourselves before Him,
Cast at his feet the burden of our care.

"Gordon" Boys.—It is quite evident that the name and splendid Christian heroism of General Gordon are not to be allowed to perish. Every year since the noble soldier's death a sermon has been preached at Sandringham Church before the Prince and Princess of Wales on the Sunday nearest the day of his death to commemorate that event. The preacher this year was the eloquent Bishop of Ripon, who took for his text, "He went out not knowing whither he went." The sermon, entitled "The Venture of Faith," has been published. The proceeds of the sale, as well as the offertory taken on the Commemoration Day, go to the funds of the Gordon Boys' Home. We trust that the great reverence for the Bible which so clearly distinguished this remarkable military leader and his singularly devout character will be inspiration to many a "Gordon Boy," when duty calls them to serve their country and their God, no matter where "faith" bids them "venture." The offices of the Home are 20, Cockspur-street, S.W.

The Late
Mr. D. M. Drysdale.

On Christmas Eve, 1897, at Mentone, this well-known Liverpool citizen, merchant, and evangelist passed into eternity. Having regard to the public and definite testimony which he bore for many years to the sustaining power of Divine grace, it is fitting that all who watched his career should hear how that grace abounded unto him when flesh and heart were failing.

Occasionally when, in health and vigour, he professed that he knew whom he had believed, and was persuaded that He would keep him to the end, scoffers would taunt him thus: "You will not always be so sure; sickness and death will come to you, and with them doubt and fear; then of what use will your assurance be?" This suspicion that under stress of suffering his faith might give way, was completely falsified. As week by week his strength declined, he showed no impatience, breathed no complaint. When his condition became such that it was plain he could not long survive, his daughter and her husband were summoned from Paris. On Dr. Anderson's arrival he explained to Mr. Drysdale that it was in contemplation to adopt a fresh treatment which would probably prolong his life for a few days. To this he refused his consent. "I don't want to be kept alive; I want to go to the Master; I don't want to stay; I have done with this earth; my work here is finished; I long to go." Often, after that, he would ask, "How much longer do you think I can last?" Wher told, "Only a few days," he would answer, "That's all right; I am ready to go."

His son-in-law began to mention one after another of many departed friends who would greet him on his arrival in the better land. When he ceased Mr. Drysdale added with emphasis, "and the Master," as though He should have been mentioned before others, and certainly would be looked for first.

On the morning of December 23, his last day on earth, he received with composure and evident relief the doctor's intimation that the end was at hand. In the afternoon Mr. Somerville called and prayed with him; and, taking leave of him, Mr. Drysdale said, "Good-bye, till we meet in heaven." At five o'clock his letters arrived from Liverpool and were read to him. With perfect consciousness, he gave instructions in regard to them. As the evening wore on he became restless, and asked if he would soon be in heaven. Feeling his pulse, his son-in-law replied, "Yes, you will soon be with the Master." What followed is best told in Dr. Anderson's words:—

We assembled round his bed, and I prayed that our heavenly Father would grant his servant the favour of passing from this life into the next without pain or struggle. The sufferer added, "Amen." After that we sang several hymns. He joined in here and there, then suddenly said, "Lift me up, and turn me to Him." I asked to whom. He said, "To the Lord Jesus." Then, as if he saw Him, he brought his hands together, and with great satisfaction said, "My blessed Saviour!" Turning to his daughter he said, "Sing, Milly, sing a hymn to Jesus." We sang, "My Jesus, I love Thee." After the third verse he said, "Stop now; put me back on my pillow, I am tired." He spoke no more. His breathing became gradually feebler, like the sighs of a child sobbing on his mother's breast, then ceased altogether; the pulse became imperceptible; and the eyelids closing we knew that the spirit had departed. He died as he had lived, fearless and courageous to the very end. Such was his faith that in his case death only proved the gate of heaven, gliding softly and noiselessly on its hinges to let the traveller in."

The interment of Mr. Drysdale took place on Thursday, January 13, at Smithdown-road Cemetery, Liverpool, in the presence of a large gathering of mourning friends, who had been associated with him in commercial life, and in evangelistic efforts extending over many years. Rev. Canon Hobson, vicar of St. Nathaniel's, Windsor, and the Revs. C. A. Mines, H. Cordon, Bennett Anderson, Messrs. T. A. Leigh, B. F. Babcock (representing the Liverpool Town Mission), Dr. A. E. Hawkes, H. R. Jones, and A. Marshall (representing Princes Gate Baptist Church), and many other well-known citizens assembled to show their respect for the departed and their sympathy with his bereaved widow and daughter. The service was conducted by Rev. Robert Lewis, of Princes Gate Chapel, whose ministry Mr. Drysdale of late years attended. After reading selected passages of Holy Scripture, Mr. Lewis said:—

Our presence here marks the disappearance of a familiar figure from our Liverpool life. It is difficult even in this scene of mourning to realise that he is gone who always seemed to us vigorous and robust and looked the picture of health. With thankfulness we triumph, amid tears and grief, in the glad assurance that, absent from the body, he is present with the Lord. In taking our last leave of all that was mortal of our friend, we note with gratitude many tokens of God's mercy to him which are full of comfort and encouragement to us.

THE INTENSITY OF HIS RELIGIOUS CONVICTIONS.

There was no vagueness or uncertainty in his belief. Sin and salvation, the blessedness of the righteous and the doom of the impenitent, the preciousness of God's Word, the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, were actual and vivid realities to him. Happy in the assurance of his own pardon and acceptance, he was filled with the longing that others might find mercy of the Lord. To some his confidence savoured of presumption; but having such good reason of the hope that was in him he would have felt it to be presumptuous indeed to be silent about it. Being human, he was not without his faults, but one thing he never did—he did not hide his light. So firm a grip of saving truth as he had is an incalculable blessing to its possessor, and an edifying study for us all in times like this of prevalent indecision.

HIS WORK AS AN EVANGELIST.

From the time of his conversion Mr. Drysdale was "instant in season, out of season" as a soul-winner. Those who were associated with him in services at Hengler's Circus and in Wavertree Park were witnesses of his untiring devotion and sustained effort. He was, however, most distinguished from ordinary Christian workers by his well-known practice of personal dealing with individuals. Could he speak to us here and now he would say, "Are you saved?" For many years he missed no opportunity of addressing strangers, and inquiring how they stood towards God. This was sometimes resented, but was far more frequently received with thankfulness. Those who disapproved of the method respected the motive, and never questioned his sincerity. The truth is, the fisher of men must resort to every means of compassing his end.

It is idle to condemn methods which are recommended by results. The brusque approach, the abrupt address, gave rise to occasional complaint, but they accomplished their purpose. By this habit of challenging every man he met our friend put it out of the power of hundreds of persons to complain, "No man cares for my soul."

Mr. Drysdale's name will be familiar to most of your readers as the writer of articles in our columns on "Aggressive Work."

Great was God's mercy to our brother in the manner of his translation. Spared excessive pain such as he might have been expected to suffer, he was sustained through weeks of gradually progressive decline in entire submission to the Divine will and joyful anticipation of being "for ever with the Lord." His grasp of truth was just as tenacious in sickness as in health. When at length the end came no cloud of doubt or fear disquieted him.

He fell asleep in Christ his Lord:
He gave to Him to keep
The soul his great love had redeemed,
Then calmly went to sleep.
And, as a tired bird folds its wing,
Sure of the morning light,
He laid him down in trustful faith,
And did not dread the night.

Thoughts for Parents.

4—GOODNESS.

Gal. v. 22.

"DEPART FROM EVIL AND DO GOOD."

Let your children learn early that if they would see good, it will be found with God.

You must get before you can give. "They first gave their own selves to the Lord."

Worldly, slothful, careless parents cannot train souls for God.

Your own feet must be upon the Rock before you can stretch down a hand to the little one to clasp in climbing.

Yours is the duty of revealing God to your child. If you tell him God only loves good children, but not bad ones, he may think when his conduct is good that he has merited God's love. Tell him that God loves all, but is grieved with the wicked.

Pray not only for, but with your children. Let them hear your voice speaking to God for them.

Teach them to pray for what they want as a child coming to a father who is waiting to hear.

Expect your children to be good. Lay most stress on the good in their characters, encourage them by praise to be good.

Frances S. Hallowes.

The Annual Temperance Sermon in Westminster Abbey has been fixed for the first Sunday in May. The Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, who will be the preacher, will speak on the following evening at the annual meeting of the National Temperance League, of which the Archbishop of Canterbury is president, in Queen's Hall.

Bible-class Federation.—The first united meeting of the Barnsbury Group of Bible-classes, comprising the Belle Isle Baptist and the Caledonian-road Primitive Methodist Young Men's Bible-classes, which have recently been affiliated to the Young Men's Evangelical Bible-class Federation, was held on Monday week at the Caledonian-road Chapel, presided over by Rev. T. Meakin. Mr. T. Fenwick Groves, the president of the Federation, gave a short account of its work and objects. The subject for the evening was "Christian Manliness," dealt with by Messrs. Dick, H. W. Wilkins, and G. Evans.

Mr. McNeill in London.

CLOSE OF A MONTH'S WORK.

AFTER four weeks of incessant work Mr. McNeill is now enjoying a well-earned eight days' rest. He left London at midnight on Friday last for Scotland, in order to spend the week's recess with his family near Glasgow. He hopes to return on Saturday next, and will resume his special mission on the Sabbath—in the afternoon at St. James's Hall, and in the evening at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. The course of the services for the coming week will be:—At Cannon-street Hotel, for business men, Monday to Thursday inclusive, at 1 p.m.; at the Great Assembly Hall, Monday to Friday inclusive, at 8 p.m. (not 7.30, as announced).

BUSINESS MEN IN THE CITY.

The meetings last week at one o'clock in Cannon-street Hotel were as large as the capacity of the hall would admit. Many were glad to stand throughout the hour day after day. The small galleries at each end were open to ladies, and invariably crowded. Next week, however, when these City meetings are resumed, it is proposed to reserve the whole of the limited space for men. Only the half of the area will be covered with seats; the remaining half will be "standing room." In that way it is hoped to accommodate larger numbers.

The spirit of sympathetic hearing was very manifest in the gatherings of these business men last week. The hearty character of the singing showed that a large proportion of the audiences, at any rate, was professedly Christian; while, of course, there must also have been a considerable element of the non-church-going and indifferent kind. Mr. McNeill had plentiful and pointed messages for all. The addresses were strictly evangelistic, with many applications suited to the special needs or temptations of those engaged all the week in the active business of the City. Christ was fearlessly uplifted as the only source of spiritual peace for the transgressor, and the only sure guide among the perplexities and engrossments of the modern race for wealth. It was truly encouraging to see these clear-headed, keen-witted City men listening as if for dear life to the earnest appeals and very sharp exhortations of the evangelist.

WESTMINSTER CHAPEL.

The throngs that attended the evening gatherings in Westminster Chapel during the week steadily grew, till on the closing evenings the capacity of the great building was severely taxed. Each night Mr. McNeill delivered the Gospel message with as much reiterated fulness and urgency as if it were the last time he might have the opportunity and privilege. His unconventional methods of address, his wealth and freshness of Scriptural exegesis, his overflowing enjoyment of his work as an ambassador of Christ, and his powerful setting forth of a full gospel of pardon, justification, and happy service, all served to commend his messages to the mixed multitudes who listened for an hour or more at a time without the least seeming impatience or weariness. No one who entered Westminster Chapel any evening last week could go away and plead ignorance of the way of salvation, or of its blessedness, as an excuse for rejecting the claims of Jesus Christ on the heart's trust and the life's devotion.

On the closing evening Mr. McNeill expressed his thankfulness to God for the manifest tokens of his presence and working in connection with the meetings of the past four weeks. Letters have been received testifying to the power of the preached Word in awakening the careless and comforting the tried. He asked that much prayer should be made during his brief period of rest, that some way might be opened up for gaining closer access to many sections of City men yet uninfluenced by the mission, and that a mighty revival might come to all the Churches.

Last Sunday afternoon Rev. H. P. Hughes gave a short address in St. James's Hall on "Why John McNeill draws." Three answers were given by the speaker: (1) because of the strong and unique individuality of the preacher; (2) because he preaches the old Gospel; (3) because he is backed up by the Evangelical Churches. On the last head Mr. Hughes urged that for the sake of the unevangelised masses the Christian Churches should think less of their distinctive differences, and unite more fully in aggressive Gospel work for the salvation of the world.

Sunday Closing for the United Kingdom.

MAY we ask the attention of your readers to the United Temperance movement which is now taking place, with the view of securing, during the present Parliament, the enactment of a measure which shall complete the Sunday Closing legislation of the United Kingdom, by extending to England the benefits of the law which have long been enjoyed by Scotland and Wales, and in large part by Ireland?

In the present movement—which was inaugurated at the National United Temperance Convention, in the Royal Albert Hall, last October—the Christian Churches, and all the great temperance organisations, without exception, are cordially united, together with many philanthropic bodies, and great numbers of earnest men and women in all parts of the kingdom.

This matter has been before the public and before all the religious bodies of this country for a considerable number of years, and at no time has there been any doubt whatever that the aim, which is thus pointed out for Christian people to seek, is a right aim in the sight of God, and if attained would bring a great blessing upon the whole country.

We believe the present time is opportune for pressing the question forward to the point of success, and that the people most concerned, namely, the great class which live by manual labour, would heartily welcome such an Act of Parliament as we propose; and we are confident, therefore, that if the Act were passed it would not be looked upon by the people generally as something forced upon them from without. They would accept it as the voice of their own consciences and the voice of the Legislature, which is bound to represent their consciences.

In order that the movement may be successfully carried out, it is most essential that adequate funds for its prosecution should be placed at the disposal of those who have undertaken the arduous task, and we venture, therefore, to make this appeal for financial help in this cause. Donations for the "Sunday Closing Special Campaign" may be sent to the treasurer, Sunday Closing Special Campaign Committee, 34, Memorial Hall-chambers, Farringdon-street, E.C.

F. CANTUAR, President of the Committee.
A. F. HILLS, Treasurer.

A Churchman's Notes.

THE new rector of Birmingham, Rev. A. J. Robinson, is endeavouring to provide for his present church what he obtained for his two former ones in Whitechapel and Marylebone—an open-air pulpit, built into the wall of the church, and commanding an open space suitable for meetings. This, a novelty in Birmingham, will prove of great service to that busy city.

Rev. R. P. Ashe, formerly of Uganda, once more takes up foreign work in the chaplaincy at Smyrna, having resigned his curacy in Bath for this purpose. His work in Uganda with Mackay, and the story of it as told in his book, will not soon be forgotten.

Lord Norton's plan for the establishment of a bishopric of Birmingham raises the question afresh in a very simple and, it would seem, suitable form. There can be no doubt of the immense importance of a bishopric for this great city, instead of, as at present, one connected with Worcester as a centre.

The address of Rev. J. C. Hoare at Canon Christopher's missionary breakfast last Saturday seems to have been one of real value to all students of missions. Among other important points it raised the question of the absence of independent native churches in modern missionary work, and Mr. Hoare made a contribution towards the solution of this problem by referring to the waste of power due to Protestant divisions, eight pastors being at work in Ningpo in the different churches when two would suffice, and be all that the native Christians could maintain.

Mr. Hoare also referred to modern and Western ideas of episcopacy as a hindrance to an independent native church. The English idea of a bishop is a man of high position, great influence, and wide territorial jurisdiction, and Mr. Hoare admitted that at present no Chinaman he knew was fitted for such a post. But if it were permitted them to revert to the ancient idea of a bishop, that is a bishop of a town or church or small district, then there are, said Mr. Hoare, at least six men who would make admirable bishops. This was most refreshing candour, and was received by the audience with evident interest and approval, even High Churchmen cheering it.

The appointment of Rev. R. Middleton to the vicarage of St. Michael's, Norwich, is very welcome, and will prove a most valuable gain to the Evangelical cause in Norwich. Mr. Middleton's ministry is based on the simplest and most Scriptural lines, and will doubtless, as elsewhere, be definitely blessed of God.

The Church Times of last week had an article on Confession, wherein the writer expressed his satisfaction at "the firm footing" which this practice has won for itself as "an integral part of the ordinary life of a Churchman." Anything more unscriptural and more opposed to the plain and historical teaching of the Prayer Book can hardly be imagined than the statements of this article. And yet, in a way, nothing more clearly marks the essential difference between it and the healthy, manly, strong Christian life inculcated in the Bible and expressed in the Church services. The system of Rome and its extreme Anglican counterpart tends to keep the spiritual patient in a state of chronic ill-health, by means of regular auricular confession, while the Gospel leads to spiritual health and vigour by reason of personal and immediate contact with the Lord. E. C.

The London Anti-Vivisection Society hopes to promote in the next session of Parliament a Bill in the House of Lords for the total abolition of vivisection, and a second Bill in the House of Commons abolishing what are practically private laboratories, and providing that all places in which experiments on living animals are performed, or where animals are killed, shall be open to public inspection, and that in all cases of experiments not only shall anæsthetics be fully used, but that the use of curare (which paralyses the nerves of motion, but leaves the animal acutely sensible to suffering) shall be absolutely prohibited. The Society is also promoting a petition memorialising the Home Secretary not to appoint in future, as an inspector under the Vivisection Act, any person who is in any way connected with the teaching staff of any medical school, college, hospital, or other teaching centre. Copies of the petition may be had from the secretary of the Society, Mr. Sidney G. Trist, 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, W.

"Thou God Seest Me!"

BY REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.*

WILLIE was tempted to take some apples, though his father had told him not to do so. The apple-tree was so full that Willie thought there would be no harm in having one; but when he reached out to take it he thought he heard God speaking to him, and he found that what he was doing was known in heaven.

Little Willie stood under an apple-tree old,
Its fruit was all shining with crimson and gold,
Hanging temptingly low; and he longed for a bite,
Yet he knew if he took one it would not be right.
Said he, "I don't see why father should say,
'Don't touch the old apple-tree, Willie, to-day.'
I should not have thought, now they're hanging so low,
When I asked for just one, he would answer me 'No.'
They do look so nice hanging out in the sun,
And he never would know if I took but just one.
There are hundreds and hundreds, and he wouldn't miss
A paltry little red apple like this."
He stretched forth his hand, when a low, mournful strain
Came wandering dreamily over his brain.
In his bosom a beautiful harp had long laid,
Which the angel of conscience had frequently played,
And it sung, "Little Willie, beware, oh, beware,
Though your father is gone, your Maker is there.
How sad you would feel to hear the Lord say,
'This dear little boy stole an apple to day.'"
Then Willie turned round, and, still as a mouse.
Crept slowly and silently into the house;
In his own little room he knelt down to pray,
That the Lord would forgive him, and please not to say,
"Little Willie almost stole an apple to-day."

Willie found that God knew what he was doing. As I walked in the door of Mr. Richard Smith's house in Cincinnati, he pointed down to a wire, and said—

"Do you know what that is?"

"Indeed I don't."

"Well, then, come upstairs, and I will show you."

By the head of his bed was a bell. He called to his son—

"Dick, open that window."

Rattle, rattle, rattle went the bell.

"Why, who rang the bell?" I asked.

He did not answer, but told Dick to go down and open the outside door. Just as he was opening the door—rattle! rattle! rattle! went the bell again. I found there were telegraph wires from every window and outside door all over the house, so that no burglar could open one of these without ringing the bell. Now let us watch one of these burglars. It is a dark night: the stars have all shut their eyes and gone to sleep, the clouds have covered up the moon's face; but the wicked housebreaker is determined to have Mr. Smith's money, and so, with his pockets full of all sorts of keys, round to the back of Mr. Smith's house he goes, so quietly that the dog, Jock, does not wake up and drive him off. With his false keys he soon turns the lock, but he does it so quietly that no one hears him. He says to himself, "I am all right. I have got the door unlocked. I'll soon have his money; I will move so softly that he will not wake up." And so he begins to open the door gently; but when he gets it open a little way one of those wires which are fastened to every door is pushed in, and the electricity is let out. The telegraph is at work, and at the head of the bed. Down flies Mr. Smith, and catches the thief, and holds him fast. The burglar is so taken by surprise he can hardly speak; he asks, "How did you know I was here? I thought I opened the door so that nobody heard me."

RATTLE! RATTLE! RATTLE! GOES THE BELL

"Yes, but the news flew to me on a little wire; and you hadn't the door half open before I knew that someone was breaking into my house. And now I am going to give you to that policeman, and he will take you to the lock-up.

Did you ever think of it, my young friend? There are telegraph wires reaching up to where God dwells. Every wicked thought you have ever had, every unkind word you have ever spoken, and every sinful act of yours have been telegraphed to heaven; and God's recording angel has written them all down in his book, and on the last day, when all shall stand before God, it shall be opened. What will you do when you see all those things written down against you? I am afraid that, like the man who "had not the wedding garment," you will be speechless. Yes, I know you will, if you don't find some way to get these sins blotted out. Many wrong things which you have done and forgotten are in that book. God has not forgotten one of them.

If the telegraph wire in Mr. Smith's house had been broken the burglar might have stolen all his money before he knew it, and run off with it. But none of the telegraph wires to God's throne in heaven get broken. Every sinful, idle word that you have ever spoken has been written down in one of God's books, for we read (Matt xii. 36) "that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." A wicked man once said, "I spend my Sundays in settling up my accounts." "Yes," someone answered, "and that is how the judgment-day will be spent."

I would not trouble you with these words about your sins if I had not words of comfort for you, about what the Lord Jesus has done for you. He has seen all those wrong things that you have done, and when God asked "How can I save that child who has broken my good laws?" I can hear Jesus say, "Father, I will suffer and die, so that every child that will trust in me may have all his sins forgiven." And so the dear Saviour suffered a cruel death on the cross that you might have your sins forgiven. Don't you think your heart has been very hard not to love Him?

A robin built her nest in one of the trees in front of the house of Mr. S.——. Soon four little robins filled the nest, and day after day the mother fed them. She used to sing them songs, and sometimes you could believe she was telling them pretty stories about the beautiful green fields, where she was going to take them as soon as they could fly. One day Mr. S.'s house caught fire: the tree was so near to the house that all said the nest, and the little birdies in it, would be burned up if they did not fly out. The old bird saw it too: but her children were not old enough to fly. The mother would fly to the nest, and then start off, and seem to say, "Come, come, or you will perish." But her little ones could not fly. At length she saw it, and what do you think she did? She seemed to think that if she could go and put her wings over her little chicks it might and save them. She took her place upon them, and in a few moments the flames grew so hot that the mother and her little ones were burned. But suppose that only the mother had died, and her four birdies had been saved by her death; and suppose they could love and talk the same as you can, how do think they would have felt towards her? Would they have been ashamed to speak kindly of her, and to tell anyone that their mother had died to save their lives? If they had been ashamed to speak of her, and thus showed that they had no love for her, would you not say that they deserved to be burnt themselves? Yes indeed. But do you think that robin loved her little ones as much as Jesus has loved you? Jesus has done ten thousand times more for you, and yet, if you are not a Christian, you have never loved Him. Yet I can tell you that He will save you "just now" if you will ask Him. He is more anxious to save you than that robin was to save her little birdies. Though He suffered and died such an awful death on the cross for you, and is now ready to take you, and blot all your sins from God's book, it does not say in the Bible He will do this for us if we weep a great deal. But there is a most precious verse, which I wish you would learn. It is 1 John i. 9: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Now if you will but come to the Saviour, and believe in Him, then your name will be written in "the book of life," and the angels in heaven will rejoice. If you feel that you don't know how to come to Jesus, offer from your heart this

PRAYER.

O Lord, Thou hast all my sins written down in Thy book—every lie that I have told, every disobedience to my parents, every wicked word, and act, are all there. How many times has Jesus offered to wipe them all out; but I have been so hard-hearted, I would not listen to Him. Canst Thou, O God, forgive me for not trusting thy dear Son? Oh, yes, I know what Thou wilt; for I hear Jesus saying, "Father, forgive them for my sake." Precious Jesus, I cannot love Thee enough for doing so much for me. I give myself to Thee.

Personal.

A mother in asking for the address of the Cripples' House, Southend, says:—"There are three nice scrap books already packed to be sent. We are anxious for the cripples to have them, for my dear little son (aged 6), who went to be with Jesus at Christmas, arranged many of the pages, and it was always for the poor cripples he saw at the seaside and gave pennies to." Free Church Councils.

Rev. James Millis has been elected president of Southport Free Church Council for 1898.

At the annual meeting of the Newcastle Council of the Federation of Free Churches the report showed that the work of the Council during the past year had been one of increasing influence and power, both in reference to the relation of the Free Churches to public affairs, and the direct spiritual work of the Churches themselves. Mr. T. H. Bainbridge was appointed the president of the present year.

The annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Free Church Council was largely attended. The report showed that public questions bearing on moral and religious interests had been discussed, while in the evangelical department united services had been held. Dr. Maclaren, in retiring from office as president of the Council, proposed Dr. Randles as his successor. This was seconded by Dr. Goodrich, and adopted with unanimity. Dr. Randles, in taking the chair, urged that they should all stand by him, and put real hard work in the cause of the Free Churches. It was agreed that in November next a united evangelistic mission should be held.

It is stated that Gipsy Smith had audiences of 1,000 every night in his ten days' mission at Banbury, arranged by the Free Christian Church. One night 1,800 persons crowded into the Wesleyan Chapel, which holds 1,200. It is generally stated that over three hundred persons professed conversion.

Under the presidency of Dr. Monro Gibson, the executive of the National Council of Free Churches met at the Memorial Hall last week. Dr. Mackennal reported the completion of the programme for the forthcoming Bristol meetings. Rev. Thos. Law, organising secretary, reported that about 500 councils had now been formed throughout the country, and that during the year great success had been achieved in the federation of councils. Dr. Alexander Mackennal was unanimously nominated as president of the National Council, in succession to Dr. Monro Gibson.

A Missionary Deputation.

FULL of interest was the welcome home given to Mr. W. Crosfield, J.P., and Mr. Alderman Evan Spicer, at the Memorial Hall, after visiting some of the London Missionary Society's stations as deputation.

The meeting was preceded by a conversazione. Seldom has the hall been more densely packed. Every one was on the qui vive to hear reports from these gentlemen's own lips of what they had seen and heard. After the customary preliminaries, and expressions of regret at the absence of Dr. Guinness Rogers, who was prevented occupying the chair through illness, Mr. Crosfield proceeded to relate his experiences at Fiji and New Guinea. Very closely was he followed in his most interesting narration of the wonderful progress of Christian Missions in these lands. Especially was he listened to with breathless eagerness when he told how he was received at Erromanga, the island where John Williams was murdered, by the son of the very man who had actually clubbed the pioneer missionary to death.

Mr. Alderman Spicer had a very warm reception. Noticeably was the great audience anxious to hear how matters stood between General Gallieni and the agents of the Society in Madagascar. Mr. Spicer was sure that the Society had been Divinely led in sending the deputation at this critical moment. After visiting South Africa, he and Mr. Wardlaw Thompson made their way to Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, and there they had more than one interview with the French representative. Although Protestant missionaries had been seriously interrupted in their work by the action of the Jesuits. General Gallieni was assured that the Society's aim was essentially religious and spiritual, and in no sense political. In the end religious liberty was granted to all missionaries. The prospects in Madagascar for future missionary service were brighter to-day than they had been for some years.

These assurances from Mr. Spicer were received with the utmost satisfaction by the assembly. A great relief came to all when it appeared that full religious liberty was to be the new régime.

We trust that the thronged and enthusiastic meeting is a true and permanent expression of an awakened interest in foreign missions. Both Mr. Spicer and Mr. Crosfield are interested, in no small degree, in the progress of the Evangel of Jesus Christ throughout the whole world. It was at their own expense that they undertook to visit the stations, where their presence and encouraging words gave such good cheer to the missionaries. Their hopeful and inspiring reports seem to have put new heart into the constituents of the London Missionary Society. The granting of religious liberty in Madagascar is specially gratifying. With nearly every land under the sun open to the Gospel, no foreign missionary society should have a single care about ways and means. Will not the Churches rise to their great privileges as co-workers with God to save the nations?

Lighthouses and Lightships. — During January Miss L. E. Holden-Pike, Winchmore Hill, N., has sent a packet of reading to each lighthouse and lightship in Great Britain and Ireland, on behalf of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. A number of letters have been received from the light-keepers, some of whom are earnest Christian men, cordially acknowledging the attention thus shown them. The experiment is to be continued if the amount of working expenses is forthcoming. So far, the subscriptions have not sufficed to cover the cost of postage and papers.

A United Gathering of the Young Women's and Young Men's Christian Associations was held in the Dundee Hall on Tuesday week. Mr. George Walker, who presided, referred to the great blessings which young women and young men derived from being associated with such associations. Dr. Black, in an interesting speech, moved the adoption of reports of both associations, which, he was glad to say, were very satisfactory and encouraging. The report of the Young Women's Christian Association stated that the membership remained at the same level as formerly. The report of the Young Men's Christian Association stated that 192 names were on the roll, being twenty-eight new members for the year. The report gave a sketch of the work carried on by different agencies. Addresses were delivered by Sheriff Scott Moncrieff, Rev. M. Kennedy, and Dr. Mackay.

An Aged People's Tea-party.

SOME sixteen years ago I saw in The Christian an account of a meeting under the above title, and was led to copy the idea in Shrewsbury, by inviting 120 old poor of sixty years of age and upwards. Invitation cards (as enclosed) were sent out and personally invited. They were readily received, and in due course were welcomed by a number of young people, who interested themselves in waiting upon the aged guests.

After tea, Gospel songs and short addresses were given with much power and earnestness, and both young and old, workers and guests, felt it to be a time to be remembered.

This led to an extension, for others wished to unite in so gracious a work; and the years following we have had gatherings annually of about 300 aged people present. We have just held our fifteenth tea-meeting, which was felt to be one of the best. Jesus has always been preached, and many of the aged guests have said that not merely for the tea they wish to come, but also for the meeting afterwards. Their names and addresses are taken, and opportunity is given to visit them afterwards by town missionaries and others. The Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. members and their united evangelistic choir have given much assistance. As to results, we have had many precious instances of real good following, and deeply interesting. Three years ago, during the severe frost, one man, who had come in face of persuasion, was convicted of sin and led to Christ. A few days later he had a paralytic stroke, and died testifying of the love of Christ to his soul. On another occasion a woman after going home was taken ill, and not able to leave the house again; she could say, however, "Thank God for what I heard at the tea-party, for there I was saved."

Lean Hard on Jesus.

Lean hard, sad heart, on Jesus, He knows thy secret grief,
And swift He is to succour, so swift to give relief,
Then let come cloud or sunshine, or skies be dull or clear,
Lean hard, sad heart, on Jesus, for thou hast nought to fear.

With Him 'tis ever sunshine, and clouds are far away,
With Him there is no darkness, but full meridian day,
Tho' winter's blast or summer's balm, or life, or death, should come,
Lean hard on Him, dear troubled heart, He's pledged to bring thee home.

Oh, trust Him, heart! cast all thy care on Him who cares for thee,
The clouds must break, at "evening time" thou his "clear light" shalt see:
The setting sun in richer beams shall make thy evening blest,
With all thy weight then lean on Him, and in his purpose rest.

Thou dost not see thy morning joys amidst thy evening fears,
Thou dost not see that morning songs result from evening tears,
'Tis when the darkness blackest hangs, like pall of deepest night,
That morning breaks, and ushers in the longed-for orient light.

The dimness of those doubting eyes shall soon have passed away,
And fulness of Divine surprise shall be your joy for aye,
And trials, crosses, sufferings past, now hard to understand,
Shall be explained, where darkness dies, in our Immanuel's land.

The late W. H. Burton (of Dalston).

Mission to Night Cabmen.

THE Mission to Night Cabmen of London (in connection with the London City Mission) completes in March its thirty-seventh year. Two missionaries visit cabmen by night, and four are day missionaries. As is well known, they seek out the cabmen in all their haunts, and try by every available means to do them good, and to bring them within hearing of the Gospel.

Help is earnestly asked towards maintaining two night missionaries—old and tried friends are passing away year by year. The late Rev. John Garwood, in his book, "The Million-peopled City," tells how the cab trade is frequently taken to by persons who were once in very different circumstances, and he adds: "How serviceable religious counsel and instruction may be to them through the Divine blessing." This remark has been verified over and over again. Copies of the annual report may be had from Miss E. Hebert, Pembroke House, Oxford-road, Redhill.

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. JOSIAH NIX IN MIDDLESBROUGH.

A SPECIAL mission has been held in North Ormesby Wesleyan Chapel, Middlesbrough for nine days, concluding on February 7. The evangelist, Mr. Josiah Nix, found the church in an excellent state of preparation, as shown by the fact of conversions having been the rule at the Sunday evening services for some weeks past. A great amount of energy was thrown into the work, the whole of the town being thoroughly and systematically visited. This, together with enterprising and judicious advertisement, ensured a large attendance of the people it was sought to reach.

In his addresses Mr. Nix was specially careful to emphasise the need of the new birth. The way of salvation was not made too easy, but it was made straight and plain.

"Ye must be born again" was the preacher's constant and continual declaration. To some this might seem strange, but not to the inquiry room workers, who saw its advantages in the little difficulty experienced in leading the seekers to light.

From beginning to end the services were characterised by the manifested presence of the Holy Spirit. Sinners trembled and wept under the searching and convincing power of the Gospel, and, best of all, very many yielded themselves to Christ; and the joy experienced by the workers in leading sinners to Jesus will be amongst the most happy and blessed memories of a lifetime. The meetings for men only, and women only, and the young people's service were not only well attended, but were seasons of rich blessing. On the second Saturday a great total abstinence meeting—or, as Mr. Nix termed it, his "merry meeting"—was held, and was attended with results such as had never been known in the town. Altogether, about 350 pledges were taken.

We recognise in this revival that prayer has been answered in an unmistakable way, and the rich blessings we have received must stimulate to increased earnestness and aggressive work for Christ.

PASTOR A. G. BROWN IN BLACKPOOL.

THE United Mission at Blackpool, held last week by Pastor A. G. Brown, proved a time of blessing. A spirit of prayer and faith and earnest effort had been aroused. The Blackpool Times says: "Every section of Nonconformity has joined hands in carrying out the most pretentious and successful evangelistic scheme in the history of this part of the country. The promoters are the Blackpool section of the Fylde Evangelical Free Church Council. The town was divided into numerous sections, and emissaries from each church sent to visit every house. Their instructions were to offer an invitation to the mission services, and ascertain not which church or chapel householders attended, but whether they attended any. The results of this house-to-house work were seen in the large attendances and in the fact that many were present who rarely, if ever, had been seen in such a place.

"At the evening services the Empire Theatre was packed, hundreds being turned away. God's power was manifested, and many were compelled to flee to Christ. One evening Mr. Brown read a letter in which the writer said he heard the address on the previous night, and when he got home he went into his bedroom and cried, 'God be merciful to me a sinner.' He was 'one of the wickedest men in Blackpool,' but he asked God to save his soul. The audience uttered a fervent 'Amen' to this appeal. Mr. Brown then said that although they all rejoiced at the wonderful unity amongst the Nonconformist Churches, they wanted no proselytising, and if any of the audience belonging to the Church desired spiritual guidance their clergymen would, no doubt, be glad to see them. He wanted to see souls won to the Saviour, and not merely added to this Church or to that."

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

A very encouraging mission has been conducted by Mr. George Clarke, in the new Presbyterian Church in Putney. Large audiences have borne witness to the interest awakened. On the closing Sunday evening the accommodation of the church was taxed to its utmost limits, when the evangelist made his last appeal to the unsaved from the words, "God requireth that which is past." Many souls have been awakened, and many have made for the first time profession of faith in Christ, whilst amongst Christians there is widespread gratitude for the quickening of love and fresh zeal which the mission has been the means of arousing. Largely attended children's services were held on Sunday afternoons. On the second of these occasions Mr. Clarke gave his address on "Rags," to which the children listened with rapt attention. On weekday afternoons a series of helpful and inspiring addresses on the Christian life was given, and these have been richly blessed.

A ten days' mission has been held at Wesley Hall, Bristol. Night after night the hall has been filled. On the second Sunday evening not more than half the number of those who wished to be present could be accommodated. The last night was given to Old Market-street Chapel, when Mr. Norman, the missioner, gave the story of his life to a crowded congregation. Successful meetings for women were also held.

A mission has been conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, from the 1st to the 7th of this month, being preceded by special services conducted by the pastor (Rev. F. E. Miller) and Rev. A. Tildsley, of Rawtenstall. Great blessing has been the result, a number of conversions having taken place, and the spiritual life of the church and congregation having been much quickened and stimulated.

Rev. W. S. Standen has concluded a six days' mission at All Souls', Nottingham, which has resulted in a manifestation of blessing. The praise meeting on Saturday night was a time never to be forgotten. The power and presence of the Holy Spirit can scarcely be expressed. The vicar, Rev. A. B. Good, is continuing the work. On Sunday at the teachers' prayer meeting one teacher after another praised God for scholars who had given their hearts to the Lord. Before the evening service the vicarage was filled with members of the congregation, praying for a blessing on the evening service. At the after meeting, over one hundred stood up seeking fuller consecration of themselves to God and his service.

A mission has been held by Rev. F. S. Webster, in St. Paul's Church, Blackburn, and the vicar reports many proofs of God's presence and power. This has been shown by the great number of seeking souls who sought spiritual advice, were brought into contact with Christ, and openly confessed their desire to be his followers. A cheering result of the mission appeared to be the awakening to fresh life and energy of ordinary church-goers. It is believed that many passed from darkness to light—many exchanged the bondage of doubt for liberty and joy.

A twelve days' mission by Mr. E. P. Telford has been brought to a successful close in the Hendon Baptist Chapel (Rev. S. A. M'Cracken, pastor). The meetings were well attended throughout. Mr. Telford speedily won the hearts of the people. Some seventy publicly professed conversion, and already many desire to confess the Lord in baptism and join the Church. Many of the converts are young men, amongst whom the evangelist's manly and telling addresses were much appreciated. Christians of the different denominations have been roused to greater interest in the Lord's work.

A special mission, conducted by Mr. D. W. Brassington at the Mission Hall, Glossop, has been used of God not only to the unsaved but to believers. Mrs. R. Howton, the "Dorcas Sisters," and some of the village workers took part in the mission.

The Belfast Presbytery held last week a simultaneous evangelistic mission. In each of thirty-seven churches services were held every evening, ministers specially adapted to that work being brought from other places to assist. A central service for prayer and conference was also held each day, and much blessing is believed to have been received by many.

Gospel services have been held with marked interest in Blackwatertown, co. Armagh, by Miss Shannon, of the Belfast Central Mission, and in Tullylish Presbyterian Church by Mr. J. Jackson, Assembly's evangelist.

A fifteen days' mission has been held by Mr. Ashman in the Railway Mission Hall, Wisbech. The services were well attended; the afternoon Bible readings were very helpful; sinners have come out on the Lord's side, and Christians have been blessed.

Mr. J. C. Smith concluded, on the 10th inst., an eleven days' mission in the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. He is well known in the North of Scotland, having for some years been connected with the Gordon Evangelistic Association, Aberdeen. Although not crowded, the meetings have been fruitful in blessing to not a few. Those who have received blessing have been, with a few exceptions, young men.

Rev. G. M. Smith, of Gloucester, concluded an eight days' mission at Street, on Feb. 8. The mission was under the auspices of the Central Somerset Free Church Council. The meetings were largely attended, and at the closing meeting many testified to having received blessing.

Mr. Galletly conducted a very helpful week's services in the Great Assembly Hall, E. The week nights increased in attendance, and many felt regret that his stay was so short. God blessed the preaching, and several came out for Christ.

On Friday last Mr. J. Bennett Anderson closed a largely attended three weeks' mission in Claremont Chapel, Newquay, Cornwall. For the first ten days little outward fruit was seen, though the congregations increased every night, and a deepening influence appeared to be felt by all present. But in answer to prayer a grand breakdown came towards the close of the second week, and continued in a still more powerful manner right through the third week, when the minister (Rev. Wm. Bowell) received a large number of names of those professing repentance towards God and faith in Christ.

Mr. Goudie has conducted an encouraging ten days' mission in the Baptist Chapel, Markyate Street, Herts. His addresses were used of God to quicken the members of the church, and a number of anxious souls were led to the Saviour.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting missions at Ray Lodge and Chigwell-road Chapels, Woodford Green, Essex.

Mr. Monro Collings is now having a time of blessing at Feltham. The mission which was preceded by a week of united prayer, has been arranged by the Free Churches of the district, and is literally stirring the whole place. Night by night men and women and young people are coming out for Jesus, and on Sunday over fifty passed through the inquiry rooms. The mission has another week to run yet, and greater things are expected.

During the past fortnight special services have been conducted at the Baptist Chapel, Lower Guiting, Cheltenham, by Mr. E. Bailey, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings were well attended, and many testified to the great blessing received during the mission.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding meetings in various parts of New Jersey, New York, and Brooklyn. The Governor of New Jersey (J. W. Griggs), who has just been appointed Attorney-General of the United States, is a man much respected. Mr. Hammond learned lately that he was converted in one of his meetings in New Jersey many years ago. As he is preaching now in a section of the country where he held many services some time since, he is continually cheered by hearing people tell of their early childhood conversion in his missions.

Obituary.

MRS. HARRIET WARD.

Many will hear with sorrow of the departure of Harriet, the beloved wife of Bryan Ward, of Medbourne, Leicestershire. The daughter of the late Thomas Skeffington, of Welham, in the same county, she was early converted to God, and laboured with great devotion in Slawston (where she formerly resided) and neighbouring villages. At Medbourne she built a mission hall, which was opened in 1875, by Mr. Henry Varley, and afterwards transferred to trustees for permanent use in Gospel work. Mrs. Ward was well acquainted with the Christian and philanthropic undertakings of the metropolis, and deeply interested in their progress. About four years since she had a paralytic seizure which rendered her helpless; and, after much patient suffering, her home-call came a few days ago, in the 73rd year of her age.

MR. WILLIAM WOOD, MARYLEBONE.

This humble labourer, for 46 years a London City Missionary, and for ten of these years in the locality of Devonshire-court, Marylebone, has just passed to his rest. For two years he had been retired by the London City Mission. During recent years he had held a Bible-class at Wheeler's Cocoa Rooms in Lisson-grove, as well as Gospel meetings. A memorial meeting was held at the Cocoa Rooms last week, Mr. T. Wheeler presiding and reading a paper on the life work of the deceased; Mr. Henderson and others also taking part in tracing his career for about 66 years. The meeting was crowded with men and women who all spoke in the highest manner of Mr. Wood's great ability as a missionary and his consecrated commonsense. The funeral service was impressively conducted by Rev. C. A. Scott, pastor of College Park Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Wood was a member.

MRS. SALE, HELENSBURGH.

Many in India as well as in this country will hear with regret of the death of Mrs. Sale, the widow of Rev. John Sale, of the Baptist Missionary Society, who has survived her husband some twenty-two years. She sailed in 1849, with Mr. Sale, for India in the William Carey. Her labours among the women in the Backergunge district went largely towards originating Zenana Missions. As the result of these labours on their behalf she was invited by a few native gentlemen to enter upon the systematic visitation of some zenanas in Calcutta, and when in 1861 she came with Mrs. C. B. Lewis to England, she left Mrs. Mullens in charge of her zenana work. A few years later, the Ladies' Association for the support of zenana work and Bible women in India was started. To the last, so far as her strength would permit, Mrs. Sale has sought to further this important branch of missionary effort. For some time Mrs. Sale has been residing at Helensburgh, N.B., with her daughter, Mrs. Young. It may be mentioned that Mr. Justice Sale, now of the High Court of Judicature in Calcutta, is her son.

BISHOP SELWYN.

Rev. John Richardson Selwyn, late Bishop of Melanesia, and Master of Selwyn College, Cambridge, who died on Saturday evening at Pau, in the South of France, was a son of Dr. George Augustus Selwyn, Bishop of New Zealand, and afterwards Bishop of Lichfield. He was born in 1844, and, like his distinguished father, was a famous oarsman, and rowed in the Cambridge boats of 1864 and 1866. After serving curacies at Alrewas and St. George's, Wolverhampton, Mr. Selwyn became vicar of the latter parish in 1871. He resigned, however, in 1872, in order to proceed as a missionary to Melanesia. In February, 1877, he was consecrated at Nelson Missionary Bishop of Melanesia, in succession to the martyred Bishop Patteson. Hard work and malarial fever broke him down, although he was a man of splendid physique, and in 1891 he was obliged to give up his see and return to England lame for life. In 1893 he was appointed Master of Selwyn College, Cambridge. In spite of his ill-health and his lameness, the Bishop was a man of wonderful energy, and an excellent head of a young and growing college. Canon Gore, preaching before the University of Cambridge on Sunday afternoon, after referring to the death of Dr. Moulton, said: "It was only just now that I heard that the man whose sickness and absence from his mastership you hoped was only a temporary loss passed away peacefully yesterday evening at Pau from the Church on earth. He held by a double right as son and master the hero name of Selwyn; and surely the hero spirit worked in every fibre of that crippled body the more conspicuously by the very contrast to its earthen vessel. That body itself had been crippled by the malarial fever which took possession of him in some of the unhealthy islands of his Melanesian diocese. In a real sense the fever never left him, but it never quenched that burning spirit. To see him in his zeal, in his courage, in his unpretentious humility, in his single-hearted love, was to feel what it is to be a Christian."

MR. JOSEPH CORPE, EALING.

This earnest leader in Baptist affairs passed away suddenly on Monday, 31st ult. (the sixth anniversary of the death of C. H. Spurgeon), at the age of sixty-four years. He attended the Ealing Dean Baptist Chapel, of which he was deacon and treasurer, on the Sunday morning as usual, conducted his Bible-class in the afternoon, but, feeling unwell, decided to remain at home in the evening. A doctor was sent for, who pronounced his case serious. He was, however, very cheerful, and conducted family worship as usual. He retired to rest, but at four o'clock he was noticed to be breathing heavily, and almost immediately passed away in his sleep to "dwell in the House of the Lord for ever." Mr. Corpe was known very widely in the country in both business and religious circles. As a business man he was conscientious, consistent, upright, and was respected as such in his large commercial sphere. He combined religion and business, and gave both their proper place. An illustration of this is seen in the fact that when his travelling bag was opened after his death it was found to contain not only business books, but also a New Testament and one of Spurgeon's sermons. This combination was still more strongly exemplified in his life. He was a man of deep spirituality and ripe Christian experience—ripened by much sanctified affliction and bereavement. One of his latest trials was the death of Mrs. Spurgeon Medhurst, his daughter in California.

Requests for Prayer.

For the Ipswich monthly meetings for deepening of spiritual life.

For a united Gospel mission in the Town Hall, Sydney, Mar. 6-20.

For special services at Exminster, by John Elliott, commencing on Sunday.

For young men professing to trust the Saviour each week in the Dublin Association.

For a fortnight's mission at Kingussie, N.B., commencing Feb. 20, by J. J. Scroggie.

For a mission being held at the Protestant Mission-hall, Burnley, by Mr. Henry Lakin.

For a twelve days' mission to soldiers and friends, to be held in the Temperance Hall Barracks, Newcastle, commencing on Sunday.

For blessing on a ten days' mission, to be conducted by Ned Wright and William Grove at the new Higham-hill Gospel Hall, from Sunday, Feb. 20.

Praise.

For blessings on mission in Orange Hall, Raphoe, Co. Donegal, by Rev. John Ross.

For the mission held in Gilford Hall, Sandymont, Feb. 1-6. Prayer still asked for the work there.

Homes for Little Boys.—The Hon. W. F. D Smith, M.P. for the Strand Division, has consented to preside at the thirty-fourth anniversary banquet to be held at the Hôtel Métropole, on Saturday, March 19, in aid of the funds of the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham and Swanley, Kent.

The Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.—A conference of secretaries and workers was held at the Y.W.C.A., Hanover-square, W., on Feb. 8, when some touching stories were told of the pressing need for more workers in India. Miss Davies, from Aligarh, stated that at Chunar the people were constantly saying, "Do open a school for our girls: we can send you 100 children," but, she added, "I had to tell them we had no one to send, because there were no funds." The same story was told by Miss Abraham, of Jaunpur, who stated that there were large numbers of villages where the name of Christ had never been heard. Miss Anne Hill, of Fyzabad, stated that they sadly needed a mission-house at Tanda, where there had been several converts, the result of the visits of missionaries from Fyzabad.

International S.S. Lessons

February 27.

"Warning and invitation."—Matt. xi. 20-30.

Golden Text: "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Warnings.

CHRIST had hitherto only used entreaty. He began to reprove for negligence. Teacher should point out the towns on map. Chorazin and Capernaum, on the shores of Galilee; Bethsaida, the birthplace of Peter, Andrew, and Philip, at the place where the Jordan enters the sea of Galilee. Tyre still stands; at this time it was one of the largest commercial cities in Palestine (21-24).

Christ's offer and their indifference were like people starving when abundance of food was within reach.

God's Balances.

God will judge by no absolute standard. In the one scale pan of the balance are placed our opportunities, in the other are placed our achievements. "More tolerable for Tyre and Sidon" because their opportunities were fewer, although their actual good deeds were less, perhaps, than those of Chorazin, etc.

Apply this to our lives. Living in Christian England—Open Bible schools, etc.—Great weight of opportunity—The dreadful verdict "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting."

Childlike Wisdom (25, 26).

The mysteries of God's providence are much better understood by those who have a childlike faith in God than by those who are wise and know they are wise or think they are wise. The eye of love sees much more than the eye of knowledge.

Illustration.—One who loves music plays on an instrument much better—more feelingly—than one who has any amount of technical knowledge and yet no love for it.

Our Pilot.

Christ has control of all things—knows all the rocks and sandbanks in life's sea. He is able to steer our vessel safely into the harbour. He knows the Father and the Father's home. The Father knows his Son, and will receive those whom the Son brings home with Him.

Christ's Call (28).

"Come unto Me." This would be a mark of conceit if Christ were not Divine. No one else could say this.

The reference is to carriers, both human and animal, who struggle beneath burdens far too heavy for them. The world filled with burden bearers—sins, habits, sorrows, disappointments, losses, sickness, cares.

Burdens are necessary for us.

Illustration.—Plumage on a bird's wing; the weight of a clock; the tail of a kite.

Christ does not promise to take away the burden. He Himself bore his burden of the cross. But his burden was light because of the yoke.

Christ's Yoke.

"Yoke" is an instrument worn over shoulders of man or beast to make the burden balanced and so easier to carry.

Illustration.—Horse's collar. Man bearing two buckets of water.

Christ's yoke was a submissive spirit to the Father's will.

Apply this to—

The Mysteries of Life.—I do not understand, but they are the work of an all-wise Father.

Temptations.—If I strive to overcome I shall succeed, because God is stronger than the devil.

The Future I cannot provide for, but God can.

I do the little I can do,
And leave the rest to Thee.

The Rest.

1. It is active. Two pictures illustrating rest: First, a lone lake among the mountains. Second, great waterfall—trees overhanging, on end twigs a bird sitting on its nest. The first is stagnation; the latter the rest of Christ—peace in the storm.

2. Harmony with God. Illustrated by (a) A piece of music with no discord.
(b) Two horses yoked in a team.
(c) The onward flow of a river.

No strife or conflict between God's will and ours; both moving to the same end and purpose.

Letters to the Editor.

"ROME AND NATIONAL WELFARE."*

DEAR SIR,—In reading your report of Rev. Dr. Horton's sermon on above subject it occurred to me that many Romanists in England, as here, would repudiate the words of St. Bernardine as being "not the dogmatic teaching of their Church, but merely the expressions of a private individual" (which of course never carry weight when delivered by a Protestant, although accepted as Gospel truth when delivered from a Romish pulpit). I therefore give their dogmatic teaching as contained in Dr. Donovan's translation of "Catechism of Council of Trent" (although no Romanist dare question the writings of any canonised saint) on "The Mass," to show what the Romish Church claims for her priests. Comparing the sacrifice of Christ with the sacrifice of "The Mass," it says:—

> The priest is also the same: Christ our Lord: the ministers who offer this sacrifice, consecrate the holy mysteries not in their own but in the person of Christ. This the words of consecration declare: the priest does not say, "This is the body of Christ" (Hoc est Corpus Christi), but "This is my body" (Hoc est meum corpus), and thus invested with the character of Christ, he changes the substance of the bread and wine into the substance of his real body and blood (Catechism, C. of T., p. 249).

Although she claims here that the priest is Christ (sacerdos Christus est) when at the altar, yet on p. 245 she decrees:—

> The Eucharist....whether administered by holy or unholy hands is equally valid.

I have written this hoping it will prove helpful to Protestants, who very often are sadly ignorant of what Rome really does teach on this subject.

INDIAN FRONTIER DISASTERS.

SIR,—Does the thoughtful Christian know the real cause of our disasters in the deplorable Indian frontier war? The worldling may attribute it to the incapacity of our generals; the wonderful activity of a foe, brave and skilful in mountain warfare; the uncommon local difficulties our soldiers had to contend with; also unforeseen and unexpected circumstances and other mundane hindrances militating against a successful termination of the campaign.

Others, nearer the mark, believing the cause of justice to be the cause of God, may think that the awful ravaging by fire and sword of the country of tribes fighting in defence of their imperilled liberties has brought down upon us this humiliation by way of rebuke, and as a warning against England's unwise and unchristian policy towards the border tribes. But I believe the primary cause of the dishonour inflicted upon us by the infuriated Afreedies has been the grievous dishonour done to God in religious matters throughout the frontier war, related by "Medicus," of the Tirah Field Force, which I have just read in the "Monthly Record of the Soldiers' Christian Association," reprinted from The English Churchman.

That writer says: "I have been up here and all over the Kurrum Valley with a cavalry regiment since August last, and have never yet seen a chaplain or minister except once, or heard of any religious service held on Sundays, though I have seen numbers of sick, wounded, and dying European soldiers. . . . Sunday is not observed in any way by the general officers, except perhaps as a day when more work than usual is demanded from the men, and often quite unnecessarily. It is absolutely a disgrace to a Christian nation with a national Church that all notice of religion and God should be wanting at a time of peril among a force surrounded by dangers. The Mahometan and Hindoo soldiers in the force put us to shame, for I see them in groups daily engaged in public prayers, morning and evening, whereas we have had no public prayers for the Christian soldiers since we came up except once (and that once is doubtful, only hearsay)."

No words of mine are needful to express the burning feeling of indignation that ought to be felt by Christian people at such religious delinquency. The writer concludes his letter by telling us that many men have died and have been buried without any minister going near them, and that "the army of a Christian Power has been in the field for months without the Lord's day being observed once yet."

Having myself served throughout the Indian Mutiny, I have been much impressed with the unvaried successes that attended the enterprises therein of those pious officers who most honoured God, such as Havelock, Hope-Grant, and Herbert Edwardes, Commissioner of Peshawur, who succeeded in making a treaty with the ill-used Ameer of Cabul at a critical time when he might have taken his full revenge for the grievous injuries done him. Edwardes, moreover, about the same time made friends with the turbulent Afreedies, and got them and other border tribes to help us against our mutinied Sepoys!!! "Them that honour Me I will honour; and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed" (1 Sam. ii. 30)

IS MAN A SPIRIT?

SIR,—In a recent issue one of your contributors wrote:—"Do not teach your child that he is a body and has a spirit. Teach him, rather, that he is a spirit and has a body." May I ask for the Scripture for this? I read that "God is a spirit" (John iv. 24), that "the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit" (1 Cor. xv. 45). But nowhere can I find that man is a spirit, though he may hope to have a spiritual body through resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 44). That man has a spirit seems clear from Stephen's words, when he commended his spirit to the Lord (Acts vii. 59). Further, in the account of the creation of man we read: "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground" (see margin), "and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became" (not a spirit, but) "a living soul" (Gen. ii. 7); and when God declared the penalty of sin he said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. iii. 19). Are not these passages more in accordance with the psychology which is denounced than that which is recommended for parents to teach their children? However little it be in accordance with modern scientific ideas of the dignity of man, it must be better for us to take Abraham's scriptural position before God, when he said, "I am but dust and ashes" (Gen. xviii. 27) than to adopt John Wesley's claim, "I am an immortal spirit, strangely commingled with a small portion of clay."—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

H. C. BOWKER.

Irish Notes.

THE annual report of the Methodist Orphan Society has been published, and shows that the society has 216 children under its care.

Rev. William Beatty, of India, has been nominated by over twenty presbyteries for the Moderatorship of the General Assembly of Ireland.

The Dublin District Methodist Women's Total Abstinence Union, which is only three years old, has now a membership of 374, with twelve branches in the city and suburbs.

It has been proposed to amalgamate all the funds for the poor at the disposal of the various Methodist congregations in Dublin, and to dispense them through one central committee. The importance of this suggestion will be inferred when it is known that one of the congregations alluded to has an annual income of over £300 for the poor.

The Dublin branch of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children has issued a return showing that during the past three months 169 cases of neglect and starvation, 120 of ill treatment and assault, twenty-one of abandonment, ten of exposure, and four of causing children to beg were dealt with. Drink is the cause of nearly all the ill treatment and neglect of children in Dublin as elsewhere.

The Council of the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance have recently taken over a suite of rooms in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin. These include a fine reading-room and other accommodation for the use of the members and subscribers in the city and throughout the country. A pleasant reunion was held in the rooms on Tuesday last week, Rev. Samuel Printer presiding. An able and suggestive paper was read by Rev. Thomas Connellan on "The Weak Spot of Protestantism," and in a discussion which followed part was taken by Revs. Dr. Fletcher, J. C. Irwin, B.D., T. Preston Ball, J. Denham Osborne, A. M. Wesley Guard, R. E. Fletcher, and others. It is intended to hold similar conferences from time to time.

Home Arts and Industries Association.—The training classes held at the Royal Albert Hall have now reopened for the second term of the winter session. Bookbinding, wood-carving, inlay, cut leather work, basket-making, etc., are taught. Particulars can be obtained from the secretary at the hall.

Scottish Notes.

THE Y.W.C.A. in Elgin, Morayshire, report much encouragement. At their annual reunion stimulating addresses were given on "Influence," on "Temperance," and on the duty of consecration to the services of God.

Prof. G. A. Smith, of Glasgow, is conducting the students' meetings on Sunday evenings, in connection with Edinburgh University Christian Association. These meetings were begun, and for long carried on, by the late Prof. H. Drummond.

The Free Church and the U.P. Church Presbyteries have been dealing with the question of Sabbath desecration in Aberdeen. The question of the better observance of the day of rest is one which requires the immediate attention of all the churches.

The nineteenth annual social gathering of the Glasgow Christian Workers' Union was held on February 2, over 2000 being present. The Union numbers in its ranks Glasgow workers of all denominations in and around the city, and holds a conference quarterly.

During the past few months considerable progress has been made in the negotiations towards union between the Free and United Presbyterian Churches, and there is every appearance that the joint committee representing the two denominations will be in a position to report favourably at an early date.

The magistrates of Glasgow have resolved, in dealing with the reclamation of fallen women, that the police officials shall in future notify the superintendents of the various Homes of cases which are likely to come before the court, so that as many of the girls as are anxious to be rescued from their degrading condition may be handed over to them, and thus be saved from falling into the hands of old associates, as is now so often the case.

Last week, in Edinburgh, a large committee of representatives of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches were engaged in considering the question of the proposed union of the two denominations. The questions discussed had reference to the formula for a united Church, provision for the ministry, and the training of ministers. Substantial agreement was arrived at. The matter has to come before the Supreme Courts of each Church in May.

The Edinburgh City Mission has been at work for sixty-five years among the poorer portion of the city population. Daily visitation of the people in their homes is carried on by the missionaries in eight of the poorer districts, and over 1000 people belonging to the non-church-going class every Lord's Day hear the Gospel through the services conducted by the missionaries. In addition to the district missions, there are special missions to the lodging-house population, the cabmen, the public-houses, breweries, among fallen women, and in police-cells. 2050 tracts were given away in the public-houses, and 2770 prisoners met with, and 2650 books and tracts given away by the missionary. The work is accompanied with many tokens of the Divine blessing.

Health in Africa.

ON this important subject a correspondent in the Straits Settlements writes:—

"I cannot help thinking that the ill health which missionaries and others experience in Africa is to some extent due to a want of proper clothing. In two places, at least, in the Old Testament 'a mixed garment of wool and cotton' is forbidden; and although the Mosaic law is no longer binding on Christians, these injunctions, seeing that they were given for reasons connected with health, give a useful hint as to what the clothing should be in a climate like that of tropical Africa.

"For some years, after taking up my residence in a tropical climate, I myself continued to use the usual underclothing, which consists generally of a mixture of wool and cotton, with the result that I was hardly ever free from trifling ailments. I then adopted a clothing consisting entirely of wool, both by day and night, and in consequence there was a marked improvement in health. In tropical climates, where the body becomes constantly heated, a sudden chill is always risky, and to guard against this danger it is advisable that at least such clothing as touches the skin should be entirely of wool. The objection to flannel is that it is a mixture of wool and jute, which is a vegetable fibre."

Mr. J. Glenelg Grant, of Cardiff, gave his lantern lecture, entitled "Public or Publican," on Thursday last, in the Great Assembly Hall, E. The Hon. Mrs. Bertrand Russell presided, and Miss Beatrice Edwards, of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir, rendered two solos. The lecture was highly appreciated by a very large audience. At the close between 30 and 40 persons signed the pledge.

HOME.

A large combination of cotton spinners in the district of Manchester has been arranged, with a capital of six millions.

Among many important measures to be introduced into Parliament this session is a Local Government Bill for Ireland.

Her Majesty has visited Netley Hospital to express sympathy with the men there who have returned invalided from the Indian frontier campaign.

The Clergy Orphan Corporation experienced a diminution in income last year of over £900. This is a valuable institution, and should be generously supported.

The Prison Commissioners have decided that in future a burial service is to be read at the interment of the bodies of prisoners who have suffered the full penalty of the law.

Twenty-five trucks of German-made machinery—ordered during the recent engineers' strike—has arrived at Sheffield. The lessons which this teaches should be duly learned by the British workman.

The Passmore Edwards Settlement, in South St. Pancras, was opened by Mr. John Morley, M.P., on Saturday. A more distinctly religious influence is desirable in some of these otherwise useful social movements.

A proposal to allow lady students to become members of the Durham University has been defeated by seventy-two votes to eighteen. Durham undergraduates thus view the proposal with the same disfavour as those of Oxford and Cambridge.

Referring to the massacre of birds for the adornment of ladies' hats and bonnets with feathers, a writer in British Birds affirms that he saw a consignment of 500,000 birds' skins at Rio waiting shipment. Such deliberate slaughter for fashion's sake is positively wicked.

By permission of the Duke of Westminster a function was held at Grosvenor House on behalf of the Women's Total Abstinence Union.—Evidence has been given at the Liquor Commission in favour of reduction in the number of public-houses, and the more vigorous administration of the licensing laws.

The Atlantic mail steamer Veendam has foundered in mid-ocean, after striking some floating wreckage. A noble rescue of all passengers and crew was effected in a heavy sea by the American liner St. Louis.—The Teutonic arrived at New York after a terrible experience. Tons of frozen seas were clinging to her decks and spars.

More than a hundred cases of small-pox are under treatment at Middlesbrough. — Influenza is raging at Redruth, over seven hundred persons being attacked.—An inquiry into a fatal fire at Walthamstow showed that sixteen persons lived in premises intended for only two small families. Such overcrowding fosters shameful immorality as well as danger.

Great activity prevails at the naval depôt, Portsmouth. At Woolwich overtime is being worked in the manufacture of torpedoes and small arms ammunition.—Mr. Goschen declined to receive the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress with reference to the dismissal of workmen at Portsmouth Dockyard.—In the last thirty years English engineers have built 100,000 miles of railway, at a cost of £1,800,000,000, in various quarters of the globe, the capital being found in most cases by English companies.

Efforts are being made by the Early Closing Association to secure more generally in North London the weekly half-holiday and earlier hours on Saturday for shop assistants. Wise measures to secure shorter hours are much needed. — The directors of the Crystal Palace Company are formulating a scheme by which they say the "Sydenham Glass House" will be saved "alike from vestry control and the 'jerry' builder." A conference of municipal representatives to discuss the question of "acquisition" will be held at the Mansion House in March.—A special grant of £1000 towards workshops for masons' and plasterers' classes at the Battersea Polytechnic has been made by the London Technical Education Board.—A poll at Plumstead gave a majority of over 1000 in favour of the Public Libraries Acts. Free libraries contribute largely to the education and improvement of the people.

FOREIGN.

A supplementary credit of 17,000,000 frs. for Madagascar has been adopted by the French Chamber.

Russia is the only one among the great countries of Europe that continues to have an Anti-Semitic Government.

Since 1886 the revenue of the German Empire has more than doubled, having grown from £28,000,000 to £69,000,000.

Lieut. Peary, the American explorer, has completed the narrative of his seven Arctic expeditions.

The trial of M. Zola on a charge of defamation, which arose out of the Dreyfus scandal, is creating intense interest in Paris.

A suggestion is made in Jewish circles that Jews in the United States shall approximate their Sabbath to that of the Christians.

Taxation in Egypt has been reduced half a million since 1891. A scheme for further decrease is proposed at the rate of £E216.000 yearly.

A memorial to James Russell Lowell is contemplated in America by making a public park out of Elmwood, the poet's home at Cambridge, Massachusetts.

The executors under the Duc d'Aumale's will have handed over Chantilly Palace and its priceless treasures to the Institut de France, a most valuable bequest to the French nation.

A severe cyclone, destroying churches, hotels, and public buildings, has passed over the town of Mackay, Queensland.—The Suez Canal has been blocked by a sand storm.—A destructive earthquake has almost entirely destroyed Villapamow, in Argentina.

An iradé has been issued at Constantinople relieving the oppressed Armenians of many disabilities. Can Turkish officials be trusted to carry out these reforms?—The Bulgarian demand for the dismissal of Kaimakans, charged with permitting the ill-treatment of Bulgarians, has been refused by the Porte.

Losses on the Indian frontier up to Feb. 7 amount to 684 British and 1233 native troops. These include forty-three British officers killed, ninety wounded, and twelve soldiers missing. What a melancholy squandering of human life!—Warning has been sent the Afridi jirgahs that operations will be resumed against them unless the Government terms are complied with.

A Greek loan to cover the indemnity is to be guaranteed by Great Britain, France, and Russia.—The candidature of Prince George for the Governorship of Crete is suspended.—Panic among Christians in Thessaly has extended to Volo.—Rumours come from Athens of further fighting in the districts of Agrapha, causing considerable disquietude.—Later advices say that perfect tranquillity prevails along the neutral zone in Thessaly.

The Sultan of Morocco has given orders for the establishment of military posts along the Wadman coast to prevent further landing of arms.—The Englishmen arrested by the Moorish force at Arksis will be tried at the British consulate.—Severe fighting has taken place between the British force and the Sofas in the Gold Coast hinterland. Mr. Ferguson was wounded and decapitated.—Disputes between Peru and Chili are likely to be satisfactorily arranged.

China has finally abandoned the idea of contracting a loan either in London or elsewhere.—In the French Chamber 60,000frs. were voted to maintain three French doctors and two chemists at Yunnan (China).—The Japanese Minister has intimated to the Tsung-li-Yamên that no extension of time can be granted for payment of the war indemnity.—Five thousand Japanese labourers are about to leave Japan for Dawson City, viâ San Francisco.

The Chinese Government has granted to Great Britain the right to extend the Burma Railway through Yunnan; and to Germany the right to construct a railway to I-chang, as compensation for the murder of a German sentry at Kiao-Chao.—Great Britain is negotiating for the opening of Yuen-chan-fu, in Hunan, as a treaty port.—The Chinese Government has paid the indemnity of 100,000f. to France for the kidnapping of a French engineer in Tong-King.

A rapprochement has taken place between Germany and Spain.—The relations of Spain and America have undergone an unfavourable change.—Señor Dupuy de Lome, the Spanish Minister at Washington, has resigned. His Government have accepted the resignation.—America is expecting from Spain a disavowal, or an apology for Senor de Lome's utterances against President McKinley.—Señor Barrios, the President of Guatemala, has been assassinated. The vice-president reports, "tranquillity prevails"!

When addressing the South African League Congress, Mr. Rhodes advocated a federation of States under the British flag.—The League has decided to support the Cape's gift of a battleship to Great Britain.—Dinizulu, the Zulu chief, after years of exile, has been reinstated in Zululand as an hereditary chief.—President Kruger has been re-elected to the presidency of the Transvaal by a large majority over both his opponents.—A great trans-African expedition is to start for the exploration of the Southern territory of the Congo Free State.—In the West Coast of Africa States, a collision between the British and French seems imminent.—In Lagos hinterland British forces have occupied positions towards Nikki.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Marseilles Y.M.C.A. inaugurated its work in new premises on the last day of January.

At the quarterly meeting of the Sunderland Association a report read by Mr. Henry Johnson, general secretary, showed that there were now 1000 members and associates enrolled.

The Anglo-American Association, Paris, is now seriously working towards the much-desired "extension." A recent enthusiastic meeting resulted in 2,500fr. (£100) being promised in varying sums.

The first annual meeting of the Burnley Association has just been held, Mr. Foster E. Brady occupying the chair. The speakers included Revs. W. J. Barrett, E. J. Saxton, S. Smith, and F. D. Tranter.

Mr. Robert Snaith, of Dumfries, held lately a series of services under the auspices of the Glenluce Association, which has benefited by the accession of new members and hopes to continue the good work.

The annual meeting of the Torquay Association was held on Wednesday week under the presidency of Sir George Williams. Dr. Hingston, president of the Plymouth Association, gave the first address, and was followed by Dr. Odell. Rev. E. P. Gregg also gave a special address on the subject of "Betting."

A successful meeting was held in connection with the Blackburn Association. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. A. Watson, J.P., who spoke upon the interdenominational character of the Y.M.C.A. Addresses followed by Rev. B. Thompson and Mr. F. Martin. The association now numbers over 160.

The Scottish National Council of Y.M.C.A. is now composed of ninety-three members, including one from the British College Christian Union. The meetings are held alternately in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Stirling. All matters relating to the furtherance of association work in Scotland, the work of the travelling secretaries, and the Foreign Mission enterprise, are discussed. The work carried on is of more than national importance.

The first annual meeting of the Coventry Association, since the inauguration of the "Forward Movement," was held on Thursday evening at the Hertford-street Chambers, the chair being taken by the president, Mr. J. K. Starley. The report read by the secretary, Mr. J. H. Haise, indicated that little more than a year ago the membership was forty-eight, and at the opening of the present rooms the number was increased to 100. On December 31, 1897, the total membership was 245. The whole report was very encouraging.

The seventh annual International Social Reception of the Hackney Association was held on Thursday, Mr. W. H. Seagram acting as host. A large number of young men were present. The proceedings were of a most enjoyable and enthusiastic character. Short addresses were given by representatives of the following nationalities:—Germany, France, Austria, Hungary, Russia, Turkey, Poland, Holland, Switzerland, India, Corea, etc. Germany was the more strongly represented, having some forty or fifty representatives.

The Brompton Association held its forty-first annual meeting on the 9th inst., Mr. F. A. Bevan presiding, and addresses being given by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, Colonel Douglas Jones, and Mr. W. Hind Smith. According to the report the prospect before this branch is bright. There has been a crisis in its history, but the storm has been weathered, and fair weather has set in. The secretaryship is vacant, and a fine opportunity presents itself to some earnest and consecrated young man to come forward and offer himself for the work. This branch has the honour of being the foster parent of Harrod's Stores Christian Mission.

Upwards of 1000 people gathered in the Town Hall, Fulham, on Thursday last to celebrate the anniversary of the local Association. The chair was taken by the vice-president, Mr. J. Herbert Tritton. Pastor Fuller Gooch said it was a joy to him to see such a meeting in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and no call that came to him for service gave him greater pleasure than to be able to help such a blessed work. Proceeding, he gave a vigorous address on power and powerlessness. Prebendary Webb-Peploe referred to the special crusade against vice and Mr. McNeill's mission, and made an eloquent plea for decision and full devotion to Christ.

The anniversary meeting in connection with the Manchester Y.M.C.A. was held on Tuesday week in the Association Hall. Mr. Herbert Phillips presided. Mr. W. H. Newett, the general secretary, read a short report of the progress of the institution. During the year ending December 31, 1897, 692 new members and associates joined, and for the forty commercial classes 823 entries were received. The volumes issued from the circulating library numbered 7369. The cases of over 400 young men seeking employment were examined; many were without references or had unsatisfactory ones, but employment was found for seventy-four.

Christian Endeavour.

A Whitsuntide convention is being arranged in Glasgow, May 28-31.

"Endeavour Day" (February 2) roused much enthusiasm in C.E. circles all over the land, and in many countries.

A Sunday-school convention held recently in Allahabad, India, has been the means of starting four new Sunday-schools.

The C.E. Society at Henley-on-Thames has undertaken to support a child for five years in one of the mission schools of India, in connection with the L.M.S.

The South-west Essex Union has celebrated its third anniversary. The report stated that forty-two societies are affiliated to the Union with a membership of 2,218, an increase of 564 for the year,

Pastor Paul of Ravenstein, president of the United Society of Germany, is not only a successful minister, but is widely known as an earnest evangelist. His influence and energy have done much to deepen the C.E. movement in the fatherland.

Rev. William Carey, of Dhákâ, East Bengal, India, the great-grandson of the famous missionary, writes of a special visit to Calcutta, and of a tour through Assam, which were fruitful of results for the Endeavour movement in which he is so greatly interested.

The third annual meeting of the C.E. Society, Dalston Junction Baptist Church, was held on February 10th. The pastor and president, Rev. R. O. Johns presided, and addressed the junior society on the words "Little children, love one another." Rev. G. Hay Morgan eloquently urged all Christian Endeavourers to "be strong" (1) in enthusiasm, (2) in service. An earnest address on the subject of consecration was given by Rev. Richard Cole. The meeting which was interesting, instructive, and inspiring, was concluded by delegates from fifteen societies offering each a sentence of prayer. A total membership of 183 was reported; 132 in the Young People's, and fifty-one in the Junior Society.—Arthur Nelson.

The Convalescent Home for City Young Workwomen, 1, Albert-villas, Whitehall-road, Woodford Wells, is open all the year, but during the spring, summer, and autumn there are daily applications from girls and women for a rest and change. The majority of these are very poor, and if they have a holiday it must be free of charge. It is proposed to hold a sale of work at the end of March in aid of the institution, and towards this friends are asked to send contributions, before March 20, to the secretary, Miss Helen Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst Hill.

Nurses' National Total Abstinence League.—The annual members' meeting of this association was held on Jan. 24 at 9, Taviton-street, W., by invitation of Mrs. T. P. Whittaker. The president, the Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke, presided. The report was presented by Miss Holland, secretary, and the financial statement by Miss Whittaker, treasurer. Members of the nursing profession are cordially invited to join the League. Meetings are held at 7 p.m. on the first Wednesday in each month at the W.T.A.U. offices, 4, Ludgate-hill.

The Young Women's Christian Association.—February 20-27 is the Universal Week of Prayer for Young Women, and will be kept in other countries besides England. In many of the branches in India there will be special meetings for prayer. At the headquarters, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, meetings of a definitely evangelistic character will be conducted by a young lady at 11.30 for young ladies of leisure, and at 8.30 for young ladies in business. There will also be early-morning prayer-meeting at 7 a.m. at other centres of Y.W.C.A. activity. Full information can be had at headquarters. Special sermons will be preached on the Sunday of the Week of Prayer by Rev. H. Graham Thwaites, Rev. T. Trevelyan Snow, and others.

The Bible Society.—With reference to the recently announced bequest of about £80,000 to the Bible Society, from the estate of the late Rev. E. N. Pochin, Vicar of Barkby, Leicestershire, we are informed by Rev. John Sharp, one of the secretaries of the society, that "as the widow, two sons, and daughter were passed over in the will, the committee have, after most anxious and careful examination into all the circumstances of the case, and under legal advice, felt it their duty to undertake to relinquish, for the benefit of the family, half whatever sum the society may eventually receive under the will." The ever-extending calls upon the society make the help which the other half will afford it most welcome, but this will by no means render needless sustained efforts to keep up the ordinary income of the society.

The Book World.

"Can a Horse do Without Shoes?" is a question considered in the February issue of The Animals' Friend. There are other useful articles in this admirably illustrated monthly, with which a Children's Supplement is now issued. (2d. George Bell & Sons.)

From an Irish parish come Twelve Sermons, by Rev. Sir Algernon Coote, Bart., refreshingly evangelical and pointed in their clear setting of vital truth. Happy would it be for our land if such utterances more often rang from the pulpits of our rural churches.

Two pleasant tales for young people come from Messrs. Warne & Co., My Neighbour's Garden (1s. 6d.) and The Ruler of this House. (1s.) By Mary H. Debenham. Both are well written and purposeful—evidently the enforcement of a temperance moral.

The simple annals of life contain many touching pages. Some brief glimpses of such episodes are given in Mumper, and Other Stories, by Joseph Laing Waugh (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier). It is every-day life which finds illustration in these short tales, but it is life full of pathos and strong endurance.

The sudden home-call of that devoted Australian evangelist Rev. John MacNeil, lent a special interest to his book, The Spirit-filled Life, which already has had a good circulation. Hence we welcome a new and cheaper edition (1s. Marshall Bros.), which cannot fail to find many readers.

A new edition of Footprints of the Saviour, by the Bishop of Ripon, has been issued by Mr. Allenson (2s. 6d.). The book is in twelve chapters, dealing with the sites and scenes of the greater events in our Lord's ministry. Descriptive and meditative, the pages deserve many readers. There are several illustrations.

The Diamond Jubilee Bible Text Book, by John Jackson, F.E.I.S. (Sampson Low & Co.) has a short, well-chosen, and correlated Scripture prayer, promise, and precept for every day in the year. An edition is also published with space for recording birthdays (2s. and 2s. 6d.). Both editions are beautifully printed in black and red, and elegantly bound.

Many who have heard the late Dr. Phillips Brooks, or are familiar with his writings, will enjoy the perusal of two addresses delivered by him before the Church Congress, and published with the title Best Methods of Promoting Spiritual Life. (1s. 6d. Service & Paton.) The pages are illustrative of the massive style of the lamented author, and set forth great truths in a striking form.

Books of outlines and anecdotes for Christian teachers are legion, but there was ample room for My Scrap Book, by Mr. R. Manders, which the Bishop of Liverpool recommends in a hearty introduction. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) The outlines are both old and new; and, after a few acrostics, there is a goodly budget of anecdotes. Mr. Manders has gathered to real purpose, and to many his scrap-book will be of real service.

Many of the gentler sex have shown great heroism in the time of danger. A series of such instances are grouped in Heroines of History, by Frank Mundell. Here the stories are told of Joan of Arc, the Maid of Sargossa, Catherine Douglas, and many women equally brave. In a companion book for boys, Balloon Adventures, by the same author, a number of aerial episodes of a stirring kind are given. (1s. 6d. each. Sunday School Union.)

A new issue of Sermons by Present-day Preachers is being issued by Horace Marshall & Sons, the first of the series being The Gentleness of Jesus. By Rev. Mark Guy Pearse (3s. 6d.). These short addresses are full of earnest thought, freshly put, in the preacher's own graphic style. An instructive study of the Queen of Sheba is given in two of the sermons; other and more out-of-the-way themes are admirably handled; but the charm of the whole is the sweet setting forth of Christ, whose fragrance breathes in every page.

An ever welcome visitor from Ireland is The Catholic, edited by Rev. Thomas Connellan. Month by month it ministers to our interest in religious movements in the Sister Isle; and when, at the end of the year, the parts come to hand stitched together in a cover we feel that we are rich in information on subjects of great and far-reaching importance to Ireland and the United Kingdom. There are articles on the Romish controversy; also facts of great value and interest, especially regarding Ireland and her religious history. (1s. 3d. post free. Office, 51*b*, Dawson-street, Dublin.)

The story of earnest work is always of interest, and not least when it concerns the brave sons of the sea. Thus, Among the Sailors, by G. Holden Pike (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) will be welcomed as a readable narrative of efforts for the well-being of men who go down to the sea in ships, during the life and reign of Queen Victoria. Various workers and societies who have laboured in this field are duly noticed, but the writer mainly concerns himself with the origin and operation of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, and the record, as here given, is one of good and faithful service, carried on in face of many difficulties and rewarded by many tokens of happy issue.

Some time ago we notified our readers that a useful work by Rev. John Urquhart on "Modern Discoveries and the Bible" was being issued in the form of monthly supplements to The King's Own. With the February issue of the magazine the work is completed. The general contents of our contemporary continue to be good, and of special interest to those who watch the ever-recurring confirmations of Holy Scripture from the field of archæological research, and the diligence with which men of faith are meeting the criticisms of speculation and the objections of unbelief. (6d. monthly. Marshall Bros.)

An interesting little book of travel is Letters from the Mediterranean, by Dr. John Rose, of Chesterfield, staff surgeon Royal Navy (retired list). The letters were addressed to friends at home during the author's three years' service in H.M.S. Frolic on the Mediterranean station. Dr. Rose visited many places of sacred and classical interest, and writes of them in a simple matter-of-fact way. He describes travels and observations along the coasts and in Italy and Palestine, and there are many indications of a warm Christian sympathy. (Paper 6d.; cloth, 1s. J. Hartley, Central Pavement, Chesterfield).

While special concern has of late been given to the advancement of spiritual life, the theme is no new one, for at all times earnest men have devoted to it their best thoughts. A hundred and twenty years ago a Treatise on Sanctification, by Rev. James Fraser, of Alness, gave rise to considerable controversy as to his interpretation of Rom. vii.—that verses 14-25 describe the Apostle's own expeperience—a believer's conflict with inward sin. This treatise has now been republished, edited by Rev. John Macpherson, of Findhorn. (7s. 6d. Bliss, Sands, & Co.) To say that it is largely controversial is only to affirm that it is in the spirit of its age; but apart from this it is a weighty utterance on a theme of the first importance, and as such deserves the earnest study of those who are giving attention to the deepening of the spiritual life. A brief biographical notice of the author lends fresh interest to the volume.

The German Nature Cure and How to Practise it. (3s. 6d. Nichols & Co., 23, Oxford-street, W.) The compiler of this most interesting handbook on health has with great industry collected and presented the leading points in the teaching of German experimental specialists on the various so-called "natural" modes of curative treatment in operation in that country. We express no opinion on the debated question of allopathy v. hydropathy, but we readily commend this work to the impartial study of all who are concerned for their own health or that of others. The origin, cure, and prevention of disease, hydropathic appliances, treatment by light, air, exercise, dieting, and other "nature" methods are simply and clearly expounded; while the specific treatment of the commonest forms of disease on the system here advocated is tersely prescribed. There is much that is excellent in the book as to which there will be no difference of opinion.

The February issue of Light and Leading gives the second chapter of Rev. C. Anderson Scott's serial, "The Child's Guide to Personal Religion." Other features are "The Teacher's Reference Shelf," by Rev. J. Gregory; and Outline Sermonettes on the Golden Texts, by Prof. Adeney. (Allenson.)

Mr. George Allen will shortly publish a new work by Rev. Alexander Robertson, D.D., Venice, entitled The Bible of St. Mark; being the history of St. Mark's Church, Venice, and the interpretation of all its Christian sculptures and Scriptural mosaics. The book will be full of illustrations, prepared specially for the work. Two editions are being published together, one of which, an edition de luxe, has already been largely taken up.

Christian Influences in Morocco.—In his forthcoming History of Morocco Mr. Budgett Meakin has devoted a chapter to the examination of the records of the North African Church, the extent of which he considers to be generally over-estimated, to the work of the Franciscan mission since the thirteenth century, and to the growth and outlook of evangelical work during the past two decades. The story of the Christian slaves and martyrs of Morocco is also told, together with that of the so-called Christian mercenaries in the Moorish service, many chapters which have important bearings and bring forward little known facts of great interest.

Personalia.

Prebendary H. Webb-Peploe has accepted the presidency of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, in succession to Archdeacon Sinclair.

Dr. Michael Foster, Professor of Physiology in Cambridge University, has been appointed "Gifford" lecturer in succession to Rev. Dr. A. B. Bruce.

Sir J. W. Dawson, Emeritus Principal of the McGill University, Canada, has, we regret to hear, had a stroke of paralysis, and his life is despaired of.

Rev. David Baron is leaving to-day (Thursday) for a mission tour among Jews in the East. He goes by way of Paris and Marseilles to Alexandria, and will visit many places in Egypt. Mr. Baron will be accompanied by Pastor Gordon, of the Swedish Mission, Budapest.

Rev. S. D. F. Salmond, D.D., Professor of Systematic Theology in the Free Church College, Aberdeen, has been nominated to the principalship of the college in succession to the late Rev. Dr. David Brown. Professor Salmond is the editor of the Critical Review and the author of a treatise on "Immortality."

Rev. E. Vanorden has in the press a new translation of the Psalter from the original into Portuguese, made by Senhor Santos Saraiva, formerly a priest of the Church of Rome, whose father was a Jewish Rabbi, and who is now a teacher of Portuguese in Mackenzie College (American), Sao Paulo, Brazil. The translation is accompanied by copious notes.

Mrs. M. Prinsep.—By the death of this honoured lady the Trinitarian Bible Society will receive £1000, the Association for Free Distribution of the Scriptures £500, and the Open Brethren (meeting at George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh) £1000 for the work of preaching the Gospel on the east coast of Scotland, especially in her native county of Haddington.

Mr. A. J. Arnold.—Our readers will hear with much regret that Mr. Arnold, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, is still in a prostrate condition at his residence in West Norwood. He is, however, beginning to regain a measure of strength, though it must be long before he can resume active work. Will his many friends join in prayer that full recovery may be granted?

Miss Meredith Brown, of the Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson-grove, N.W., is undertaking a three weeks' visit to Scotland in the interest of her work. She has arranged to address many meetings, at which limelight views will be employed to illustrate real life in London slums. Miss Brown hopes to get funds in aid of her many-sided work, also for the Deaconesses' House connected with the Institute.

Dr. McLaren, who has completed the fortieth year of his ministry at Union Chapel, Manchester, celebrated on Thursday the seventy-second anniversary of his birthday. In spite of advancing years, he seems to have lost none of his power and attractiveness as a preacher. His exegetical skill, his resources of illustration, his clear and incisive style of putting points remain as pronounced as ever. If one notices any change at all, it is in the doctor's growing attachment to Evangelical principles, and his fear lest these may be overlooked in the crush of new movements and ideas.

Fallen Asleep.

At Selkirk, on Sunday morning, Feb. 6, in her ninety-fourth year, Janet Bathgate, author of "Aunt Janet's Legacy."—At the Deanery, Winchester, on 8th inst., Archdeacon Anson, aged seventy-eight, formerly of Manchester, where for many years he was one of the leading clergymen, distinguished, writes one, by "a beauty of holiness" rather than by eloquent preaching.—At Ryde, Rev. Thomas Hulme, aged seventy-seven, after fifty-three years' active service in the Wesleyan ministry.—At Swanage, Miss Squibb, aged ninety-six, a quiet but devoted Christian.—At Hindley, Mr. Edwin Lowe, an energetic temperance and Sunday-school work.—At 30, Lancaster-road, Leicester, on 2nd inst., Mrs. Bailey, aged seventy-eight, widow of Rev. W. Bailey, formerly Baptist missionary at Orissa, India.—At Bridgwater, Mrs. Dukes, wife of Rev. E. J. Dukes, of Bridgwater, and daughter of the late Rev. Henry Pope—a graduate of the University of London, who during her residence at Bridgwater has been unwearying in her labours in questions affecting the woman's side of Church life, and has more than once been chosen to prepare papers to be read before the Congregational Union and the Free Church Council.—At Edgbaston, Mrs. Robinson, for many years a most useful worker in connection with Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, her earliest work at Carr's-lane being a class which she undertook when Mr. R. W. Dale divided the work into sections, the young women's section being given to her. This class met fortnightly for eight years in her house in Edgbaston. Her principal work, however, was the mothers' meetings at the Park-street Mission Rooms, which she successfully carried on for sixteen years.—At Norwich, Mrs. Hannah Jarrold, widow of the late Mr. Thomas Jarrold, for many years head of the well-known publishing firm, an active worker in religious and philanthropic movements.—At Moseley, Mr. H. T. Howse, aged sixty-seven, for many years in earlier life actively associated with Lombard-street Baptist Chapel.—At Southgate, Rev. Cyril Fitz Roy Wilson, vicar of Christ Church, Southgate, after a short illness.—At Colney Heath, St. Albans, on 10th inst., Rev. William Bailey, aged 75, rector of the parish and formerly missionary of the London Jews' Society at Jerusalem.—At Woodpark, co. Armagh, Mr. Wm. Davidson, a most earnest and successful class leader and Sunday-school superintendent.—At Roscrea, Miss Mary Treanor, a devoted Christian worker.

Among the Churches

Church of England.

Rev. G. F. Head has been instituted to his new charge at Clifton.

The Church Congress meets this year at Bradford, Sept. 28-30.

The rector of Friday Bridge, Wisbech, Rev. L. Clutterbuck, has been appointed to Teversham, near Cambridge.

Rev. J. R. Shortt, classical lecturer and examiner in the University of Durham, has accepted the charge of Southwick, near Sunderland.

Rev. J. T. Read, vicar of New St. George's, Stalybridge, is suffering from serious illness, which has for the present incapacitated him for his duties.

Sir John Kennaway, M.P., presided on Wednesday over the annual meeting of the Ladies' Prayer Union, in connection with the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews.

The Duchess of Sutherland will preside at Stafford House at the annual meeting of the Women's Union of the London Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, to be held March 31.

During last week Mr. S. Bradfeild, in charge of the "Bishop Hooper" Protestant Van, has been holding successful meetings at Ditton Priors, Salop. Mr. Smallman kindly lent his workshop, which was crowded to excess every evening with a very attentive audience.

Many will warmly sympathise with the Rev. C. H. Wainwright, vicar of Christ Church, Blackpool, in the sad bereavement which has befallen him through the death of his wife. Moreover, it is not long since that Mr. Wainwright lost his only son, whose career was remarkably full of promise.

At the next meeting of the C.M.S. Younger Clergy Union for London on Monday, Feb. 21, at 3 p.m., at Salisbury-square, Rev. G. Furness Smith will give five minutes of latest information, and Rev. Ernest Millar, who has been five years in Uganda, and leaves England on his return thither on Feb. 23, will address the Union.

The annual statement of Christ Church, Hampstead, indicates a large variety of fruitful effort. Rev. Henry Sharpe, the vicar, makes an impressive plea for simplicity in worship and loyalty to the Word of God. He shows that when forms take the place of spiritual power the Church speedily becomes like Samson, "shorn of his locks, who wist not that his strength had departed."

Congregational.

A new chapel has been opened at Newbridge, Mon.

Rev. R. D. Wilson has entered on his new charge at Stockwell.

Rev. E. A. Hytch has completed 21 years' pastoral service at Great Harwood.

At Redhill 315 members are reported, while the "Men's Own" has 410 on the roll.

Rev Herbert Arnold, of Lavender-hill, has received a call to Southernhay, Exeter.

The new pastor, Rev. M. F. Peterson, has been welcomed at Addison-street, Nottingham.

Rev. W. Owen, of Wuchang, China, has felt compelled to resign his missionary charge.

The work at West Kensington, under the care of Rev. H. P. Young, has shown distinct revival during last year.

Rev. E. Griffith-Jones, well known for his successful work at Mount View Church, Stroud Green, has accepted a call to Balham.

Rev. Theodore Woodman closes his ministry at Lyme Regis on March 27. Ere leaving he is making an effort to clear off a small debt on the church.

Rev. W. Crosbie, of Nottingham, having completed 43 years of ministry and having nearly attained his seventieth year, feels compelled to seek release from his pastoral duties.

The mission hall, Rice-lane, Walton, of which Rev. Lewis Weaver is pastor, is being considerably enlarged, and Mr. W. P. Hartley, of Aintree, has promised to give 10 per cent. on all that is raised to defray cost.

A spirit of great activity prevails at Hope Chapel, Wigan. The new Sunday-schools are expected to be ready for opening about the end of March, the cost of which exceeds £3500. Thirty-six new members were added to the church on Sunday, February 6. Rev. C. F. Richardson, son of a Madagascar missionary, now in England, is pastor.

The work at New Court, Tollington Park, under the care of Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, is shown by the new manual to be in a flourishing and live condition. Last year the total income was £3055. Arrangements have been made to clear off a debt of £1800, to pay for renovation and to provide a fund for an aggressive movement during the next three years. Twelve thousand five shilling shares are to be issued, of which one-third are to be paid in 1898, one-third in 1899, and the final third in 1900.

Baptist.

Mr. C. E. Stone's church at Luton now numbers 436 members.

Rev. James Mursell commenced his ministry at Hackney Downs on Sunday.

Mr. A. G. Yeats has been recognised as pastor at Gardenwalk, Ashton-on-Ribble.

The Bristol Baptist Itinerant Society report a balance of £200 due to the treasurer.

The Baptist Young People's Association of America will hold a convention at Buffalo, July 14-17.

At Brunswick-road, Gloucester, 366 members are reported, of whom 37 have been received during the past year.

Recognition services in connection with the Settlement of Rev. T. R. Lewis as first pastor at Upper Edge, Elland, were held last Saturday and Sunday.

To celebrate the Jubilee of Bloomsbury Chapel, so long the scene of the ministry of the late Dr. William Brock, £2000 are to spent in modernising the building.

Recognition services in connection with the settlement of Rev. R. E. Chettleborough as pastor at Hockliffe-street, Leighton Buzzard, were held on Wednesday, Feb. 9.

If the receipts of the Baptist Missionary Society for the last quarter of the present financial year show no relative improvement on the first three quarters, Mr. William R. Rickett fears a deficiency of about £11,500.

During the 20 years' pastorate of the Rev. William Williams at Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, 1400 members have been received into fellowship. The new report shows activity and life in every department. The three Sunday-schools report great prosperity.

The third anniversary of the pastor's settlement at George-street, Nottingham, was held on Sunday, February 6, and Thursday, 10. The pastor (Louis C. Parkinson) sat in his vestry all day Thursday to receive contributions towards the deficit of £63 on the improvement fund. At the soirée in the evening it was announced that this deficit had been fully met. The pastor reported that the church was making considerable progress spiritually, and that there were signs of more blessing to follow.

The annual thank-offering and day of prayer at the East London Tabernacle will be held on Monday, 21st inst. Meetings for prayer and praise will take place at 7.30 and 11 a.m., also at 3 and 7.30 p.m. Officers will be in attendance during the entire day to receive the free-will offerings of those who have cause to thank God for the house and its ministry. Old members and friends unable to be present are asked to forward their thank-offerings addressed to the deacons at the Tabernacle, E.

Rev. Thomas Moore, pastor at Harper, Kansas, who fell dead a few Sundays ago from an apoplectic stroke in the midst of his sermon, says the New York Observer, "was one of the five young men who, in 1865, originated the Salvation Army movement in London, and was one of the first to start the same movement in this country. For many years he was closely associated with General Booth. He was educated in the Pastor's College, and was called as pastor of the Baptist Church at Harper while conducting revival meetings near there about a year ago. He had been active in the Temperance campaign, which resulted in closing the saloons and 'joints,' and at the time of his death was engaged in a successful union mission."

Methodist.

A new chapel is being put up in a populous district of Barrow.

Mr. W. Sampson has concluded a successful mission at Gravenhurst, Luton.

Rev. W. D. Walters held good services last week at Wesley Hall, Newcastle.

The united mission in the Wesleyan chapels of Newcastle has produced cheering results.

Successful missions have been conducted at Honeywell-lane and Hollingwood, Oldham, by Rev. G. H. Christie.

A new Wesleyan chapel has been opened in Bulawayo. Rev. Isaac Shimmin, the superintendent minister, is leaving for the Zambesi on a missionary exploration.

A great simultaneous mission is being held in Bolton and Farnworth, Revs. Thomas Champness, S. Chadwick, Thomas Waugh, and Thomas Cook being among the evangelists.

The opening services of the United Methodist Free Chapel, Goole, took place past week, the preacher being Rev. T. Sherwood, Principal of the Theological Institute, Manchester.

Mr. J. C. Izard, one of the first students of Leys School, Cambridge, will take charge of the school in place of Rev. Dr. Moulton, pending further arrangements. For some time Mr. Izard has been senior resident master.

The Blackpool home mission station of the Methodist New Connexion has just announced the successful completion of its effort to celebrate the centenary of the Connexion. The growth of the mission during the last three years has been remarkable, and there seems every prospect of the work still further increasing. A branch of the mission was established at Layton about a year ago, and the results so far have been very encouraging.

Rev. S. F. Arrowsmith, vicar of Ogley Hay, was present on Monday week at a sale of work in the Wesleyan chapel and schools at Brownhills. He explained that his presence, as a clergyman of the Church of England, was due to his desire to show that he entertained the kindliest feelings towards their church and ministers. They had travelled a little way from the Divine command to love one another, but it was a happy thing to see that the tendency was now to be drawn nearer to each other.

Presbyterian.

Rev. D. N. Connan has resigned his charge at Kentish Town.

At the annual meeting of St. Andrew's, Nottingham, a membership of 264 was reported, and an income of £952.

It is expected that Rev. W. A. Galt, of Walsall, will receive a call to Ilford, and Rev. Dr. Cooke to Cavershamroad, Reading.

Dr. Thain Davidson's health having improved during his stay at Cannes, he purposes returning to his work at Ealing on March 6.

Rev. R. E. Welsh, who for some time has rendered assistance to the literary department of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has declined to succeed the late Rev. G. Wilson as literary superintendent.

Dr. Monro Gibson's Church at St. John's Wood reports an income for the past year of £8705, and a membership of 865. All the agencies of the congregation (including the mission at Kilburn, which has a separate membership of 149) were in active operation.

Society of Friends.

Anti-slavery work and Armenian relief had much attention at the meeting for sufferings held on the 4th inst.

Wm. Hobson, of London, has concluded a week's mission at Stockton-on-Tees, which began with a lecture on "George Fox—His Times and His Missions," and ended on Sunday last with a large Gospel meeting.

A handsome drinking-fountain in memory of the late Sidney Cooper Weston has lately been erected in Folkestone. A permanent record is thus made of a noble and unselfish life, devoted to human welfare and the Divine glory.

At the "morning meeting" on ministry and oversight, on the 31st ult., Joseph G. Alexander returned a minute granted him for Gospel work in France, and his brother, Samuel Joseph Alexander, received a minute for service in France, especially in the south of that country.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

THE Archbishop of York has been calling the attention of his clergy to the great diminution in the number of confirmations. This may be accounted for in some places by what a contemporary calls "the growing distrust of parents of the instruction given to their children." Certain clergy use this opportunity to inculcate into the minds of the young that auricular confession is a necessary preliminary to receiving the Communion, and to train them to a system of adoration that is simply the worship of the elements. So, many parents, who are loyal enough to their Church prefer not to expose their children to this danger. Let us hope it may show the Romanising section of the clergy that they cannot so act with impunity, and that some English fathers and mothers mean to stand out against it.

Bishop Ryle (Liverpool) still enforces his opposition to these Romish pretensions. Speaking in support of the Church Pastoral Aid Society he condemned in strong terms the growing practice of auricular confession.

The Bishop of Rochester, though an undoubtedly earnest High Churchman, would not be pronounced "a faddist," and yet he has said that there is a great deal of heathenism in this country among high and low, rich and poor.

Men who have worked in heathen lands tell us frankly that for sheer irreligion parts of our own English life are worse than anything in their knowledge.

Such words ought to have great weight with all professing Christians, and should lead them to inquire how far they are responsible for such a condition of things. As the Bishop says,

Much of the darkness is due to the dimness and feebleness of the lamp.

If the lump is not salted, it is because the salt lacks saltness. An active, pungent, purifying religion never fails to save the world that lies all around the churches. The heathenism of rich and poor will be changed when the practical atheism of many so-called Christians becomes a living faith. Compare the "Scenes in a Northern Town" described on p. 23.

At a "Children's Festival in Staffordshire" an important part of the proceedings seems to have been a service in which "catechising" the youthful audience stood prominently forth. Amongst the subjects upon which the girls and boys were questioned occurred the "two greater and five lesser sacraments." The distribution of rewards was made by the vicar standing upon the chancel steps robed in his cope. The rewards, it is said, varied "from crucifixes and statues of our Lady to smaller books and little framed pictures of Scripture subjects." This, in what is known generally as the "Protestant Church of England." It cannot be supposed for a moment that Christ conceived of "crucifixes and statues of our Lady" when He said, "Suffer the little children, and forbid them not to come unto Me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The Dean of Durham notes with regret, as do many others, the rapid growth of militarism in England, and the corresponding deflection from the Gospel of Christ. He thinks that the Christian Church ought to be very grateful to the Society of Friends for their courage in holding firm "to the truth that warfare is contrary to the Gospel, and that, after all, Christ is Prince of Peace." He is, however, very hopeless of any change of sentiment or opinion being created, and thinks "we may be drawing near to a great punishment for our unfaithfulness." If the Dean could get all Christian teachers to think as he himself does, we should soon see the change he deems impossible. See our reply to a correspondent on p. 19.

Lord Meath recently sent to The Times a copy of a letter addressed to himself by Lord Roberts on "The Military Training of Boys." Lord Roberts is greatly enamoured of the Boys' Brigade and Church Lads' Brigade, as agencies which may be utilised for training the youth of the kingdom to arms. He says :—

I can speak with some experience of the Boys' Brigade, for I am one of the vice-presidents, and I have made it my business to satisfy myself as to its working, especially in Glasgow, where the movement was first started twelve years ago. The results, to my mind, are most satisfactory, and an inspection I made of the headquarters of the Brigade last May confirmed me in my opinion that the organisation is worthy of every encouragement, and that a wide extension of the movement would do much for the present and future of our country.

Even if any large proportion of them do not join the ranks, they would form a considerable section of the population on whom we could draw in the event of a national emergency, and who, from their previous training and discipline, would probably become quite as effective soldiers in an equally short space of time as would the Reserve men after they had been away from the colours for three or four years.

This is strongly confirmatory of the contention put forward, that the Boys' Brigade is chiefly regarded by military men as an organisation for making soldiers. And it should not be forgotten that Lord Roberts is the man who issued an order in India calling for more attractive women to be provided for our soldiers. What a possible future for some of the boys !

Notwithstanding the protests of "the trade" against any interference with the present right of publicans to serve drink to children, there are renewed and earnest efforts made in different parts of the country to obtain a change of the law. At the instance of the Brighton School Board, a body which may be supposed to know how detrimental to children is the practice of sending them to the public-house, and also of other bodies, the justices, at a special meeting convened to consider the subject, unanimously declared that it was "highly injurious to the best interests of children and the community." Words like these, spoken by men who cannot be described as "faddists," ought at length to move the Government to bring in and pass a Bill to safeguard children. Both parties would be supported by public opinion in passing it, and there is plenty of time if once there is an earnest purpose. (See article on CHILD DRUNKARDS, p. 11.)

The death, at the age of seventy-seven, of Sir James Stansfeld, for thirty-six years M.P. for Halifax, will cause regret wherever men hold in esteem uprightness and unselfishness in public characters. He championed the claims of public morality, and supported Mrs. Josephine Butler and her friends with a clear apprehension of the sacred principles involved. He was vigilant, fearless, and able, giving time and care to master every detail, and shrank from no sacrifice in promoting the cause of purity. It is interesting to note that the Italian Parliament has voted a "solemn salute of gratitude to the memory of Sir James Stansfeld, the friend of Mazzini and Garibaldi."

We remember the millions who for nearly two milleniums have borne triumphant witness to the truth that man is greater than his circumstances.

So said Mr. Thomas Walker, an ex-editor of the Daily News, who died last week, and who, in his own brave, upright life, exhibited the power that such a faith had to sustain him in times of temptation. During the American Civil War, when he espoused the side of the North as that of righteousness and humanity, the circulation of the great "daily" declined to six thousand, but man was greater than circumstances. The truth prevailed, and the editor, who believed in it, died honoured and lamented. It is Christian faith which gives this superiority to circumstances its grandest distinction, and of this faith Mr. Walker was not ashamed either in public or private.

Elsewhere we have noted the successful resumption of Rev. John McNeill's Gospel work in London, after a week's recess for much-needed rest. We wish to call special attention to the series of mid-day addresses to business men next week (Monday to Friday inclusive) in Exeter Hall, beginning at 1 p.m. As a locale, the Strand is not so well suited to business men as the City proper, and as the building is large, friends of the mission are earnestly desired to make these meetings known in their circle of acquaintances. The meetings will, of course, be open to ladies as well as gentlemen.

As to the financial side of this united effort, the committee desire to say that they are endeavouring to meet the expenses of the mission as they are incurred, month by month. In order to accomplish this they earnestly invite Christian friends who sympathise with the work to send contributions. Cheques may be sent to Mr. T. A. Denny, Treasurer, 7, Connaught-place, W., or to the Secretary, Mr. N. R. Hughman, Room 20, Exeter Hall, Strand.

In The Christian Intelligencer (New York) Dr. Cuyler says some very true and pertinent things about "Simple and Direct Preaching." If he be anything as a preacher, the doctor himself is simple and direct, while every word he utters is clothed with a power from heaven.

No one is better able, therefore, to counsel preachers than he. After quoting Dr. Hitchcock's saying, "The Gospel ought to be in the preacher's blood like iron, in his eye like fire, and in his voice like a trumpet call," Dr. Cuyler proceeds :—

If every minister worthy of the name is a message-bearer from God, then he ought to aim at the utmost simplicity in the shaping of his message. That message ought not to be a difficult riddle to be solved or a hard nut to be cracked; it should be the bread of life—and well baked too—that every hungry soul can digest, and the water of life that every soul can swallow.

How different all this is from the elaborate essay, the laboured disquisition upon some side issue of the Gospel, the classical or scientific treatment of God's plan of saving souls. He who aims at the simplicity which is in Christ must be on the safe trend of the Great Teacher Himself.

The pastor of a Nonconformist church had called his people together to intimate that he had accepted a call to another sphere of work his decision being received with profound regret. "What did you think of the meeting?" asked one member of another. "I thought, was the reply, "that if as many came to the service every Wednesday evening as came to-night he would not have left us." The moral is obvious. Of course, much depends on the fare a minister provides, but if his people realise their share of responsibility in regard to the "week evening" as well as the Sunday services, many a pastor would lose his sense of depression and gain heart. Thus he and they would reciprocally benefit, and the whole neighbourhood would feel the result. There is a monotony of expression on the face of empty seats that is not inspiring to a preacher.

The writer of an impressive article in the Church Times, on the growing indifference of the nation at large to spiritual things, asks :—

What can be the spiritual condition of parishes where the priests themselves admit that the average attendance on Sunday mornings is not more than 500 out of 11,000 parishioners, or of 700 out of 20,000, or of 250 out of 13,000?

This, of course, does not recognise the Nonconformist congregations; but when these have been accounted for, it is only a sample of hundreds of parishes in the crowded centres of population. Behind this lies the significant condition of society as a whole—the restlessness of the political world, the dark clouds that hang over the horizon of international affairs, the vice that is eating away the manhood of the Army, the insane speculations and gambling mania that runs through all classes, the open iniquity that flaunts itself in our streets. All this has its root in the decay of religion, which, as all history shows, can never proceed far without endangering the life of a nation And the remedy lies in a thorough awakening to the fact, and a realisation of the responsibility of Christian churches, whose sole rationale is the preservation and quickening of love, faith, and holiness of life.

Devout Churchmen may well cry, "Save us from our friends," after reading the following in the Standard :—

A great deal of the support now given by the laity to the Church of England is given to her because she is the Established Church, which it is highly desirable to retain in the position it has always held. Free the Church altogether from the control of the State, and it may be questioned whether many subscriptions now cheerfully given would not show signs of falling off. It is to the social and secular side of the Church of England that many laymen are so warmly attached.

When we speak of the hold which the Church has upon the nation, we mean the Church as she is; the Church in communication with the State, and occupying a great position as a social and political power.

If this were true, it would be an unblushing confession of the paralysing effect of State establishment on a Christian church, and the sooner such an unholy "marriage of convenience" were dissolved the better it would be for the Church and for religion, and therefore for the State.

The question raised in Parliament by Mr. J. A. Pease, on the failure of the Government to abolish slavery in Zanzibar, disclosed a lamentable lack of zeal on the part of the authorities in this movement. The reply given was that the "decree of abolition" was "intended to abolish not slavery itself, but the legal status of slavery"; a slave being thereby empowered to go to a court constituted for the purpose and claim his freedom. As a result, the 200,000 slaves in the island are obtaining their freedom at the rate of 40 a month! The position is a humiliating one, and the British public should see that the "moral enthusiasm" (?) of the Government is stirred up to the point of effective action. It is nothing short of a national disgrace that the British flag should continue to float over an institution which we are pledged by all our traditions of freedom to make no truce with.

It is difficult to see what is the real grievance which so persistently urges Irish Roman Catholics to demand a university of their own subsidised by Government. Last week's debate failed to bring it to light, though it is clear that there are secret sympathisers on both sides of the House, as well as in almost all the daily papers, including even the Daily News. All the Universities in Ireland are open to Catholics, and there is probably not a college in the island that has not Roman Catholic professors. Not a single argument has been adduced why a Romish University should be endowed by Government which would not be equally applicable, say, to a Welsh claim for a Nonconformist University. There seems to be a perilous tendency on all hands to favour Rome in any and every claim she puts forward for preferential treatment. It is time to be awake to this grave danger.

One fact detailed in the monthly trade report of a large London wine and spirit firm—that the consumption of British spirits for the last quarter of 1897 showed a decline of 137,401 gallons—deserves recognition. It is put down to the effects of the great engineering strike. This is a silver lining to a very dark cloud; perhaps it is about the only desirable fruit of that disastrous struggle. We hear that hopes are expressed of a revival of this trade now that the strike is over. We sincerely hope not, but that those who were for the time forced to moderate their tastes for intoxicants, having tasted of the benefits of abstinence, will continue to do so voluntarily. Here, on the principle that "a penny saved is a penny earned," is one way of recovering from the losses caused by industrial strife, all the more desirable as it would be a benefit in morals as well as wealth.

No one but a dangerous visionary could believe that God could look down complacently on four home-made heathens in one bed. Is there not one heart here in this Royal Chapel to voice the cry that at last shall even make the Church to move, the State to stir, and Parliament to listen and get for the poor of England human homes?

So said Rev. Arthur Robins, of Holy Trinity, Windsor, in an earnest and practical sermon at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, on Sunday last. The homes of the poor is a subject which lies very close to his heart, and his fidelity to the cause deserves hearty encouragement.

John Ruskin's great mastery of the Bible, as a source of quotation for the enforcement of moral and religious truths, is well known to all his readers. Two admirers have now collected the references scattered through his works, and have tabulated the results ("The Bible References of John Ruskin." George Allen). These show that the greatest modern master of English, and the leading ethical writer of this generation, has drawn his deepest thoughts and enriched his noblest passages with words drawn from the Book of books. Some of his readings are tinged with his own peculiarities, and are by no means necessarily accurate in their exegesis; but there are few of these passages which do not throw some fresh light on Scripture. His own style has been profoundly affected by his intimate and lifelong acquaintance with the Bible; and his thought shows the profound influence which it has had upon his life and teaching.

Incidentally this little volume bears concisely on the importance of familiarising the minds of young children with the contents and words of Scripture. Ruskin in Præterita has a celebrated passage, in which he mentions how his mother made him commit long passages to memory, and saturated his mind with the finest thoughts and phrases of the Book. It is always most undesirable to make young people associate the Bible with task work rather than voluntary interest; but a wise encouragement to memorise the Scriptures cannot be undervalued. Ruskin says :—

I have read that Book with as much care as most [men] for some forty years, and am thankful that, on those who trust it, I can press its pleadings. My endeavour has been uniformly to make them trust it more deeply than they do; trust it not in their own favourite verses only, but in the sum of all; trust it not as a fetish or talisman, which they are to be saved by daily repetition of, but as a Captain's order, to be heard and obeyed at their peril.

Let parents and teachers lay this lesson to heart. It is much needed in order to ensure that the Bible may hold its true place in the national as well as the individual life.

All those who are interested or concerned about whether or not it is "right for Christians to patronise the theatre" will find relief (or disappointment, according to their predilections) in the very succinct and timely pamphlet, now in its second edition, entitled "Does the Theatre Make for Good?" (1d. Hall, Hutton-street, E.C.) Besides reproducing the now famous Great Thoughts interview with Mr. Clement Scott, it furnishes replies from the profession, comments of the Press, opinions of leading ministers—in fact, a neat little symposium on the whole subject. The only serious defence attempted is that in "Bohemian" circles the standard of morals does not profess to be the same as that of ordinary home life, and that in these respective spheres as large a proportion live up to the one as the other. This ought to settle the question for those who claim to be followers of Him who "did no evil, neither was guile found in his mouth." The ideal stage of utopian dreams and the real stage of living fact are widely different, and no true disciple of Christ has a right to partake of amusement which only those who admit a lower standard of morals than himself can give.

The pompous ceremonial which on Sunday last attended the consecration, at Peking, of "Père" Favier as bishop, which "the Chinese declare to be due to direct representations made by the Emperor to the Vatican," and which was considered of sufficient interest to flash by telegraph around the world, affords an excellent illustration of mission methods as understood by the Romish Church. To witness a most solemn Christian ordinance there were gathered "the entire Chinese and foreign high official world, Prince Kung excepted," who "were invited after the ceremony to a grand déjeuner." Had the occasion been seized to collect the heathen to hear the Gospel, we might have been thankful; but what a contrast between the attraction of all this display and hospitality, and the setting apart in the early Church of men called to the office of an overseer or bishop!

A remarkable article by the French author and dramatist, M. François Coppée, on Joan of Arc, details how he was converted from a materialist frame of mind to a belief in miracles. He says:—

There was a time when I should have scornfully shrugged my shoulders at the mention of miracles. Yet, if there be an Almighty Being, the Maker of all things visible and invisible, He must be superior to all those laws which He has Himself impressed upon his work; and therefore no miracle can be impossible to Him.

What brought him to this frame of mind was an attack of sickness, during which he was brought to the edge of the grave, and first "felt a craving for immortality." He continues:—

Then I set myself to read the Gospel once again I read them as they ought to be read—with a simple, open heart—and in every page, in every word of that sublime story, I saw truth shine. And consequently I now believe firmly in all the Gospel miracles, chronicled as they are, by the evangelists, with a clearness and a minuteness of detail which afford the most evident proof of truthfulness. Yes, Jesus did give sight to the blind and life to the dead.

This extraordinary confession proves two things—that the human soul naturally believes in the spiritual world; secondly, that when the Gospels are read with an open mind and heart, there is that in them which is its own vidence.

Our Child-Drunkards.

II.—THE CAUSE.

DOUBTLESS there is a considerable amount of inherited tendency, but this alone could not account for the manifestation of the vice at so early an age. The fact is that nine-tenths of the evil is due to the practice of parents sending their children to the public-house for beer and ardent spirits to be consumed at home.

In every large town may be witnessed the pitiful spectacle of little children "fetching beer" and sipping it on the way home; and of mothers, within or without the public-house door, raising the glass to the lips of their children—some of them only, or barely, able to toddle—or rubbing the gums of the babe in the "pram" with drink, to "send it to sleep, dear little thing," or to "quiet the brat," as the case may be.

A lady who has a Cottage Home, writing of some of her juvenile patients, says:—

Two other little children, one of whom could hardly speak, were found on admission to be already lovers of strong drink, and screamed passionately for the "black bottle." It was days before they could take proper food and had lost their unnatural craving; had they lived to grow up, what could they ever have become but hopeless drunkards?

It may be asked, "If this sipping is practised to any considerable extent, would not the parents punish their children?" But when people are in a drunken or semi-drunken state they do not gauge the quantity in jug or bottle too closely. But there is another answer — the publican gives extra measure to allow of the bearer's incursions. This covers the case of artisan children of the better type. "The competition for out-door custom has been so keen that the extra quantity given has kept increasing. Thus to-day (1897), in Liverpool, a 'gill' of beer at 1½d. to drink at the counter is just one gill glass full, while a 'gill' at the same price to carry away equals two glasses according to recognised trade over-measure; and in those houses in which the addition of a 'long pull' is given, you get two and a-half glasses for the 'gill' paid for." This is, of course, an encouragement to both child and parent, but the parent has no means of judging the exact length of the "long pull," and so it is easy for the bearer to help himself to a large extent without getting into trouble at home.

HOW CHILDREN ARE BRIBED.

The competition among the off-licensees has become so great that they now cater for the accommodation and pleasure of their child-patrons. In most of these shops stools are placed near the counter so that the little toddler may be able without difficulty to get a look over the top of the counter and put on or take off the jug without inconvenience. Once the liking for beer or spirits has been acquired, the largest measure would be a great attraction to the children.

Two ladies, some time ago, went down on a Sunday into Tottenham to get direct knowledge from observation on the subject, and out of one public-house in South Tottenham in ten minutes they saw no less than 113 children bearing cans of beer. Sweets were given to each one as they left the door, and a good many went down the street sipping as they walked along. This is but one instance among hundreds that might be cited of the evil which is being practised in all the large districts.

Is it any wonder that the taste for intoxicants thus acquired is fed as soon as the boy or girl leaves school and they begin to earn a little money for themselves? To say nothing for the moment of the terrible spiritual ruin thus brought about, it is disastrous folly on the part of any nation to permit its future workers, mothers and fathers, to have their character and physique so utterly undermined. A people that can look on without intense indignation at such a process of national suicide must be blind because it dwells in darkness.

Another shocking phase of the evil of child-drunkenness is the rapid spread in the sale of

ALCOHOLISED SWEETS.

These come mainly from Germany, and have to pay an import duty before entering this country. Chemical analysis has recently proved that they contain proportionately as much alcohol as ale or beer. It is said that they are largely consumed by Band of Hope children. A more subtle or diabolical method of creating a taste for intoxicants can scarcely be conceived. Parents and leaders of juvenile temperance societies should be specially watchful, and carefully warn those under their care against this insidious moral poison. It would be well, also, if the shops where these sweetmeats are sold were known and avoided in every neighbourhood.

In Ireland there is the grave additional evil that in many districts it is impossible for the poor to buy the necessaries of life, tea, groceries, etc., without going to a licensed house. There are even certain towns where there is not a single shop without a licence, so that in buying a reel of cotton or a loaf of bread one is forced to be in a bar, though nominally, of course, the bar for drinking purposes is separated by a barrier from the rest of the shop. Needless to say this separation cannot be kept up in busy times, and in any case this licensed house is made a respectable and ordinary shop, and is necessarily visited by all classes, sexes, and ages in need of every-day articles of consumption.

500 children under ten years of age were arrested in one year in London for drunkenness, and 1500 under fourteen!

THESE FIGURES ARE APPALLING—

even more so, when we remember that the police are naturally reluctant to arrest young children, and only do so in serious cases.

It is a familiar fact that the threshold and the interior of public-houses (generally the largest, warmest, and best lighted of any in the district) are the common playground of children. Thus from their earliest years they are familiarised with the degrading sights and sounds of such places. Quite recently during an hour's observation of a certain licensed house it was found that of the large number entering all were either females or children, only ten of the whole number were over twenty-one years of age, more than half were under ten years of age. As a lady remarked, "If we were striving to train up a race of drunkards, we could not set about it in a more systematic way."

Suggestive Readings.

THE MYSTERIES OF THE KINGDOM.—IV.

OUTWARD AND INWARD.

AFTER four thousand years of Satan's chaotic and baleful rule, the reign of God drew nigh. The Son was born into the world, whom God would set on his holy hill of Zion. But when the good tidings were proclaimed, when "the Word of the Kingdom" (Matt. xiii. 19) was sown in the world, only one-fourth of the good seed fell into good ground; and of that only a third brought forth a hundred-fold (i.e., cent. per cent.); a third produced only sixty per cent., and a third only thirty. Not only so. An enemy sowed tares among the wheat. The Sower of the Word of the Kingdom seemed to be working under every possible disadvantage, against every possible hindrance.

Nor were the foregoing all the obstacles. The seed was good, and the tree which the earth combined with it to produce was great. But the birds of the air came and lodged in its branches. In the first parable these birds of the air caught away the seed that fell by the wayside, and were interpreted, by the Sower himself, to mean the wicked one—Satan, the Devil (Matt. xiii.; Mark iv.; Luke viii.).

Still further: Another parable shows a woman mingling leaven with the meal produced from the good seed, until the whole was leavened. In a later discourse the Lord expounded leaven to mean the doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees—hypocrisy (Matt. xvi. 6-12; Luke xii. 1). In many places in the Old and New Testament leaven represents evil. Indeed, it is not in the nature of things, when good and evil are mingled, for the good to raise the evil to its own condition. There is no remedy for either material or spiritual corruption but death and resurrection. "Until the whole was leavened" can, in the nature of things, only mean that the good was permeated by corruption. In Lev. xxiii. 17 the two wave loaves were baken with leaven, because they typified the Church, in which there is still imperfection and sin. No leaven was mingled with any offering which was a type of Christ. (Compare 1 Cor. v. 6-8.)

These parables each present a picture to which the Kingdom of Heaven, in one of its varied aspects, external or internal, is likened. The Kingdom is like a mustard seed when it has become a tree, and the birds of the air are lodging in its branches. And in the next parable the similitude is not to leaven alone, but to the completed picture when the whole is leavened.

These parables exactly represent the history of Christendom. Constantine made Christianity the religion of the Empire, and every power and agency in this world, of which Satan is the god (2 Cor. iv. 4), has dwelt in it and given its own character to it. And its holy doctrine has been leavened by Pharisaic hypocrisy and Sadducean ignorance of the Scripture and of the power of God. Thus the apostle's prophetic words have been fulfilled concerning the course of this world-age, in the latter times of which seducing spirits should forbid to marry, and command to abstain from meats, and in the last days men having the form of godliness, but having denied its power, should be lovers of their own selves and not of God (1 Tim iv.; 2 Tim. iii.).

But there are

BRIGHTER PICTURES.

The former represented the external history of the professing church, with its great mixed multitude lusting after the rank food of Egypt (Exod. xii. 38; Num. xi. 4). These parables were spoken to the multitude outside. But when Jesus had sent them away He went into the house and expounded the parables to his disciples; and added others, in which He presented the internal view of the Kingdom of Heaven.

In the field, which is the world, the Man Christ Jesus finds the treasure, the Church, and sells all that He has and buys the field. For the Son of God emptied Himself of all He had, all the rights which belonged to Him as such; though He was rich, for our sakes became poor; and for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame. He could not empty Himself of what He was and is—of his Divine nature. He was not nor could be anything less than God manifested in flesh. But He gave all He had—his glory, his power, his royal prerogative, his official and executive equality with God—and lived by the Father, anointed by God with the Holy Ghost and with power, for God was with Him (John vi. 57; Acts x. 38).

The next pictorial parable represents (as I think, with the saints of old) men without rest crying, "Who will show us any good?"—weary and heavy-laden ones seeking goodly pearls. But such a one finds Jesus, the pearl of great price, unique, elect, precious; and he sells all he has, and buys that pearl. For as the Man Christ Jesus sells all he has and buys the field for the treasure hidden in it, so the merchant man who has been drawn by Jesus lifted up, sells all he has and buys that precious pearl, and sings:

I've found the Pearl of greatest price,
My heart doth sing for joy;
And sing I must, for Christ is mine:
Christ shall my song employ.

The treasure (presumably comprising many pieces of money) seems applicable to the Church of many members; and the One Pearl of great price to our one and only Lord Christ Himself. The treasure is fitly mentioned first and the Pearl afterwards, for Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it; and we love Him because He first loved us. Therefore, when we find Him, we willingly suffer the loss of all things, and count them as food flung to dogs, that we may win Christ and be found in Him (Phil. iii.).

Each gate of the heavenly city is one pearl. May not each represent the One Pearl of great price? For by whichsoever of the twelve gates we enter, on the east or west, or north or south, it is still only by Him who is the Door. M.

Never Ashamed!

(Joel ii. 26).

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

NO, never put to shame! The explorer may be ashamed because the route he has patiently followed may lose itself in the waste, or the theory he has adopted may fail to explain all the facts. The discoverer may be ashamed, because the unknown substance will not yield up its secrets to his tests. Even love may be ashamed, when after long years of absence it returns to the home of early manhood. But God's people shall never be ashamed—never in this world—never in the next. In the hour of death and in the day of judgment, never ashamed.

Never ashamed in offering prayers which God has Himself indited. There are many prayers, doubtless, in which we shall be ashamed. We, too, pray as a matter of duty; we gird ourselves to wrestle for things on which we have set our hearts, as though to wrest them by main force from the hands of God. We endeavour to impose our will on the Eternal, with strong cryings and tears, as though to carry his unwillingness by the rush of our assault. Nay, it is not thus that we shall prevail. Of these prayers we shall often have good reason to be ashamed. They will never come back to us laden with answers; and those who heard for what we set ourselves to pray, and see that the answer has not come, will ask where is now our God.

But the true prayer is far other than this. When we pray as we should we put away from us our own choice and passion, and are silent before God, till we hear his voice arising within us, and know that the mighty tide of Christ's own intercession is rolling up the estuaries—then we pray on earth as the Great High Priest is praying in the heavenly temple; there is perfect unison and accord between his voice, which is as the sound of many waters, and our voice, which is slowly being attuned with

THE MIGHTY MUSIC OF HIS ENDLESS LIFE.

O, happy soul to which the Son of Man comes, and says: "I cannot rest, I am burdened with the weight of that great need, of that vast continent, of that individual soul; come and watch with Me; kneel with Me in this dark glade and join thy intercessions with Mine; so shall we prevail." Then we forget our sloth, our lethargy, even the personal sorrows on which we had dwelt, till like a thin veil of mist they had blotted out the eternal horizon and ever-burning constellations of heaven. The flesh may flag and fail, but the spirit is renewed from day to day, and follows hard after the feet of the Saviour, as He climbs the upper crags. When we pray such prayers—which are suggested by the Holy Spirit, and are not ours but his—we have already the petitions we have offered, and can never be ashamed.

Never ashamed in our appeal for help against temptation. Temptations do not cease with increasing years. There may be now and then a brief lull and respite, but the storm will break with all the greater intensity. Those that sit with Christ in the Heavenlies may expect to meet the brunt of all the principalities and powers. The nearer the King, the more in the thick of the fight. The latter circles around his sacred person. "He that is nearest Christ is NEAREST THE HEAD OF THE FIRE."

The temptations which you overcame in earlier life will come back again, urged on you by cleverer, subtler, more crafty spirits than before. And in addition to these will come new suggestions, more envenomed darts, fresh weapons launched from fresh points of attack. There is no hope for us if we look at our past, littered by repeated failures; or at our weak, weak nature, which has been swept before the gust, as the dry leaf along the course of the wind; or at the strength of the foe. There is no help for us if we trust in resolutions, and determinations, and provisions suggested by our own ingenuity. Our only hope is to remain in union with the Risen, Living Saviour, whose Name is above every name, so that at the Name of Jesus every knee shall bow of things under the earth. Use that Name as the talisman of victory, though you be the weakest and most flickering of his disciples; abide in Him by a living faith; sit with Him on the throne of his exalted power; and you will not, cannot be ashamed. He will send from Heaven, and draw you from the power of your foes. It is not possible to apply to Him for help, and to be deserted in the hour of need.

Never ashamed in the result of words which He has given us to speak, or in the missions on which He has sent us. We may be very often ashamed as we consider the result of the elaborated sentences and perfected style; very much ashamed of the nett result of enterprises which we have planned and executed with consummate care. Where are your sheaves? I have none. Where are your fish? None came into my net the livelong night. Where are the sheep of your charge? I have lost them all on the wild.

And why is this? Because our work has been in the power of the flesh. The thoughts have been elaborated in the light of the midnight oil, and uttered in the flowing periods of human eloquence; but they have of the Cross, and have not been accompanied by the power of the Holy Spirit. This is what the apostle feared when he said that he was afraid of coming to the Corinthians with the bewitching words of human eloquence, lest the Cross of Christ should be made of none effect. And this led him to rejoice in his weakness, his thorn in the flesh, his unprepossessing presence, because he was only strong when he was weak, only successful when to human eyes he seemed to have failed. He knew that God is strongest when there is least of the human might that seems so irrepressible.

But there are times with those that wait on God, when He puts his thoughts in their hearts and his words on their tongues, when they are conscious that He has entrusted them with his message; and that they are being borne along as upon an irresistible current to an unknown goal. Then they are led in triumph. They glory in being bound to the chariot wheels of the all-victorious Saviour. Not knowing what his purposes are, they are content to yield themselves for their fulfilment through their lips and lives as channels. And those who thus yield themselves can never be ashamed.

Never ashamed of our hope. Ever since the Lord went the Church has looked for his return. But probably that hope was never so intelligently, so fervently, or so widely cherished as it is to-day. Of course it is resolutely challenged. The old cry, "Where is the promise of his coming?" rings out on the air as pertinaciously as ever. The long delay seems to give courage to his adversaries, and to chill the hearts of some of his friends.

But we cannot be ashamed of our hope. Everything around us shows that we are right. The signs that were to herald his advent are all being fulfilled. One by one the outlines of the coast are complying with the prognostications of our chart: just round the next headland we shall come on the open water.

The lessening number of conversions which shows that the work of the present day is the preparation of the Bride, the waning love of some, the spirit of scepticism of the Word and of the Blood, the doctrines of demons which are so rife in what is known as Spiritualism, the insubordination and unrest of rebellious spirits, the menacing signs on the political horizon which make men's hearts fail with fear of those things which are coming on the earth, the movement amongst the Jews—all these, like minute-guns, assure us of our King's approach, and tell us that we cannot be ashamed. It is but a little time and the waiting Church shall behold her Bridegroom, and the long exercise of patience shall be justified.

Never ashamed amid the solemnities of eternity. We are sure of it. We have tested the words of Christ in too many difficulties, temptations, and storms, and have found them too uniformly trustworthy, to have any doubt of their reliability for the last great trial of all. Jesus is indeed a "tried" stone, elect and precious; and those that trust in Him cannot be confounded.

We have gone to Him in anguish about our sins, and have come away with the peace of God filling our heart. We have looked to Him when the rain descended, the floods came, and the winds blew on the house of life, and it has stood because his words have been beneath as a rock. We have heard the testimony of his people, given after years of close walking with Him, and on the border-line between this world and the next, where the veil is thinnest, and they have unanimously attested their persuasion that in his keeping all was well. His worth is attested by the witness of experience and the voice of conscience. And whatever comes, when the earth and heavens pass away, and the most stable fabric of the universe is dissolved, we know that we shall not be ashamed; unless it be that we did not love enough, serve enough, or venture more absolutely on his Yea and Amen.

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

SINCE writing last there has been a continuous display of God's marvellous blessing on his own Word. At Kansas City—a vast new city, which has suddenly arisen to share the trade of the West with Chicago—it was necessary to move the meetings each day to a larger place, so that the last which I addressed was held in the largest church auditorium in the place, which was densely packed. But, better than all, there was a great hunger to know of deliverance from sin and the anointing of the Holy Spirit. A meeting of two hours with the ministers of the city will never be forgotten. Many said it would date a new epoch in their lives. Oh, that it may be so, and that the fire enkindled may burn till Jesus comes!

The same scenes occurred in St. Louis: vast crowds, so that on Sunday night I had to go from one great audience to address an equally large overflow; hushed interest, and many tears. An ever-memorable two-hours' meeting was held with the ministers on the morning of leaving the city. Between 150 and 200 were present, and the power of God came mightily upon us.

These teachings about the inner life seem quite fresh to the majority of the Christian people in this land, and cause deep chords to vibrate. I cannot but think that most of the ministers have failed to give their people credit for the depth of religious experience of which they are capable, and have dealt too largely with the objective to the exclusion of the subjective.

Whilst at Kansas City I visited Parkville College, founded by Rev. John McApee in 1875, and now under the direction of his five sons. Some 400 young men and women are being trained there for Christian work. Their maintenance costs about £12 per annum, but they are expected to give four hours daily to work on the extensive acreage which is being developed into a valuable farm, with produce of all sorts. It was a great pleasure to go through the handsome buildings, which have been erected by the students, and finally to address them in the College chapel.

Mr. Moody returns to New York on March 13, for another week of evangelistic work on a very large scale. The Grand Central Palace has been secured, with seating capacity for 8000 persons. All the costs are guaranteed by a group of wealthy men, each of whom assumes the expense for one day. The services will begin at ten o'clock in the morning, and will continue without interruption until ten at night. This will involve several preachers and choirs, but all these are already being arranged for, and it will doubtless be a vast success.

Nothing is more interesting than to notice the continuous increase of Mr. Moody's power in his own land. Even those who do not agree with him respect his generalship, transparency of motive, and simplicity of purpose. A Universalist minister, in an adverse criticism on Mr. Moody's theology, delivered last Sunday, said: "Tens of thousands have been rescued from vice and crime by the meetings he has conducted, and multitudes saved from drunkenness, debauchery, and gambling; churches have been aroused from dead formalism, and congregations shocked into the conviction that Sunday service means something more than the devotional exercises of the well-dressed."

Washington and Baltimore stand next in our list; and I trust that similar results may attend the proclamation of the message of what God can do for those who fully yield themselves to and trust Him. I greatly rely on the continued prayers of my friends.

Oxford Letter.

THE annual meetings at Oxford in connection with the C.M.S. were addressed by Revs. J. C. Hoare and Rowland Bateman as deputation. The former has been for 21 years Principal of the C.M.S. Training College, Ningpo, China. The latter has worked in the Punjab for 31 years. There has been a real enthusiasm about the gatherings this year. On Saturday morning Mr. Hoare addressed over 300 men invited by Canon Christopher to breakfast. Special sermons were preached on Sunday in the evangelical churches, and the annual meeting was held on Monday in the Examination Schools; Sir John Kennaway in the chair. We praise God for all we heard during the three days.

Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby spoke at the Missionary Union on Tuesday, and gave a very interesting account of the present state of the Niger Country. He said that there is at present a great crisis in that country, political, commercial, moral, and missionary. Dr. Battersby spoke specially of the liquor traffic, for the regulation of which a meeting of the European Powers has been called by Belgium.

At the annual meeting of the licensed victuallers, on Monday, Councillor Druce said: "There were many things in connection with the trade which ought to be rectified if possible, and one was the question of private clubs." Those who visit from house to house—public-houses included—could give testimony of other reforms needing urgent attention. We may wait long for public bodies, and still longer for "the trade," to move, but the Church ought not to be silent.

An interesting conference, under the auspices of the Oxford Temperance Council, was held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on Monday afternoon. The subject discussed was the serving of children under thirteen years of age with intoxicating liquors, and to consider the best means of approaching the local authorities on the matter. Mr. Boreland, from Liverpool, reported that, as the result of combined effort in that city, there was scarcely a child now seen going into a public-house. As the result of the meeting, a committee was formed to take such action as may seem to them desirable.

At mid-day on Sunday a special meeting of undergraduates was addressed in Hannington Hall by Rev. R. C. Joynt. The subject of the address was, "Seven D's — Debt, Doubt, Death, Dominion, Despair, Danger, Delay." Over a hundred men were present, and listened with marked interest. Special prayer meetings had been held in three colleges for the week before, with very happy results.

Many have learned with thankfulness that there is a possibility of the Sunday evening concerts at Cowley being discontinued. On Sunday the attendance was reported to have been "disheartening and discouraging," and the convener felt it necessary to point out that "neither he nor the artists could live upon air, and unless the concerts were better attended and the collections more liberally supported they must be discontinued." The moral is plain: people here do not want Sunday amusements.

The Home of Industry.

THE Workers' Meeting on Wednesday last week proved a happy and profitable gathering, so that workers returned to their vocations revived and strengthened.

Mr. William Luff was happy in the fresh pictorial way in which he spoke. An hour was filled by prayers on behalf of the McNeill Mission, specially the ensuing fortnight in the Great Assembly Hall; and a profitable Bible searching was suggested in the Book of Acts on the effects of the Holy Spirit upon the multitudes or masses. The following good news was read from the Canadian Home:—

"Bread cast upon the water" may be found at any season of the year, even during the frosts of winter, or in the beautiful warm sunshine of summer, and perhaps

"AFTER MANY DAYS."

An account was given in THE CHRISTIAN some years ago of an explosion on board the ss. Sardinian, when Miss Macpherson was accompanying one of her large families to Canada.

Two of the smallest of the company had been taken by their kind friend along the ship to her own cabin. At the time of the accident these two little fellows were sound asleep in the upper berth; and while Miss Macpherson, with feverish anxiety, was caring for her band of children, these tiny little men were rescued, and taken from the burning ship to a place of safety.

Bobbie and Willie were the subjects of many prayers as the story of their rescue became known, and not a few "precious seeds" of the Kingdom were sown, with many prayers, in their young hearts during the voyage and while in the Canadian Home; seed long sown at last bearing fruit in the heart of Robert, who is now a young man fully six feet in height, fairly educated, and with splendid prospects in our now famous North-West.

Robert says: "Tell Miss Macpherson God has found me and taught me of his wonderful love, and led me, through the memory of many a lesson and many more acts of kindness shown to me in the past, to say I love Him because He first loved me."

Energetic young men have many chances of making a home for themselves in the West, and many a letter have we received telling us of happy and prosperous surroundings from our young men and maidens settled there, thus giving us good cause to praise our God afresh, who has led us to serve Him among the young and destitute, enabling us to help them temporarily and win them for his Kingdom.

We could record other cases equally cheering of conversion this winter, but perhaps the most interesting is of one living in a leading town in the West, where he has been twice mayor, and is one of the principal business men of the place. His letter, after years of silence, bears the stamp of a noble Christian character, and the enclosed draft for 50dols. as a New Year's offering testifies to his generosity.

Ask, with us, that many more of our large family may be numbered among the redeemed.

W. H. MERRY.

"I Will Guide Thee."

THE path was rough and painful too,
The way I could not see,
When lo, I heard a voice which said,
"My child, 'Come unto Me.'"

And then, ahead of me, I saw
A guiding star so bright,
Which cast upon that rugged way
Comforting gleams of light.

So then my heart fresh courage took,
I felt no anxious fear,
For when in doubt or conflict bold
I knew the Lord was near.

And now, at length, when almost home,
My pain and trouble o'er,
A sweet peace fills my heart and soul,
Unfelt by me before.

For not far off I can descry
The gates of gleaming gold,
Which tells me of a blissful rest,
Of love and joy untold.

God's Methods with Man:

Past, Present, and Future.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

VII.—Glimpses of the Golden Age.

THE age of Christ's kingly rule is marked green upon our chart, as typical of earthly glory; while the golden star-like device shows that the thousand years are under the direct government of the heavens. It is difficult to give an adequate idea of the glories of that period; but some Old Testament prophecies may help us to a clearer understanding thereof.

In the new order of things Jesus Himself will be King, in as direct and positive a sense as any ruler the world has ever known, but with larger empire and more autocratic sway. He will be Judge as well as King, and the final Arbiter of any disputes that may arise among men. His word will be the ultimate law for the government of the whole earth during the entire Millennium. The announcement made to Mary concerning Jesus (Luke i. 32, 33) has never been fulfilled, but will be realised when the time comes for his world-wide personal reign, through God's ancient people gathered in Jerusalem. Psalm lxxii. has first application to King Solomon; but the words of verses 8, 9 must find their lasting fulfilment in Jesus Christ. Zech. ix. 9, 10 contains a quotation from the psalm just mentioned, which confirms its application to Christ, because He has the words which speak of his entry into Jerusalem riding upon a colt the foal of an ass; but the remainder of the prophecy will be realised in the years of the future which we are now considering.

The centre of government during the King's earthly reign is declared in Zech. i. 1-8. Palestine, reinhabited by the nation of Israel, is to be redivided, and each tribe will return, not to the section of land previously occupied, but to a portion which reaches from the seaboard right across the land. Jerusalem is to be rebuilt, and will possess a temple the size of which is given by Ezekiel, far larger and more magnificent than before. The city will not merely be the seat of rule exercised over Israel, but the metropolis of government for the whole earth and a centre for world-wide worship. In the past its sacrifices and oblations pointed on to Christ; but these things, restored in the Millennium, will be offered in memory of the work which Jesus accomplished by his Cross. There laws and decisions are to be made and given; and from thence edicts shall go forth affecting the whole of mankind.

During the time of which we speak, Gentile nations will come into a place of blessing as the result of this restored nationality of Israel. You will find promise of this in Gen. xxii. 18, which has never been realised except, to some extent, in the first coming of Christ; but it awaits full and very literal fulfilment in the age to come. The same truth is also very clearly taught in Isa. lvi. 6, 7.

As to the method of government, all the nations of the earth will be subdued to Christ's rule, and will pay tribute to Jerusalem and to its King. It does not necessarily follow that they will all be loyal in heart. Sin will still be upon the earth, but held in repression, to be dealt with at the close of the Millennium. Christ will exercise autocratic rule through his chosen administrators—that is, his ancient people, and in some cases by his heavenly people, the Church, who will be associated with Him in his reign over the earth. "Know ye not," says Paul, "that the saints shall judge the world?" (1 Cor. vi. 2).

Having thus briefly considered the Millennial order, let us now proceed to look at one or two glimpses of this Millennial reign. Time limits us to-night, and it is difficult for us now to understand the glory and the beauty of the age to come. Amid the groaning of oppressed men under the foolish and iniquitous policies which have so often blighted human life, how one longs for a single authoritative Governor who shall command in righteousness and in truth! That is exactly what earth will have for one thousand years, when the One rejected of old is King in actuality.

The principles which will regulate government in that age are briefly and clearly stated in Isa. xi. 1-4. Then, for the first time in the history of men, righteousness and judgment will be perfectly wedded. I do not criticise the sayings with which we excuse present failure in this respect, for, although judgment must be given, yet it is often, in the very nature of the case, unrighteous judgment. The law made for the sinner

TOO OFTEN HITS THE SAINT.

Human judgment is always given upon evidence which results from a fallible seeing of the eye and hearing of the ear. But Christ, as an omniscient as well as omnipotent Judge, will know the secret, inward motives of the hearts of men. When cases are brought to Him by his administrators his decision will, therefore, be perfect in equity. With righteousness shall He judge the poor, and He shall pronounce his sentence strictly on the basis of that intimate knowledge which cannot characterise the judgments of this age, under any other form of government. We sometimes say poor oppressed nations need mercy and pity. Nay, it is rather strict impartial judgment that is required. The most merciful thing in the economy of God is, that when his King comes to execute judgment and truth, the exercise of these attributes will be based upon his infinite, unmistakable knowledge of the hearts, thoughts, and intents of men. The people of God who have watched and waited for the coming of the Master will share in the government, not as governed, but as governing ones.

We are interested in the great statement of Rom. viii. 19-23. When Jesus comes to reign, creation will be freed from its groaning and travailing in pain, the blight upon nature will be removed, and a will take the place of all it now suffers with fallen humanity. Turning to Old Testament words on the subject, read Isa. xi. 6-9. You cannot spiritualise that passage. It is a plain statement of the fact that, under the sway of our Redeemer the ferocity of wild beasts shall depart, and nature itself shall feel the blessed influence of the reigning Prince of Peace. I have been asked whether the Golden Age will not be marked by dietetic abstinence from flesh. There are many similar questions which we have no time to discuss. But I believe that nature itself will then be free from everything which savours of cruelty; for, "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain." It is certain the animals will be vegetarians, for "The lion shall eat straw like the ox." I dare not linger upon these attractive pictures of nature restored, but must take them in rapid sequence. Others are to be found in Isa. xxx. 24, 25; xli. 18-20; lxv. 25. These passages, taken almost at haphazard from among many, are predictions of what shall surely come to pass. When man, God's crowning work, first sinned he dragged down in his fall all creation; but when Jesus shall come again to reign in the strength of his Cross, Passion, and Atonement (for that is to be the power of his rule), then the whole creation shall feel the touch of his presence and shall respond to his redemptive work. Ferocity shall be driven from the beasts, roses shall bloom in the desert; and the whole of nature, which to-day is blighted and cursed by sin, shall be perfected in beauty because the King who has redeemed man and the earth shall Himself be Governor.

PERFECT MANIFESTATION OF ITS BEAUTY

What of man in that period of the Millennium? His physical being is to share in the general blessedness (Isa. lxv. 20), premature death shall be unknown, and bodily vitality shall have wondrous increase. There are three verses which speak of the children under the reign of Jesus—Psa. lxxii. 4; Isa. xi. 8; and Zach. viii. 5—as the King's ideal for child-life in his kingdom. What is it? Play. With what shall they play? One of the things is mentioned; and it is that from which to-day we sedulously and rightly keep our young ones. "The wearied child shall put his hand upon the basilisk's den." A little dimpled fist shall be entwined in the mane of the lion, to lead about that royal playmate!

Isa. lxv. 21, 22, affords us further insight into man's Millennial condition, "They shall build houses." Well, that goes on now. But read further—"and inhabit them." The persons who do so to-day are few and far between. "They shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree shall be the days of My people, and My chosen shall long enjoy the work of their hands." It will be a great change; but when Jesus is King, profits shall go to the toilers. There will also be unparalleled commercial activity (Zech. xiv. 20). The sanctuary will be free from the trafficker, and the trade of the nation will be characterised by "Holiness unto the Lord" upon the very bells of the horses. Another note to the same effect is sounded in Ezekiel xxxiv. 24-26. The "evil beasts" therein referred to are the to-day. See the security of life under the government of Jesus, when men sleep in the woods with no sense of dread. A closing glimpse comes through Amos ix. 11, 13, 14, a poetic and remarkable description of the prosperity which shall attend man's labour in the coming days of the King.

As the hour for this service approached I found it increasingly difficult to confine myself to a comprehensive view of topics any one of which might have occupied more than our whole time. I have tried to give you a general survey of the years when nature shall be freed from the curse, man shall realise full physical strength, profits shall go to the toilers, commerce shall be consecrated to God, men shall dwell in security, prosperity shall bring the ploughman upon the heels of the reaper; and, above all else, when missionary enterprise shall be at its highest and best, when God's ancient people shall go forth to all lands with the story of the Cross for the healing of the nations.

These glimpses of happy times to come require me to repeat that sin will not be exterminated during that period. But instead of being rampant as it is to-day, daring to lift its head and laugh in the face of Christianity, it shall lick the dust and be kept in check by the presence of the Master. Then shall men know, as never before, the possibilities of humanity, and of the earth under the righteous reign of God's own King.

In conclusion, it is always of practical value to know God's way of dealing with men. If all this is to happen under the reign of Jesus by-and-by, surely those who have already crowned Him King may, even to-day, know something of the blessedness of the reign that is coming. As Mr. Hudson-Taylor once beautifully put it, if you would know Millennial blessedness, you must take up the Millennial position and make Jesus King. Then for you the world shall be full of new beauty and new light; and into your life shall come the peace of Him who is the Prince of Peace.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, February 27.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God...with all thy mind."—Matt. xxii. 37.

THIS was Adam's blessed privilege in Eden, but he missed it. The love of self took the place of the love of God. It is the aim of our blessed Lord to bring us back to that position. Perfect love is the sunlit peak to which his whole redemption tends. And perfect love would be perfect holiness. If a man were to love God and his neighbour as his first and chief and all-absorbing passion, there would be no room for sin to establish itself in his heart. But does not this command seem altogether impracticable? It does; and it is impracticable to our mortal flesh. It is high, we cannot attain to it. And the very sublimity of the demand is intended to drive us to the Holy Ghost. He sheds abroad the love of God in hearts which are fully yielded to Him. If you desire that this love should be your privilege, lie down low before the flow of the River of Life, and it will fill every gully and inlet of your nature.

But, perhaps you are not of an emotional nature; you cannot gleam and flash, and shed tears, and light up with smiles. You cannot love God with your heart? Then see, the Lord says that you can love Him with your mind, i.e., with your intellect, your choice, your will. Probably this is where you have to begin. Ask Him to take the helm of your life, and to control, inspire, and direct its every movement. Crown Him King. And when the will, which is the high priest of your nature, has put its crown of life on the head of Christ, who is God Incarnate, all the emotions and affections and faculties of heart and life will come in to swell the court with their homage and acclaim.

MONDAY, February 28.

"How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."—Matt. xxiii. 37.

Only the greatest artists can make immortal pictures from simple domestic scenes. To detect the imperishable and the infinite in the common and ordinary, and to preserve it in such a form as to arrest the ages, this is the mark of consummate power. But how characteristic of Jesus—a broken bottleskin, a patched garment, a handful of girls shut out of a village feast—these are the subjects which He painted into never-to-be-forgotten pictures. Lord, give us childlike hearts that we may see the secrets that are hidden in common things!

But how this image arrests us! Who has not heard the cluck of the hen when danger was threatening her brood? She is quicker to detect its proximity than her callow young; and she must needs insert herself between it and them. Ah, how often does the rush of life drown the call of Jesus to come under his wing for rest and safety!

Bunyan says that the hen has a variety of calls, some six or eight. Jesus also calls us for different purposes, sometimes to nestle near his heart for fellowship, sometimes for rest. Sometimes He calls us to feast on some rich dainty which He has turned up from the Word; and sometimes to hide in the shadow of his wings till dreaded evils pass us by.

Oh, that we more often heard and obeyed that warning note! Probably there is never a temptation or trial which is not thus anticipated and preceded. When passion overcomes you by a sudden rush, you must not impute your failure to any lapse in your Saviour's care. He called you, but you could not hear. How often! Who can enumerate the many, many times when we have been summoned by Jesus nearer to Himself, but would not? God forgive us!

TUESDAY, March 1.

"Summer is nigh."—Matt. xxiv. 32.

You say that it is rather overdue. The nipping winds and morning frosts have held back vegetation so long that it has seemed as if Summer would never visit us, spreading her carpet on the earth, and giving her intense hues to stream and lake and sky. But summer is nigh in spite of all prognostications to the contrary, because He is nigh who is the King of summer, whose presence makes summer, whose smile to those who love Him is as the sun is to the earth, in the summer of the year. Be sure that He, and therefore it, is nigh, even at the doors.

He is always nigh, and those that love Him realise the perpetual summer of his presence; but his appearing, the parousia, is nigh. Presently the swing doors will be flung wide, and his triumphal procession will sweep into our view. Then the millennial summer of the world will break, and her long winter will be gone for ever. Then the bride will hear Him say: The winter is over and gone, the time of the singing of birds is come: arise, my fair one, and come away.

The rumours of war that frighten the nations, the slackening faith and waning love, the dissemination of the Gospel to all lands, the great movement now in progress in the midst of the ancient people of God—all these are like the tender shoots of the fig-tree which show that the Lord is at hand. Oh, lonely and sequestered ones, by his appearing and by our gathering together unto Him, be of good courage and do the King's work.

WEDNESDAY, March 2.

"He also that had received the one talent came." —Matt. xxv. 24 (R.V.).

It is remarkable that the man who had one talent should hide it. If we had been told that he who had five had hidden one we should not have been surprised; but for the man who had only one to hide it. This is startling; but it is true life.

The people whose talents and opportunities are very slight and slender are they who are tempted to do nothing at all. "I can do so very little; it will not make much difference if I do nothing; I shall not be missed; my tiny push is not needed to turn the scale." That is the way they talk. They forget that an ounce weight may turn the scales where hundred-weights are balanced.

There are comparatively few five-talented people in the Church, more two-talented; but the large majority have but one talent. What a terrible loss accrues to Christ when these stand aloof! It is worse than if the more highly gifted buried their gifts.

Are you one of these slenderly endowed ones? And are you doing all you can? Are you doing anything? Even though you cannot do much in your isolation, you might join with others and do much. You might invest your little all in the bank of the Church, and trade as part of that heavenly corporation. Oh, disinter your one talent. Be thou faithful in thy very little.

THURSDAY, March 3.

"My blood of the covenant."—Matt. xxvi. 28 (R.V.)

The first covenant was not ratified without blood. For when every commandment had been spoken by Moses, he took the blood of the calves and goats, sprinkled the people, and said, This is the blood of the covenant (Heb. ix. 19, 20). So the second covenant must be ratified by blood, not by that of calves and goats, but by the precious blood of Jesus Himself. He who made the covenant sealed it with his blood, that we might have strong assurance who are staking all on its provision for time and eternity.

But Christ has put the cup which holds the emblem of his blood into our hands, and bids us drink it. What then do we mean when at the Supper we lift that sacred cup to our lips? Are we not saying by that significant act, Remember Thou thy covenant? Are we not reminding Jesus that we are relying upon Him to do his part? Are we not pledging ourselves to Him as his own, bound to Him by indissoluble ties, and satisfied with his most blessed service?

Among the most precious promises of the new covenant is that in which God promises to remember our sins no more. Here is the ground which makes God thus to forgive. The blood has been shed for many unto the remission of sins; the claims of infinite justice have been met; the righteous demands of a broken law satisfied; the barriers have been removed that might have restrained the manifestation of Divine love, though they would not obstruct the love. And now we may sit with Christ at his table in his kingdom, not rebels, but welcome guests.

FRIDAY, March 4.

"Him they compelled to go with them, that he might bear his cross."—Matt. xxvii. 32 (R.V.).

If we may judge from the familiar way in which Mark speaks of the sons of this Cyrenian, whom the soldiers brutally compelled to carry our Saviour's cross, we should infer that from this hour he became a Christian. He had little suspected such a thing in the early morning, when he left his lodging to attend to his business; but, being constrained to go to Calvary, he lingered there of his own accord through those anxious hours, and was led to feel that such a sufferer, to whom even Nature paid such homage, was worthy henceforth to receive the loyalty of his life. If this be the correct rendering of the matter, it is not the last time in the history of Christianity when a pressed man has become a glad volunteer.

But how many of us are carrying our cross because we are compelled. There seems no alternative than to carry the dead weight of our cross with us everywhere, only wishing a hundred times each day that we might have respite. Dear soul, that cross is yet going to be the greatest blessing of your life if it lead you to the Crucified, and you find in Him what will transform it into the ladder that links earth with heaven, up and down which the angels go.

If Simon became a Christian, with what rapture he must have reviewed that incident in his life. How easy it would have been to carry the cross had he known Jesus as he came to know Him afterwards. He would have needed no compelling! So if you saw the will of Jesus in your cross and that you were carrying it with Him, how much easier it would be. Bear it with Him; out of the heart of the cross will fall a shower of flowers.

SATURDAY, March 5.

"The angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye."—Matt. xxviii. 5.

The emphasis is on the pronoun ye. The angel meant, As for these sentinels that are quaking in dread and becoming as dead men, it is meet and natural that they should do so. They are strangers to Him whom ye seek, and are set here to do the work of his foes. But there is no need for those that seek Jesus to fear. Those that love the crucified and risen Lord may tread without fear even within the precincts of the tomb.

Are you seeking the forgiveness of your sins through his blood? Fear not ye. Do not fear that they are too many to be forgiven. Do not fear that you have not the right faith. Do not fear that you will find his door shut. Do not fear that He will always be reminding you of what you have cost Him. Do not fear that He will let you drift from Him again. Ye seek the Lord who was crucified. Fear not.

Are you seeking a closer identification with his death? Fear not. There is no possibility of realising the life which is life indeed, except through identification with the death and grave of Jesus. We must sink deep down into reunion with Him who lay there, as our representative. But as God takes us at our word, and begins to strip us of all we had taken pride in, as the fear of what may be involved crosses our hearts with its chill dread, again we may be assured as we hear the angels say, "Fear not ye who seek Jesus which was crucified."

And when at last you are seeking to follow Him through the valley of shadow—Fear not. You will never see Him as He is till this mortal life is surrendered, and the house not made with hands entered. But if the heart faints, and the flesh fails, fear not ye, who through that mysterious change seek Jesus that was crucified, but now liveth for evermore at the right hand of God.

Sleeper, Awake!

By Rev. JOHN McNEILL.

Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.—Eph. v. 14.

IF the Lord's call to awake out of sleep comes and rouses thee, act upon it. I want here to use one or two homely illustrations; for there is a very homely point in this Gospel call. It is one thing to be awakened—thoroughly awakened—but quite another to rise and face the new day.

Let me refer to some of the drawbacks and difficulties in actually leaving one's bed to face the new day, after one is thoroughly awakened. Here is one trouble. You call a young friend who has to go early to work in the foundry or the factory. You wake him, say at five or six o'clock, and he answers you quite pleasantly. He says, "Yes, thank you"; at least that is what I do. There are many people like that. The sleep is broken; there is no doubt about it. They are perfectly awake, and they are very amiable. If you go into the room they will lie back upon their beds wide awake and talk about what kind of a morning it is, and about what they mean to do to-day. By-and-by it begins to dawn upon you that these amiable people do not rise. They begin to be a considerable tax on your temper.

If your minister were here, this would come home with greater force to some of you, because it describes exactly the tax and burden that you are to him. He has called you again and again, and, in a certain sense, you have answered. You know what he preaches about; you do not deny it; in a sense you believe it, and accept it. But

and you are not saved. You have never left the couch of worldliness or of self-indulgence, or of mere formality in religion. And the devil has no softer couch, on which to keep you lying till he gets you into hell, than the comfortable bed of a profession of religion that is nothing more than a profession. You have not come to Christ, and are not walking in his light. You might still be a heathen; only it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for you who were wakened and wakened, and told again and again about sin and the Saviour. May God say unto thee, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from among the dead.

I will tell you what happened at Cape Town, in South Africa, when I was there two years ago. A man in our meetings did a very bold and brave thing. He wrote to a daily paper in Cape Town, and what he said was virtually this: "I have made such a discovery and I want to pass it on. I have been a professing Christian and a church-goer; aye, more than that, an office-bearer in an orthodox Evangelical church. But I find that to have known all about Christ is not salvation. That is to say, I have been lying on my back and on my bed wide-awake for the last twenty-five years. I never rose and came to Jesus till last night at Mr. McNeill's meeting in the Dutch Reformed Church. I want to pass it on, as there may be others in the same snare."

Men and women, do not deceive yourselves; for you are deceiving nobody else. If you are not saved you are only deceiving your own soul. It is not enough to go to meetings, to be interested in preachers, and believe what they say. That is being wakened; but like our friend in Cape Town many a man has been lying wide awake on his bed for years, knowing all about it, and admitting all about it, but not yet up and walking in the light of Christ, through faith in his Name.

THERE IS ANOTHER HITCH, and it is this. There are some who waken in the morning all right. They know they have to rise, and they mean to rise. But though so thoroughly awakened and so well meaning, somehow they turn over and they fall asleep again, and they dream that they are up! Some of you will preach this sermon all over again to yourself to-morrow morning, and you will not smile then. You are asleep again, and the thing is all to do yet. It may be the morning has been spoiled; perhaps the whole day opens in wretchedness and misery, and you have nobody to blame but yourselves. Some of you are preparing for yourselves a restless bed in hell, unless you come to Christ now and be real as never before.

You say, "Surely I am a Christian." Are you? Or are you merely dreaming that you are one? Be done with dreaming—that is to say, with mere sentiment. John Ruskin—for he is a prophet in some ways to his generation—has said something like this—that there is no greater enemy to true Evangelical religion in our land than the mere sentiment of religion that some people have in abundance, and which they mistake for reality; and this just because they like Gospel themes, churches, preachings, and all that. The very smile that drifts across your face to-night may be the self-contented smile that passes over the face of the man who lies in his bed asleep, but is dreaming that he is up and dressed, facing the new day: while its busy tides rush past him unheeded, he lies contentedly asleep.

There is still another hitch, and it is this. There are some people who get up without awakening.

WE CALL THEM "SLEEP-WALKERS,"

They rise, and maybe they dress themselves more or less. They move about, they lift things and lay things, and they peep, and mutter, and talk. But if you look into their eye your flesh begins to creep; it is all done in a sleep. Their very activity is a danger.

The Lord help me to be faithful here. I am afraid some of you are in extra danger; you seem to be extra far on in religion. Perhaps you are a deacon, or an elder, or a Sunday-school teacher, or a singer in the choir. Possibly you are a churchwarden, or even it may be a preacher. Yet all this activity of yours is simply a sign of your extra danger. You are mere sleep-walkers. You know nothing of personal salvation by personally coming to a personal Redeemer by the faith of your heart and will. God pity the children who have to listen to the jabberings and mutterings of unconverted Sunday-school teachers. God pity the congregation that is looked after by office-bearers who are mere sleep-walkers and know nothing of the daylight of actual reality. I will go farther. You are a singer, it may be in the choir, singing the very deepest and sweetest expressions of Christian faith and experience. God pity the congregation whose praises are uttered by singers who are only sleep-walkers and talkers, and not saved themselves. How ghastly it must be in Christ's sight.

I will come still closer. There are many earnest ministers and clergymen in this audience; they are just the men who will say, "Go on, do not spare us." I cannot spare ourselves, and I include myself in this head. God pity the congregation that has to listen to the jabberings and mutterings of unconverted preachers. Let us all take our own bit of it home. God is over us all, and the judgment day is almost visible. Oh, ministers; oh, men and women, are we really saved? Have we passed from death to life? Do not juggle your judgment on that point. Be mercilessly honest with your own soul. Do not rest to-night till you know the reality about Christ and salvation.

One other point. There are people whose case is this. They go to rest at night. Morning comes; a friend raps at the bedroom door and gets no answer. He turns away from the door saying: "Let the poor fellow rest; he is in arrears with his sleep. There is nothing pushing, we will let him sleep on." You go back to the door later on, and still there is no answer. "Well, he is heavy to-day; but it will do him good," and you leave him alone. You go back later still and rap again; no answer. Now you are not so smiling over it. You quietly open the door and pass in, and go to the bedside. You are just putting your hand on his shoulder to utter a word of kindly reproach, when the moment you look at him you give a start. He is dead! He has passed away in his sleep. Never a sound was heard,

NEVER A MOVEMENT, NEVER A CRY.

Again I ask the Lord, the Holy Spirit, to help me here. I am afraid that some of you are preparing that doom for yourselves. You will pass away in your sleep; that is to say, you will die as you lived. You have lived unawakened, unconvicted of sin; and the same devil that drugged your conscience and sang lullabies in your ear and kept you asleep, will attend your death-bed and keep you drugged and sleeping till you pass from time into eternity, still unawakened and unsaved.

Only God can break the delusive spell of the natural heart. He is seeking to do it now. Do not listen to Satan, who is seeking to mar God's work. Arise! Sometimes we preachers strike a false note, and it is this. We say: "You young fellows and young women, who are having your fill of worldly pleasure, may mock at our preaching and trifle with our appeals now. But your death-bed is coming; then you will waken up, and shriek and rave, and send in an agony for the preacher." I believe some of you won't. You will die as you live. God's presence, that might have been your light, your peace, and your salvation, will be your torment. But you slept on. You pulled down the blinds and kept the shutters closed, and refused to awake and arise and receive Christ Jesus.

The last words are the best: "Christ shall give thee light." Somebody says, "I am getting earnest." Thank God for it. That is his work on you; yield to Him; He will bring you all the way. "I want really to be saved," you say; "what am I to do next?" Do? The word "do" is not in the text. Do nothing. Take something. "Christ shall give thee light." It is Christ Himself you need; take Him. Then do as much as you like, and be as much as you like; but till you come to Christ—

Doing is a deadly thing;
Doing ends in death.

When I was a lad I lived in a country village in Scotland. When I was about fifteen I went to a little railway station, the only thing for a lad to do in that quiet village. I had to rise at half-past five on cold dark winter mornings, and that was a great trial to me. I was a splendid riser "the night before," like some of you. I remember on these cold mornings I was never allowed to "sleep in," as we say—to sleep too long. My dear mother was for twenty-five years never a day without pain, and never a night with two hours' unbroken sleep. So my father and I needed no alarm clock or any such clever invention. The dear wife and mother could always be trusted to "sound the alarm." I remember she would call me as I lay in the dark in a little room off the kitchen, "Johnnie, get up." I would answer, and at last I would rise. You know that sometimes it is like tearing the flesh from the bones.

SO IT IS IN SALVATION.

God help you "to bear the wrench that will set you free." When I rose on those cold mornings, how did I know that I was up? By the shivers that went through me. It is such a change of climate!

There is a point here. If I knew some of you I would have more hope about you than your minister has ever had before. You are sitting there, but you are desperately uncomfortable. I believe, my brother, you are up. The very shivers are going through you. The cold, sharp, keen air of God's eternal Word has got in about your slumberous soul. I do not think you will ever turn back to sleep again.

What was the first thing I wanted after I rose? The matches. Until I got light my very activity was a danger. You need light to see by, to know by, and to go by; and Christ is the Light. Then be as active as you like.

The Late Mr. A. M. Stewart.

THE late Mr. A. M. Stewart, for some years editor of The Bulwark, was born in 1837, and spent his early boyhood in Perthshire, with which county his family had been long and honourably connected. When twelve or thirteen years of age he removed to Glasgow, entering a wholesale warehouse in that city. With characteristic thoroughness he threw himself into his work, and in some years' time was able to start in business for himself.

When still a young man Mr. Stewart became profoundly convinced of the righteousness of the Protestant cause, and for the remainder of his life he laboured strenuously for its advancement. For many years he was honorary secretary of the Glasgow and West of Scotland Protestant Laymen's Association, afterwards affiliated with the Scottish Protestant Alliance. His life-long connection with these societies procured for him the friendship of many earnest and notable men, whose influence had a marked effect upon his career. Chief among these was the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, with whom Mr. Stewart was on intimate terms for upwards of thirty years. When Mr. Spurgeon first visited Scotland, Mr. Stewart travelled over the country with him, and did much to organise his meetings. A bust of Mr. Spurgeon, and a drawing-room clock given to him by the great preacher, were among Mr. Stewart's most cherished possessions.

Mr. Stewart's services to the Protestant cause were widely recognised and highly appreciated in the West of Scotland. As early as 1864 his friends and admirers presented him with testimonials in acknowledgment of his tireless zeal. In 1879 he was presented with a purse of 300 sovereigns "as a token of the high estimation in which he was held, and in acknowledgment of his services for a long series of years to the cause of Protestant truth and liberty." At an early age Mr. Stewart showed a decided literary bent, and wrote frequently to the newspapers, generally on Protestant subjects. In 1879 he took a bolder step in the same direction, and founded a Protestant family newspaper, which he called The Scottish Patriot. It made its first appearance, under his own editorship, on October 5, 1879, and was issued weekly thereafter until January 31, 1880, at which date Mr. Stewart was compelled to give it up owing to ill-health. This he did with sincere regret, for the little paper had undoubtedly justified its brief existence. It identified itself with no party, either in Church or State, taking merely as its watchword John Knox's noble declaration, "I am in a place where I am demanded of conscience to speak the truth; and therefore the truth I speak, impugn it whoso list."

For many years after this Mr. Stewart lived in retirement, increasing family responsibilities and the cares of business taking up his whole time and attention. It was not until 1887, indeed, that a crisis in the history of that old-established Protestant journal The Bulwark drove him once more into active literary life. The Edinburgh publishers had resolved to discontinue the paper; and to avert what would, in his opinion, have been a catastrophe Mr. Stewart took over the entire responsibility of the publication, editorial and financial. He completely remodelled The Bulwark, and, gathering round him a staff of competent writers, conducted it with marked success till the day of his death.

Mr. Stewart took a keen interest in public affairs, and had strong opinions on most matters. He was a Free Churchman, and in politics a staunch Conservative. In commercial circles he was much respected as a man of the highest honour and integrity. He was an unselfish husband and father, and a faithful and generous friend. While remarkably frank and affable in manner, he was not deficient in the Scotch pride of clan, and never forgot that he was the lineal descendant and head of the old family of Stewarts of Garth. Mr. Stewart was a justice of the peace for Dumbartonshire. On March 15, 1897, he passed peacefully away, his death being the result of a neglected chill.

The Blood of Christ.

THE blood which crimsoned Calvary's sod,
O God, is all my plea;
Naught else can for my sin atone;
I have no merit of my own
Which I can bring to Thee.

No sacrifice save Him who bore
My load upon the tree:
No other plea which lips could frame—
No other blood—no other name
Accepted is by Thee.

Christ having entered by his blood
The holiest on high;
By that same Christ-trod, blood-stained track
Thou welcomest the wanderer back,
And biddest him draw nigh.

O wondrous Cross! O precious Blood!
O death by which I live!
O sinless One for me made sin!
O wondrous Heart which doth within Eternal refuge give!

By that blest Cross—that cleansing Blood—
By Him who died to save—
The merits of his work confest,
I stand in Him completely blest,
A conqueror o'er the grave.

Mr. McNeill in London.

THE SECOND MONTH BEGUN.

WITH no sign of waning interest, the second month of Rev. John McNeill's London mission was opened on Sabbath last by an afternoon meeting in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, and an evening gathering in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. In both cases the congregations were more than equal to the sitting accommodation; in the evening, especially, hundreds had to stand during the service, while an overflow meeting was held, and thousands are said to have been turned away. The two gatherings were respectively typical of the West and East; but there seemed not a whit of difference in the rapt attention given to the intensely earnest utterances of the preacher. For the present at least the afternoon address in St. James's Hall was the last which the evangelist will give there; the principal focus of interest having been moved to a distant part of the city, he cannot conveniently compass the West End on Sabbath afternoons.

Mr. McNeill's message to the West Enders was a trumpet call to awake from the slumber of sin, indifference, or religious formality, and to face the duties of the new and quickened life. It was extremely telling, and full of interest as an unconventional exposition of Eph. v. 14. We give, in preceding columns, notes of the closing section of the address, in which some hindrances to real active Christian life were depicted through homely illustrations. In his opening prayer Rev. H. Price Hughes asked that the saving power of God might be made manifest in reaching any present who were either desperate sinners, miserable backsliders, or those ignorant of the Gospel. The discourse was eminently suited to effect this object, and at any rate left the evangelist, as he took occasion to remark, clear of the blood of those who heard him.

The evening audience at the Great Assembly Hall, though different in composition to a great extent, was none the less responsive. The observer could recognise at once that he was in a warm Christian atmosphere; the songs of praise went with a will, and there were many tokens that the bulk of the great congregation knew experimentally of the joys and consolations of Christianity. It was a thoroughly working class company in the main, and an evidence of the splendid work of evangelisation that has been done in that needy neighbourhood by Mr. Charrington and others.

Mr. McNeill soon placed himself en rapport with his hearers by his homely, hearty words of introduction. He said that personally he belonged to the East End of society, and his sympathies were with East Enders every time. The subject of the sermon was specially chosen for the commencement of a series of Gospel meetings, dealing as it did with the beginnings of salvation. The text was Psalm cxix. 59, 60. "I thought on my ways and turned my feet unto thy testimonies. I made haste and delayed not to keep thy commandments." The reasonableness of the Gospel viewed from the strictly intellectual standpoint was descanted on, with the intention evidently of meeting possible difficulties in the minds of any workingmen sceptics or freethinkers who might have strayed into the hall. The universal need for conversion or turning was insisted on, while the weighter matters of discourse were relieved by remarks that served to raise a smile and keep unrelaxed the attention of the vast congregation.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

The Gospel in Ecuador.

THIS most interesting country has been the last of the South American Republics to permit the residence of Protestant missionaries within its borders. Up to June, 1895, the Government of Ecuador was absolutely under the control of the Roman Catholic priesthood. A disgraceful act of the President and the Governor of the Province of Guayas served as pretext for an uprising which resulted in the complete overthrow of the Government and the establishment of a Liberal régime. Before this time there had been attempts to introduce the Bible, but the books were burned, and the vendors driven from the country.

About this time, in a gathering in Nebraska, in the United States, God laid South America on the hearts of a number of his servants; as a result a party of three sailed from New York in June, 1896, and arrived at Guayaquil in July. They found the new Government far from secure, and instigated and conducted by the authority of the Papal Church. All told the three missionaries that their mission must surely be a failure, and that, if they were allowed to remain, it would seriously threaten the stability of the Liberal Government; but, believing that God had brought them to the land, they remained. The revolution was quelled, and though often threatened, and continually facing the plots of its enemies, the Government has held its own to the present day.

The missionaries found a field which easily divides into three parts, and these as different as though they were on different continents. First and most accessible were the Coast Provinces, the home of the Liberal sentiment, and by contact with the outside world more prepared to receive ideas from abroad. In October and December of 1896 other missionaries arrived, and stations are now established in Guayaquil and Porto Viejo. It is believed that the seed of a Christian Church is already sown. Ten towns have been canvassed by the brethren in Bible work, and the pioneer work on the coast is going forward. These Coast Provinces are lost to the Roman Catholic Church, but have not been won to the Gospel, and are fast

DRIFTING INTO INFIDELITY.

It is of prime importance that six more stations be established soon, in order to take advantage of this transitory and therefore flexible period.

The next and most populous division of the field is the Mountain Provinces. While the coast has a tropical climate, and in some parts is infested with deadly disease, the climate of the mountains is cool. It was therefore from the first thought best to establish a home for new missionaries in some healthful place in the mountains. Accordingly, early in November, a station was established at Ambatio, and the first definite step was taken for the giving of the Gospel to the mountaineers of Ecuador. Ten provinces, closed in by lofty mountains, and separated from the world by very poor roads, have fallen an easy prey to the priests, and for 300 years have been dependent on them for all that they have learned of this world or of that which is to come. As a result they are the darkest of lands. There is a most because of the almost immeasurable distance between the aristocracy and the Indians, who are the bulk of the population, and are the bone and sinew of the country.

It is not too much to say that the ordinary Ecuadorian looks upon the Indian who does his work, and makes possible his life of ease, with a contempt scarcely less than that with which he regards his donkey or his dog. Often the miserable Indians, who receive no more than five centavos a day (about a penny English money) are taken to the whipping-post because of their failure to give the ecclesiastical treasury the benefit of even this pittance. And it is not a rare sight to see the priest take the only donkey from the widow to pay for masses for her dead husband. They are truly in this life or in that which is to come. The fanaticism of these provinces is extreme. One of our brethren (Mr. Strain), in passing through one of the mountain towns, gave out some tracts on the plaza; and in a short time he was attacked by a mob, and but for the valiant act of the commander of the troops stationed at that place would probably have been killed.

A PEOPLE WITHOUT HOPE

The third division of this field is that which first attracted the attention of those who are undertaking this work. It is the Indians of the Upper Amazon, occupying the province called El Oriente. These people have never, in all the 300 years since white men came to this land, reaped one temporal or spiritual blessing, and still wait for the servant of God who will face, for his Master's sake, the dangers which the men of the world are willing to face for gold, or even for adventure itself. There are in the United States a goodly number who have offered their lives for this work, and we beseech all God's children to unite in prayer that witnesses may soon be stationed in each of the provinces of Ecuador.

The general director of the Mission is Mr. George S. Fisher, Troost-avenue, Kansas City, Mo., U.S.A.

Persecution in Russia.

BY the law of the Russian Empire the Greek Orthodox Church has the exclusive right to gain converts from all other sections of the Christian community. Any other body of Christians attempting to convert members of the Greek Church is punished by law. There are very many members of the Greek Church who in former years have been prevailed on to leave the Protestant Churches, and who are now not permitted to return.

Now there is much active spiritual life amongst Lettish Protestants in the Baltic provinces, and several evangelists have been sent out to neighbouring Lettish colonies in the adjoining provinces to preach only to the Letts. Some Russian priests caused the police to arrest them, and they were brought to judgment, being accused of speaking against the Cross and the Church, etc. Four of these brethren were condemned to imprisonment for eleven months; they had a narrow escape from being banished for several years to Trans-Caucasia. Thus the Greek Church holds her own against all true Gospel light; she gains new members by births from mixed marriages, and by many other means, but never allows a member to leave the connexion.

So long as this law is in force there will be the punishment of the transgressor. Those who by conviction are leaving the Greek Church must be prepared for banishment. Thus the Stundist brethren are suffering for conscience sake; they are often tempted by the priest holding out to them the advantages and ease of rejoining the Orthodox Church; but as yet they reject such proposals, and remain true and faithful, suffering affliction of no ordinary kind. Some eight families have lately been banished from the interior of Russia to small and very poor villages in Poland, where it is not possible for them to earn a living.

We who are enjoying such liberty, so that none dares to interfere with our religious convictions, cannot easily enter into the sufferings of these martyrs of State Church tyranny. Yet "if one member suffer all the members suffer with it."—Yours in the fellowship of the Lord's service, Life in Korea.

THE enthusiastic reception which has been given to Mrs. Bishop herself and to the fascinating records of her earlier travels will undoubtedly be extended to the volumes in which, by pen and camera, she now so graphically describes life in Korea,* a country of which, until quite recently, even intelligent English folk were confessedly ignorant, and with regard to the mere geographical position of which many of us had only vague and indefinite ideas. It is, as the historian reminds us, only of late years that we have learnt to distinguish this peninsula at all clearly from China, Russia, and Japan, although it contains nearly as many square miles as Great Britain, and has, evidently, marked and interesting characteristics of its own as distinct from its near neighbours.

Of the intrepid courage and indomitable energy and perseverance of the lady traveller who, within little more than three years—and those were years of painful and critical interest—has paid four visits to Korea, and recorded for us the experiences of those visits, intelligent readers do not require any new proofs, and Mrs. Bishop touches as lightly as may be upon this side of the story. What she does wish to impress upon us is that she has spared no pains to make her history reliable, and to give an authentic, unbiased, and unvarnished account of Korea and its inhabitants, their manners, customs, superstitions, etc.—a history all the more important and valuable because Korea is to-day in the throes of a transition consequent upon a startled awakening to dawning civilisation, which is gradually (in some respects rapidly) obliterating the ruder outlines by which, in her previous isolation, the country was distinguished. It is well that Mrs. Bishop's visits were so timed that she has been able to preserve for us features of Korean life at home which have certainly never before been chronicled, and which are full of fascinating interest, however earnestly it may be hoped they will speedily disappear.

It would have been a pity, e.g., to miss altogether a description of Seoul, the great metropolis, as seen in 1895, with its narrow streets—too narrow for two of the loaded bulls (so common in Korea) to pass—with its "gutter shops," which that not euphonious title so accurately described, emporiums of "small wares," chiefly "candies dyed in flaring colours," etc. In this populous metropolis we are told that about quarter of a million of people were existing on "the ground" in these low alleys, which are, however, greatly modified to-day. Women were not allowed in the streets in daylight, but that privilege was conceded to them at 8 p.m., when the ringing of a huge bell was the signal for all men—with the exception of blind men, and a few others mentioned—to retire to their houses during the hours sacred to the business transactions of the women.

The status of woman in Korea would seem to have reached well-nigh its lowest level; but, although the ignorance and degradation are so great, Mrs. Bishop is of opinion that the women themselves are not alive to the hardships of their lot. Even by woman herself the limitations and degradations of the sex are accepted as a matter of course. She expects no pleasure, and too often she gets none. She is a domestic drudge, and her highest accomplishment appears to be laundry-work of a very peculiar kind. So much are they used to seclusion that "their idea of liberty is peril."

Mrs. Bishop says that one of the more intelligent women, when she pressed her hard to give her opinion of our English customs in the matter, said: "We think that your husbands don't care for you very much," the idea evidently being that they are so "closely guarded because they are valuable chattels." This, for self-complacency, is on a par with the complaint made by another Korean, who, oblivious of the danger to those living in "glass houses" of "throwing stones," remarked of the English foreigners that they were "so dirty in their habits!" A more astonishing and important view of ourselves "as others see us" may be gleaned from various quotations made by Mrs. Bishop from a book called "Confucianist Scholars' Handbook," published in 1896 at the expense of the Government. One brief sentence will indicate the tone of this official pronouncement. "Europe is too far away from the centre of civilisation, i.e., the Middle Kingdom; hence Russians, Turks, English, French, Germans, and Belgians look more like birds and beasts than men, and their languages sound like the chirping of fowls" (Vol. ii., p. 269).

It is, however, in Mrs. Bishop's account of Christian missions in Korea that the interest of many will centre; and her well-known sympathy with missionary effort renders it almost needless to say that she writes with her accustomed candour and friendliness. Though we could wish there had been more said as to the ultimate spiritual ends of missions than is here to be found, yet there is, at least once, an outspoken acknowledgment that "it was the teaching of the apostolic doctrines of sin, judgment to come, and Divine love," which had brought about certain results which she noticed during her latest visit. Mrs. Bishop most carefully guards against drawing too favourable a picture, nor has she quite escaped the tendency to pay regard chiefly to the civilising effects of missionary effort; but this gives, in one way, additional force to impressions and conclusions which we cannot but consider most encouraging. It is depressing to be told, at first, that "the indifference is extreme, the religious faculty absent," and that the poor demon-worshipping Korean has, in his own opinion, "got on so well without a religion that he does not want to be troubled with one, especially a religion of restraint and sacrifice which has no worldly good to offer."

Obviously Korea is not yet, as a nation, stretching out eager hands for God. Could it be truthfully said that England is? And yet, even in Korea, there is much which may be said to constitute the bright side of the picture. Mrs. Bishop speaks of attending last year meetings, which, evening after evening, were "crammed within and without by men, reverent and earnest in manner, some of whom had been shunned for their wickedness even in a city 'the smoke of which,' in her palmy days, was said 'to go up like the smoke of Sodom,' but who, transformed by a power outside themselves, were then (1897) living exemplary lives." This shows that in Korea there are "seekers after righteousness," and it is touching, too, to read her account of one aged man present, who, "with his forehead in the dust prayed like a child that, as the letter bearing to New York an earnest request for more teachers was on its way, 'the wind and the sea might waft it favourably, and that, when it was read, the eyes of the foreigners (the American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions) might be opened to see the sore need of people in a land where all believe in devils, and are dying in the dark.'"

Further, Mrs. Bishop tells us that at one of these meetings "an elderly man, who had made a good living by sorcery, came and gave Mr. Moffett the instruments of his trade, saying 'he had served devils all his life, but now he knew that they were wicked spirits, and he was serving God.' On the same afternoon," adds the writer, "four requests for Christian teaching came to the missionaries, each signed by from fifteen to forty men." (Vol. ii., p. 160.) These facts are symptoms of soul-unrest and a "stretching out of pleading hands" for the Gospel. Mrs. Bishop distinctly states that "in 1897 the influence of Christianity was much stronger than in 1895, and the prospects of its spread much more encouraging."

Of the missionary workers themselves she speaks highly and appreciatively. "Longer and more intimate acquaintance only confirmed the high opinion I early formed of the large body of missionaries in Seoul, of their earnestness and devotion to their work, of the energetic, hopeful, and patient spirit in which it is carried on, of the harmony prevailing among the different denominations, and the cordial and sympathetic feeling towards the Koreans." It is to missionaries, she says, that travellers must apply for information vainly sought elsewhere (vol. ii. pp. 157, 8). Though nearly all the agencies are of somewhat recent date, it will be seen from the statistics how much has already been accomplished, not only in the way of organising churches, but in the establishment of schools, hospitals, etc. The opinion is expressed that, in proportion to their means, Korean Christians are far more liberal in their gifts for Gospel work than English Christians. How greatly schools are needed may be inferred from the rough computation that only two in a thousand Korean women were able to read!

We have only been able to touch lightly upon a few of the varied points of interest in these very instructive volumes. The exceptional advantages enjoyed by Mrs. Bishop, her acquaintance with the King of Korea and his Queen (afterwards assassinated), her appreciation of the physical beauties of the country, and her successful photographs, together with her thorough grasp of the political problems and agitations which have had so wide an interest of late, and of the possibilities open in the near future to this nation so long unknown and unaccounted of; all these combine to make attractive a work of which it is not too much to say—what is, perhaps, the most which could be said—that it will take rank, probably, with previous volumes from the facile pen of this distinguished traveller. We would specially call attention to the striking and generous testimony borne to Christian missions in the preface, which is by Sir Walter C. Hillier, K.C.M.G.

Standing Armies.

SIR,—The combatant forces appear to be held in very slight esteem by you, if we are to judge by the "comments" made upon them in The Christian from time to time. You recently described as "unworthy" and of a "low quality" the desire of a regiment to be sent on active service. Surely an army exists to fight in its country's cause, and to be so engaged is, I maintain, the legitimate ambition of every soldier and sailor; certainly if this spirit ceases to animate the Service, they will very soon be worthless and undependable. I have always thought that volunteering for posts of danger was a spirit to be commended amongst those to whom is committed our defence, and that esprit de corps was an essential element in maintaining the efficiency of our defensive forces.

I am, however, more surprised at your condemnation of it when I find you in your issue of 27th ult. equally condemnatory of "self-interest" as an element which should induce men to serve their country. You object to a man serving because he wants to fight, and you object to a man serving because he wants a good means of livelihood and a pension when he is forty years of age.

I am afraid there is not much left; and as—whether we like it or not—our existence as an Empire is dependent on the supremacy of our Navy, and the efficiency of our Army, I submit that it is not patriotic to systematically belittle these Services, unless you are prepared to take the logical position that force of arms is at all times inadmissible, and so leave our country at the mercy of the nations, of whose consideration for us we have had plenty of indications of late.—Your obedient servant,

L. Talbot-Crosbie.

[If peace principles are for the good of mankind, then their advocacy cannot be mischievous. With the world as at present constituted no doubt an army is necessary for purposes of defence. We admit that a military system conceived on such lines would give but limited opportunity for "active service," with consequent promotions and rewards of honour; but it would assuredly realise a just ideal, and prevent much of the unrighteousness which is at present perpetrated by force of arms on the part of so-called Christian countries.—Ed.]

Home for Missionaries' Children.

THE need of such a work was so urgently brought home to the friends at Harley House three years ago that they rented a small house, where four children belonging to Congo missionaries might find a home.

Others have since joined the little family group, and, the premises having been outgrown, a pleasant house capable of accommodating twelve children has been occupied.

Capital educational advantages for the older ones are afforded by the Coopers' Schools, whilst the home itself possesses a good school-room and play-room for the youngsters.

The parents of the children now in the home represent several different societies, and are labouring in different parts of the world. Their letters show how this effort for the well-being of their loved ones is appreciated.

There is one delicate child among her stronger companions whose mother died during her infancy, and whose father was cut down by fever in far-off Assam, where with three other Harley men he was seeking, under the direction of the Arthington Aborigines' Mission, to secure a foothold for the Gospel.

We do not like to send away this little one, who is a most affectionate, clinging child, but has been threatened with paralysis; and as her friends are unable to take her at present, we are still caring for her.

The other boys and girls are supported by their parents. Naturally the amount paid is not sufficient to meet all expenses, such as house rent, gas, firing, etc., but covers what might be called individual expense, i.e., food, clothing, and school. At the present time not only are funds needed to meet current expenditure, but for the extra furniture required in the larger house, which, though of the simplest kind, cannot be provided out of the already exhausted exchequer.

The larger house supplies more room, and though in the past some have been refused admission for want of space, there are now several vacancies, and anyone wishing to leave their children in a comfortable Christian home are invited to write to Mrs. Guinness, by whom also any gifts for the home will be thankfully received at Harley House, Bow, London, E.

The Y.M.C.A.

NEW premises were opened by the Buckfastleigh (Devon) Association on Tuesday, at a cost of £1000, towards which a little over £600 has been raised. The opening ceremony was performed by the president of the S.W. District Union, Dr. Hingston, of Plymouth.

From Feb. 6 to 10 Mr. A. J. Waldron, of the Christian Evidence Society, conducted a mission in the Gymnasium, St. Helens, dealing with Christianity in relation to secularism, spiritualism, social problems, etc. Interesting questions followed each address, and Mr. Waldron dealt with his topics in a convincing manner.

By arrangement of the Y.M.C.A., Blackburn, four meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life were addressed, on Feb. 16 and 17, by Rev. C. Inwood. The subject of the Bible-reading on Thursday afternoon was "Prayer as seen in the Life of Jesus in Luke's Gospel."

The Cardiff Association is making rapid headway. Sixteen months ago, when Mr. W. Price, the present secretary, was appointed, the membership stood at 230. Since then there has been an accession of over 400 new members; and the committee are now going forward with a new building scheme, towards which they have £7000 in hand from the sale of their old premises.

Mr. C. S. Wilson, the president of the North-eastern district, gave an "at home" at the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday evening, when representatives were present from different Associations, and addresses were given by Mr. C. J. Dymond, of Newcastle, and others. The gathering was a very successful one, and was very largely attended. The president especially invited the hearty co-operation of the younger members in the work.

The Rector of Exeter College presided over the annual meeting of the Oxford Association on Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall. The principal speaker was Rev. Dr. Fairbairn, and an address was also delivered by the chairman, who said he did not think that any institutions were doing more and better work for the promotion of Christian unity than Young Men's Christian Associations. The membership of the Association now stands at 553.

The annual meeting of the Bournemouth Y.M.C.A., held in the Shaftesbury Hall on Wednesday evening, was an unprecedented success. Some hundreds of persons were turned from the doors. Captain Dawson, the president, occupied the chair. Canon Fleming and Rev. Thos. Spurgeon were the speakers, and delivered stirring addresses, which were warmly received. The collection taken during the evening, with promises, amounted to £36. The sum received per Lady Cairns' list in aid of the debt on the Shaftesbury Hall was £502, and per Captain Dawson £171, thus bringing the total up to £709.

The Clapham Association, High-street, which has become so prosperous under the leadership of Dr. E. Cronin, has, in the providence of God, to face a very serious difficulty. Their premises have been purchased by the City and South London Railway Company for a station, and £325 has been given as compensation, their time expiring next March. In spite of every effort they have failed to obtain suitable premises, a large place being absolutely necessary. The attendance last Sunday shows the need. The prayers of God's people are earnestly sought for that God may open the way to provide suitable premises.

The North-Eastern District Union assist associations desiring to make special efforts to reach young men in their respective centres by providing speakers. It is gratifying to be able to report that missions have been held in eight different towns since November, and four more have been arranged. The services of the speakers are given gratuitously, and thus much good seed is sown at little pecuniary expense. In some instances one or more of the pulpits of the town have been occupied by the evangelists, who thus were able to have speech with young men who might not be drawn into the mission services, besides which the claims and aims of the Y.M.C.A. were made known. The towns where missions have been held are North Shields, Yarm, Bishop Auckland, South Shields, Deptford (Sunderland), Newbiggin-by-the-Sea, Middlesbrough, and Blyth. Hebburn-on-Tyne holds a mission this week, and Hawes, Hartlepool, and West Hartlepool follow. In every case where prayerful preparation is made for these missions they prove times of refreshing, revival, and ingathering.—W. M. Hudson, Convener.

The Cabmen's Weekly Messenger is a [illegible] issued gratis to all engaged in the public traffic. It is published by the Brighton Cabmen's Mission, and calculated to render welcome service. The contents are evangelical in substance, and pointed in style. Particulars may be had from Mr. F. Parker, Renby, Preston Park, Brighton.

Child-life in Heathen Lands.—II.

MORE than once I have thought of the youthful readers of The Christian, and wondered whether they were interested in my first paper on Child-life in Heathen Lands. I think boys and girls in England who want to share in bringing the dark-skinned children of idolaters to love and obey their own Christ would like to hear much more about them. Although I am quite grown up, of course, young people have a very warm place in my heart. When I am talking or writing to them I feel quite like a child again.

The earliest work I ever did for Jesus was to collect subscriptions to equip the missionary ship John Williams. Perhaps that is how it is I am seeking to encourage you in missionary service. Would you like to hear something about the dress and the homes of Malagasy children?

The lamba is the outside garment of every Malagasy, from the old grandfather or grandmother down to the toddling child, and, except the few who have adopted the European dress, no one feels decently clothed without a lamba. Under this the boys wear garments like night-shirts, or suits, generally made of cloth or calico, and they have wide-brimmed straw hats.

The girls are all miniature copies of their mothers, with long dresses and no hats or bonnets, but their hair done in numberless fine plaits, or plaited and folded up into knots all over the head. Malagasy hair-dressing is a very serious matter and takes a long time to do, and no one can do her own in these elaborate styles, so the hair is rarely done oftener than once a week, and sometimes at longer intervals.

The houses the Hova boys and girls live in are mostly made of sun-dried brick plastered with mud. They generally have only two divisions, the smaller one where the entrance-door is and where the cooking is done in earthen pots on an open hearth with no chimney; a mud staircase, very narrow and steep, often leads from this place to a sleeping-room in the roof with no ceiling and only a bamboo floor.

The inner division of the house is larger and cleaner, with a wooden shutter for a window, and frequently a wooden bedstead against the wall at one end. Sometimes, too, there is a small table against the wall and one or two chairs, but the majority of the people prefer to sit on the more or less clean mats, and there are very few Malagasy who do not sit on the floor to eat their meals. The richer people have larger houses, varying in size and grandeur, and these often have a lot of European furniture in them, but the rooms seldom look either pretty or comfortable.

As you picture these rough homes, I am sure you are quite ready to sing—

I thank the goodness and the grace
That on my birth have smiled;
And made me in these Christian days
A happy English child.

As I told you something about Hindu girls before, you will very likely be curious to know what I can say about Hindu boys.

How do Hindu boys learn their religious duties? They have no Sunday-schools, nor any catechisms. They have no God whom they can take as an example. And yet they are not ignorant of the teaching of their books. Every Hindu has a religious teacher called a guru, whose work it is to make him know and do his duty to the gods. As soon as a lad is about ten years of age his father places him under a teacher, who gives him a text in which the name of his chosen god occurs, which the boy has to repeat many times every day. From the time this text is given the teacher visits the lad two or three times a year, and reads to him a few lines from one of their holy books, and in this way he learns a good deal about the god he serves.

Now, what will the Hindu boy learn about the gods from his teacher? That they have at times visited the earth, now as men, now as beasts, and that although they were deceitful, untruthful, impure, or cruel, they must be worshipped, or they will punish those who neglect them. He will hear that when he was only five days old one of them wrote on his forehead all the important events of his life, so that it was ordered by almighty power that the troubles that have disturbed him would certainly come, and that it was therefore useless to pray that he might be delivered from them. He will be told that if he wants to get saved he must attend to his teacher's words, and thus secure his friendship. He must bathe in a holy river daily if he lives near enough, but, at any rate, once in a lifetime. He must go on a wearisome journey to some holy temple, and secure the goodwill of the god whose image is there by making a present to the priest.

How different, you will say, all this is from learning how good and gracious and loving God is. I am certain you mean to try to make these children just as happy as you are in the knowledge and friendship of Jesus Christ. Joseph Woodhouse.

Watch Your Words.

Keep a watch on your words, my darlings,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet like the bees' fresh honey—
Like the bees they have terrible stings;
They can bless like the warm, glad sunshine,
And brighten a lonely life;
They can cut, in the strife of anger,
Like an open two-edged knife.

Let them pass through your lips unchallenged,
If their errand is true and kind—
If they come to support the weary,
To comfort and help the blind.
If a bitter revengeful spirit
Prompt the words, let them be unsaid,
They may flash through a brain like lightning,
Or fall on a heart like lead.

Keep them back if they are cold and cruel,
Under bar and lock and seal—
The wounds they make, my darlings,
Are always slow to heal.
May peace guard your lives, and ever,
From the time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be the words of beautiful truth! Selected.

"Jesus and the Sabbath."—Matt. xii. 1-13.

Golden Text.—"The Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath day."—Matt. xii. 8.

CHRIST, his disciples, and some Pharisees, passing through cornfields—perhaps on their way to the synagogue—on the Sabbath. Disciples, hungry, pluck a few ears, and, "rubbing them in their hands" (Luke), eat the grains (1).

Jewish Sabbath Law.

It allowed no eating on Sabbath before morning prayers. Compare fasting in Ritualistic churches before morning communion. The supposed sin did not lie in taking the corn, for this was allowed. Compare the custom of gleaning in this country. But they said, It is wrong to reap and thresh on Sabbath. Plucking corn is a kind of reaping, and rubbing it in the hands is a kind of threshing.

Christ's Answer.

Jews looked to the letter, Christ draws their minds to the spirit, of Sabbath-keeping. They had wrapped the spirit up in numberless small rules of detail. Christ clears these away, and shows them the true spirit of the day of rest.

Example of David (3, 4).

When hungry, he entered the house of God (then at Nob), and ate the "shewbread" which was in the holy place (Exodus xxv.). This also happened on the Sabbath day (Lev. xxiv. 5-9). Christ does not mean that David always did what was right; but the Jews would admit this as an example which could be followed. It was right to do just enough work to satisfy one's hunger or other needs.

Example of the Priests (5).

The priests laboured in performing their ordinary duties on the Sabbath. It was their busiest day, yet the Jews did not regard this as a sin. It was never intended that all labour should cease, and the Jews acknowledged the principle of necessary work by holding the priests blameless.

The Sheep in a Pit (11).

They would admit that it was right to rescue your property from peril on the Sabbath. This was an act performed almost every Sabbath by the Jews, who were great as shepherds.

The Withered Hand (10, 13).

If it was right to rescue an animal it was surely right also to rescue a man, who is of more value than a sheep. Christ healed on the Sabbath. "The better the deed the better the day." This is true, but not the old proverb which reverses it. The day does not sanctify the deed, but the deed sanctifies the day. It is always lawful to do good.

Lord of the Sabbath (6-8).

Christ greater than the visible temple, for in Him dwelt the Godhead. He was the true Temple. He who gave the Sabbath could still command how it should be used. Verse 7 is a quotation from Hosea vi. 6. God demands mercy (the true spirit of religion), not sacrifice (the mere outward form of worship).

One Day's Rest in Seven.

This is the most Divine blessing. Some men refuse the blessing. They are not only sinners, but fools. A man can do more work in six days after one day's rest than he could by working the seven days. Lord Castlereagh worked seven days a week, lost his reason, and took his own life. Ministers and others who are compelled to work on Sunday should have another day of rest.

Our Sabbath.

We keep the first day of the week because Jesus rose on that day. It is the "Lord's Day." We should defend it against its enemies—and they may be divided into two classes.

(1) Those who wish to make it a day of amusement. The day is for rest of body and mind, and there is no rest like that of communion with God and worship of Him. For thousands the Sunday is the one opportunity of joining others in public worship.

(2) Those who would make it a day of labour. If amusement becomes general, thousands will have to work in order to provide that amusement, and the next step is to introduce labour for all on the Sunday.

THE LATE

Miss Frances Willard.

IT was with great regret that many learned, on Friday last, of the death of Miss Frances Willard, who for many years has been in the front rank of temperance reformers. Death was from influenza with complications. Miss Willard came of an old English stock, and inherited much of the fervour and determination of Puritan ancestors who left Kent for the New World in the days of the Stuarts. She was born at Ogden, in the State of New York, in 1839, but passed her youth at Forest Home, Wisconsin, whither the family followed the westward migrations. Along with her brothers, Miss Willard was educated by a devoted mother, and life on the prairies developed a vigorous womanly independence.

When Miss Willard was eighteen the family removed to Evanston, a suburb of Chicago, and at twenty she quitted college with the resolution to "earn my own living, pay my own way, and be of some use in the world." For fourteen years she taught as a schoolmistress in six different towns. This period of teaching was, however, broken by a two years' trip to Europe, when she visited Egypt, the Holy Land, and Russia, besides the more frequented parts of Europe.

In 1873 a wave of temperance propaganda passed over the States, which was followed by a violent reaction in Chicago. This brought Miss Willard to the front. She resigned her position as president of a Women's College, and threw herself heart and soul into the temperance crusade. Shortly afterwards she became president of the Chicago Women's Christian Temperance Union. In 1875 she founded the National Women's Christian Union, and became its first national secretary. She soon became convinced that unless women were enfranchised the evil of intemperance could not be successfully grappled with. She met with great opposition, but in 1877 she commenced a systematic campaign throughout the American continent. In the ten years 1878-88 she addressed on an average one meeting a day. In one year she worked in all the forty-four states and five territories, and travelled 30,000 miles by rail, river, and stage.

It was not to be wondered at that the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union spread throughout the length and breadth of the land. In 1879 Miss Willard was elected President of the National Union, a post which she continued to hold until her death.

She was a born leader and a consummate organiser, and fully accomplished her girlish determination "to be one whom multitudes will love, lean on, and bless." In 1884 she helped to establish the Prohibition party, and was a member of its executive committee. But she lost many earnest friends in America and Great Britain when she carried the war into the sphere of politics; and yet others during the troubles arising out of recent legislation for the Indian army. She was a Methodist, and was elected in 1887 to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but was not admitted on account of her sex.

Obituary.

MR. F. T. F. HEARNDEN, NOTTING HILL.

The church at the West London Tabernacle mourns the loss of one of its best workers in Mr. Hearnden, who passed away a few days ago after a short illness. His life was practically devoted to Sunday and Ragged Schools. Joining the church at the age of sixteen, he at once commenced teaching in the Ragged School. His special aptitude in the service led to his appointment as superintendent of the West London Tabernacle Sunday-school, a post he held with much appreciation for fourteen years.

MISS H. MARRIOTT, BRISTOL.

By the death of Miss Hannah Marriott, of Cotham Park, Bristol, many deserving societies lose a warm friend, especially those that advocate the cause of animals. It was her life work to help those who could not plead for themselves, believing that as God cares for all his creatures, his servants should do the same. In conjunction with Miss R. F. Sturge, for nearly twenty-five years Miss Marriott carried on the ladies' branch of the R.S.P.C.A., and through the joint instrumentality of these ladies thousands of Bristol children have learned that they have duties towards their humbler fellow-creatures. Miss Marriott was a strong opponent of vivisection, which she regarded as "an abominable sin." For many years a sufferer from bronchial asthma, on Sunday, January 30, she peacefully entered the Country where "the inhabitant then shall no more say, I am sick."

MISS E. S. SLADE, SALISBURY.

This lady, who had been connected with Salisbury for many years was highly esteemed for her good qualities by a wide circle of friends. For a number of years she was an active and valued worker at Barnard's Cross Mission, being one of the first teachers when the mission was started. She not only taught her scholars spiritual things, but was also deeply concerned about their temporal welfare, and many a girl who has left the city, and is now doing well, has to thank Miss Slade for having given her a good start in life. Converted at the age of 24, Miss Slade gave herself energetically to the Lord's work, her life being fully consecrated to the Master's service; and she was never known to let slip the smallest opportunity for service or testimony. Says a fellow-worker: "I can bear testimony to her noble self-sacrificing life. Nothing seemed too much for her to do for the Master she loved and served."

REV. R. FORREST, EDINBURGH.

This minister, who died at his residence, Edinburgh, on the 16th inst., was ordained twenty years ago to the ministry as colleague to the Rev. Sir H. Moncrieff, at Free St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, of which, after serving as assistant in several charges (including Leghorn, where he was associated with Dr. Stewart), he became minister, and has ever since given devoted service. The leading characteristics of all his work were unselfishness and fidelity, and he earned the reward of enjoying beyond most men the admiration and love of those to whom he ministered. His preaching, evangelical in spirit, was notable for vigour of thought and scholarly style; and his sympathetic nature made him singularly acceptable and useful in pastoral visitation, a duty which he conscientiously performed. A few days before his death he sent to his congregation an affectionate message, assuring them of the sustaining power of the Gospel which he had preached to them, and of the comfort found by him in the knowledge of their sympathy and attachment.

MR. SAMUEL BODY, BRISTOL.

Many will hear with regret that on Tuesday last week Mr. Samuel Body, of Bristol, passed to his rest, in the eighty-third year of his age. He was formerly connected with the Congregational Church at Castle Green, but for the last eighteen or twenty years associated with the church at Bethesda, Great George-street. He was widely known and esteemed in and around Bristol as a preacher of the Gospel, having been a member of the Itinerant Society for fifty-seven years. During these years it was his custom to preach in the villages on the Lord's Days, and this he continued to do, in spite of advanced age, until last July.

His tall figure and commanding presence were familiar, not only in Bristol, and in several different conferences for Christians, but also in the surrounding neighbourhood. His last days were largely spent in intercession for those to whom he had ministered the Word of life. He was a man marked by strong individuality and great decision of character, an ardent admirer of the Puritans, a staunch Protestant, and a thorough Nonconformist. He was a great lover of the Word of God, and was in his element when engaged in expounding its pages. His doctrinal views were of the old Evangelical type, and were maintained at all costs, in opposition to the new theology, with which he had no sympathy.

Mr. Body will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends in Bristol, and by many in the villages that welcomed his visits. The funeral arrangements, according to his own wish, were as simple as possible, a short service being held at the house on Saturday afternoon (19th), followed by the interment in Arno's Vale Cemetery. A considerable number of friends surrounded the grave, testifying by their presence to the esteem in which the departed one was held.

THE BISHOP OF BEDFORD.

Dr. Billing passed away on Monday morning, at his house, The Firs, Englefield Green, Surrey. He had been an invalid for several years past, an affection of the brain having disabled him from transacting even work of a routine character. He was born at Maidstone in 1834, and was ordained in 1857 to the curacy of St. Peter's, Colchester. After acting as an association secretary of the C.M.S., he became vicar of Holy Trinity, Louth, in 1863—a position which he held till his removal to London ten years later. His first experience of London was gained as vicar of Holy Trinity, Islington, a church with marked Evangelical associations.

Here he remained for five years, and in 1878 he accepted the rectory of Spitalfields, then, as now, perhaps the most difficult and discouraging incumbency in London, presenting, as it does, in acutest form every religious and social problem which has perplexed this generation. Dr. Billing was not a man to be deterred by difficulties. He adapted himself not only with great self-denial but with much foresight to the necessities of the situation. No class of the parishioners was outside the scope of his personal efforts. He systematically visited the lodging-houses in order to offer a fresh start to some of the wretched and ruined "dossers," and he would parade the streets at night in the hope of reclaiming the fallen women who thronged the thoroughfares of his district; while for the poor little children, the waifs and strays of humanity, he founded homes and refuges.

But ten years in Spitalfields is long enough for the most resourceful and devoted clergyman, and the rector was contemplating retirement to some less exacting sphere, when, in circumstances which perhaps were unique, he was elevated to the episcopate when the then Bishop of Bedford (Dr. Walsham How) was nominated to the newly founded See of Wakefield. As Bishop he more than retained the personal popularity which he had won as an ordinary parish clergyman. Differing in many respects from his predecessor, he carried on the main features of Bishop Walsham How's work, and there was not a parish in the East End where his influence was not felt.

Protest against Vivisection.—On Thursday last, at the residence of Mr. Henry Dell, 78, Cromwell-avenue, Highgate, a meeting was held to protest against the shocking increase of vivisection in connection with our hospitals. Rev. J. R. Wood presided, and an able address was delivered by Rev. T. Perkins, rector of Blandford, a voluntary lecturer on behalf of the National Anti-Vivisection Society, 20, Victoria-street. In the course of his address, Mr. Perkins dealt with the frightful torture inflicted upon dumb animals in the name of science. Though the public have an impression that numbers of the seven thousand animals experimented upon last year suffered little or no pain, owing to the experiments being inoculations, yet the real facts were that the animals were inoculated with the germs of cancer and other frightful diseases, and the agonies endured were untold. Fearful tortures were also inflicted in the eyes of dogs and cats without any anæsthetics. The lecturer quoted from such eminent men as Dr. Lawson Tait, of Birmingham, Sir William Fergusson, and others, who have raised their voices against these experiments, which are leading to grave errors. An animal being constituted differently from man, the experiments performed upon it cannot be relied upon for the latter.

HOME.

Army estimates for the current year exceed those of the preceding year by £880,000, and reach the huge total of £19,220,500.

The Committee on Money Lending will resume its sittings at once in the House of Commons. In view of recent legal proceedings reform is much needed.

Two hundred pounds have been sent by the Clothworkers' Company to the London Hospital Maintenance Fund, and a further £200 is to be subscribed annually for five years.

Experiments to be made throughout the country this summer in the growth of sugar beet are likely to be of national importance.—A propos of sugar, we trust that in the interest of temperance the proposal of the Jamaica Legislative Council to "protect" Jamaica rum in English markets will be defeated.

Last year in connection with the Royal Humane Society 716 persons were rewarded for saving 650 lives and endeavouring to save fifty-nine others. The rewards conferred were one gold and twenty-six silver medals, 148 bronze medals, 492 testimonials, and many pecuniary recognitions of bravery. Some of the rescues effected, including several by ladies, were particularly brilliant.

Juvenile depravity is a subject that may well cause alarm when we hear of seven boy burglars, the oldest only sixteen, being arraigned before a London magistrate for breaking into business premises.—The Duke of Sutherland is about to provide a holiday home for poor children of the Staffordshire Potteries at Hanchurch, on his Trentham estate.

The restlessness and suspicion that still exists in the labour world was exemplified last week when over sixty men left a shipbuilding yard at Sunderland because a few of their number had been urged to "hurry up" their work. They have since returned, but without the "apology" they demanded.—The Fife and Clackmannan coal owners have unanimously refused a demand by the miners for a 12½ per cent. rise in wages.

Now that the religious controversy is in abeyance, attention is being directed to practical developments of education. A scheme of the Technical Education Board provides for 600 promising boys each year continuing their education by the aid of the Junior County Scholarships.—The chairman of the Sloyd Association contends that among the curricula for the various schools they should have a system for helping scholars into the earlier stages of skilled trades. There can be no doubt of the immense industrial value of such a system.—The London School Board have resolved to abolish fees in evening continuation schools, which will greatly enhance their value.—Among the Jewish community a movement is on foot to do honour to Lord Rothschild by providing the £20,000 required for the enlargement of the Jews' Free School, Spitalfields. The extension is to be called the "Rothschild Wing."

FOREIGN.

It is reported that the Shah of Persia intends visiting Europe during the coming summer. If only we could bring these foreign visitors into contact with the spiritual forces of true Christianity what grand missionaries they might become!

Greece seems to be settling down. In letters to the Queen and the Tsar, King George of Greece expresses the warmest thanks of Greece for the guarantee of the loan.—The Greek Refugees' Committee are pushing forward the distribution of seed corn, and helping the refugees back to their villages.

Crete.—Starving peasants at Paleocastro (Crete) beg the Consular body at Candia to arrange for a steamer to call for them that they may embark for Greece. Their condition is most pitiable. Nearly £1200 has been subscribed to the Destitute Cretans Fund.—The Ambassadors at Constantinople are considering a proposal to provide a provisional government, to introduce autonomy without appointing a provisional governor. This indicates a peaceful solution of a troublous problem.

America and Spain.—Some American journals have wickedly endeavoured to inflame the relations between these countries by attributing to enmity on the part of Spain a terrible explosion that occurred on the American cruiser Maine, lying in Havana Harbour. Nearly three hundred men and officers are reported killed. The cause of the accident is unknown.

Klondike.—The infatuation for gold continues to draw multitudes to this dreary region. A gigantic "rate" war has been deliberately entered upon between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the United States Trans-continental lines to secure the traffic; and the United States Government is also said to be putting difficulties in the way of Canadian communication.—The Clara Nevada, homeward bound from Klondike, has been totally wrecked on the Pacific coast; crew and passengers were lost.

The East continues in a state of unrest. The relations between Servia and Bulgaria are much strained, and trouble may be anticipated in the Balkans. The Porte has sent Edhem Pasha to investigate the situation in Macedonia. The Odessa correspondent of the Times says that Russia is negotiating with Turkey for permission to send an ironclad through the Bosphorus. Pardon is to be extended by the Sultan to all the Bulgarians in the Uskub district, except the ringleaders, and the Kaimakams who abused their authority are dismissed.

China and Japan.—A Japanese Cabinet Council just held decided that the finances of Japan permitted no delay in payment of the Chinese war indemnity. The Chinese Government has agreed to open all inland waters to navigation by steamers, whether foreign or native-owned, under regulations to be subsequently framed. Telegraphic dispatches from Singapore state that the French in Indo-China are mobilising 7,000 troops for action in Hainan, China, or Siam.

India.—Light and shade in Indian affairs have been brought out during the past week. Parliament was asked to pass a vote of censure on the Government for the continued occupation of Chitral, and for the frontier war (which has cost more than two-and-a-half million sterling). The motion was, however, rejected. But it is gratifying to note that the Afridis themselves have shown a sense of confidence in our rule by seeking a place of refuge for their wives and children, not in their own inaccessible mountains but in our cantonment town of Peshawur. Does not this suggest that these rugged warriors might have been won by kindness had our representatives gone the right way about it? A beautiful statue of Her Majesty the Queen Empress, to be erected at Maulmain (India), was subscribed for chiefly by Burmese and executed by a Burmese sculptor—a cheering indication of loyalty. In the Legislative Council of India the Bill for amending the laws relating to sedition was passed.

Africa.—The prospects of peaceful rule and the attendant possibilities of missionary progress do not seem very hopeful in some parts of West and Central Africa. Not only from the natives do difficulties continue to arise, but France has occasioned anxiety by establishing posts on what is deemed to be British territory at Borea. Recruits are coming in freely for the new imperial regiments in the Lagos and Niger Hinterland. A new reserve corps is to be created for the Congo Free State army. A party of English nurses will sail shortly for this region. Nipseni, the chief of the Angoni Zulus in Nyassaland, has risen in revolt, which a strong British force has been sent to put down. News has been received of further fighting in Uganda, and Major Macdonald's party are surrounding the rebels. Great tact is needed in our relations with these native races.—In West Africa the French expeditions are advancing toward Sokoto. The Sultan of Sokoto has ordered them to halt forty miles from the capital, while the Agent-General of the Niger Company is holding a force in readiness to assist the Sultan if necessary.—At the palaver between the Niger Company and the Ibouza tribe the following terms were agreed to:—(1) The abolition of human sacrifices. (2) The opening of roads to all the tribes. (3) Missionaries to be allowed to reside and erect buildings in three of the Ibouza towns. (4) One King, with a council of twelve, to be appointed, and to be responsible to the Government, instead of the hundred chiefs now reigning.

Figueras Evangelistic Mission.—Our builder has informed us that expensive repairs and alterations will have to be made to the roofs of our Medical Mission Building and Infant School. We cannot afford to draw on our general fund, and should be very thankful to avoid doing so by having a successful sale of work in the spring. The Society for Promoting Female Welfare kindly lent us a stall at their annual sale, to take place in the Albert Hall (D.V.) on April 28 and 29. Out here we have not a spare moment from our work to furnish a stall, so must appeal to friends in Britain to help us, and there is no time to lose. Articles for the sale may be sent to Miss Lucy Smith, Fairfield House, Hampstead Hill Gardens, N.W.

Scenes in a Northern Town.

LAST Sunday morning, going down a certain street near the centre of the town, the writer counted thirty-nine shops open for business, not counting the public-houses, which numbered ten; forty-nine shops open in a comparatively short street! In one of the shops I counted seventeen customers (big and little) inside at one time; on the Saturday night, passing the same shop, there were but two or three customers in. Sunday seems to be market-day.

Two boys selling Sunday newspapers in the streets told me they sold between them twenty dozen on a Sunday. Mentioning it to a policeman, he seemed to have a high opinion of the moral effect of reading Sunday newspapers. He appeared to think we could spare the Bible better than them. When someone in the Town Council complained of boys shouting papers for sale on a Sunday, it was moved that the police should instruct them not to shout so loud. Three successive owners of one of the shops died suddenly. What goes on in and around the public-houses would be a sickening story. The narrow lanes that run sideways from the street, I am afraid, have been often washed with countless human tears.

At the end of the same street was the mortuary. Looking in one Sunday morning, I saw a young woman lying stretched out for her long sleep, her hair all dishevelled; and as I looked at her upturned face I saw it was one who passed me a few Sunday nights before, going with a can in her hand to the public-house. As she passed me she said, "Oh, when I see you I feel ashamed." She had died the night before, in a drunken sleep, within an open passage. As I stood looking, a young woman, twenty-one years of age, came in to see who it was. I spoke a few words, gave her a Gospel warning: she was the picture of health, but died herself only four days afterwards, with scarcely a moment's warning.

How many of the churches avoid all contact with these floating wrecks drifting past their doors to the death that never dies! In the same parish the Nonconformists have sold four of their chapels to the Church, and gone to a more respectable part of the town. Another Nonconformist chapel close by, has been sold for a place of business. One is shut up; another one was sold for a bond warehouse for spirits. These are all close to the street spoken of.

Meanwhile the wail of human misery rings about the ears of God's people, who often seem as "deaf as destiny" to the sound. The church bells ring up the street, but they neither go to church nor shut up their shops. A street girl said, "I would not know it was Sunday at all if it were not for the church bells." E.B.

Yarrow Convalescent Home.

Since the opening of this institution at Broadstairs, a little over two years ago, no fewer than 1299 children have been benefited by a stay there. It will be remembered that the Home is fully endowed, and no subscriptions are required; also that it is not intended for the very poor, but for children who have been respectably brought up, and whose parents cannot afford to send them to the seaside entirely at their own expense.

During the summer months the applications for admission are far in excess of the capabilities of the Home; but in winter it is only partly filled, and the trustees are most anxious to maintain its utility equally throughout the year. There is little doubt that the falling off in applications during the winter may arise from the fact that the Home is thought not to be a very desirable resort during the inclement part of the year; but such is not the case. The building is thoroughly warmed and ventilated, a healthy temperature being maintained throughout; and there are play corridors and covered playgrounds without. The grounds are planted and well sheltered, and there are but very few days in the year when children cannot enjoy the fresh air, even when the weather debars them from going to the sea-front.

The secretary of the Home is Mr. T. Fredk. Myers, 73a, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

The King's Own Mission.

THE third annual report of this Mission tells of uphill work, in the face of serious initial discouragements, crowned by remarkable success. Mr. W. Green, of Bickley, the treasurer, traces the hand of the Lord in the whole work; while Mr. O. L. Heatley, the superintendent, follows with a detailed account of service. The council say:—

"A few months ago the work was threatened with a total collapse, the mortgagees of the property informing us that, an offer of purchase having been made, we must be prepared to quit the premises at the close of the year. This, of itself, would have been a crushing blow after the immense amount of labour, anxiety, and expense incurred in the promotion of the Mission; but when we learned that under the new ownership the premises would, in all probability, be used as a music-hall, our grief and consternation were increased a hundred-fold, and it was felt that it was our imperative duty to avert, if possible, such a dire calamity.

"To save the work from dispersion, and the premises from being used as a music-hall, the lease had to be purchased. Noble friends came forward, and a total of £1276 12s. was secured; but there still remains £626 to be raised.

"During the year our hearts have been rejoiced by seeing many souls saved, and here let me say that we believe that the thing which has had the greatest weight with the neighbourhood has been the changed lives and general appearance of those who have been converted to God. We stood one Sunday morning in the home of a drunkard, and were shown the empty cupboard and listened to the sad, sad wail of the drunkard's wife; and as we listened we wept—wept bitter tears! Work there was that could be done, but the same sad tale was told us—neglected for the drink. Thank God! that man has been sought out, and to-day is saved, and one of our workers.

"Another case is that of a man who attended our open-air meetings for fully twelve months, and often designed to upset us, but could not. The Holy Spirit was working in him. At length he asked to be allowed to join our Temperance Society. We next found him at our early morning prayer meeting, and then on a Sunday night upon his knees, crying 'God be merciful to me a sinner!' This man also is doing a good work in seeking to bring others to God. We must not close without stating that not only are drunkards getting saved, but others who have been mere formalists have had their eyes opened by the Holy Spirit to see Jesus Christ."

The open-air and house-to-house operations have also been the means of winning many. The Bible-classes and Sunday-school also show gratifying results, as also the service of the Sisters in the homes of the people. Thus "what appeared three years ago to be an utter impossibility is to-day an accomplished fact, viz., the establishment of The King's Own Mission, at St. James's Hall, Royal-road, Kennington Park, S.E., with all its numerous and successful agencies."

Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road.

THE workers in the various branches of this mission held their annual meeting last week. Reports were presented of increasing efforts to reach the Christless in the densely populated district. God has manifested his power in the awakening and conversion of many, both young and old.

In the course of the evening it was mentioned that of the thirty members who joined the fellowship at the beginning of Mr. D. M. Cameron's labours fifteen have fallen asleep. Cheering accounts were given of the work in connection with the meeting for mothers, the Sunday-school, and the Band of Hope. The converts of the mission contribute out of their poverty to sustain the work, but help from outside is needed if all the agencies are to be kept in operation.

A hall for the children's work is a pressing need, but there are no available funds. In fact, the year's working account shows a deficit of nearly £100, the present building having been cleaned and relighted. Mr. Cameron has the warm encouragement of well-known friends of Gospel work, and it is to be regretted that his energies should be hampered by financial obstacles. His address is 515, Wandsworth-road, Clapham, S.W.

Reaching the Hooligans.

DEAR SIR,—On next Sunday, February 27, we (D.V.) commence the general work in our new Mission Hall, Holland-street, Southwark-street. It is quite close to the Surrey end of Blackfriars Bridge.

The missioner will be Mr. David Rea, of Belfast. Readers of The Christian will remember accounts of the gracious manifestations of the Holy Spirit's power in connection with Mr. Rea's preaching in Belfast, Ballymena, Glasgow, Aberdeen, etc. May his coming to South-east London be with signs and wonders following. On Sunday mornings at 11.30 there will be an address to Christian workers, and in the evenings at 7.0 an evangelistic service; also on week-nights at 8.0 (except Saturdays).

We want to hold an open-air all-day campaign on Sunday, and an open-air service before the meeting indoors each week night. May I plead with those who love old-fashioned, out-and-out, to-seek-and-to-save aggressive work to come over and spend next Sunday with us, and also help us during the week? Refreshments will be provided at the mission throughout Sunday and on week evenings.

On Sunday, 6th March, we hope to begin the special work amongst the hooligans. Will any Christian friends whose hearts are moved to take a practical share in this missionary work amongst home heathen kindly write to me, or call and see me any night at the Mission?

A notable result of Mr. Moody's first great Mission in London was that many who were converted took up forthwith definite work for God, and some are now front-rank men in voluntary Christian work. I hope that similar fruit may be found from the services Mr. McNeill is now holding. Any who have found the Saviour at his meetings and wish to commence to work for the Lord will find a niche of usefulness in our new Mission. We can utilise everybody whose hearts yearn to be "something for Thee."—Yours faithfully, J. W. C. Fegan.

Free Church Councils.

REV. W. BRADFIELD, B.A., of the Bishop-street Chapel, has been elected president of the Leicester Free Church Council for the ensuing year, in succession to Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A.

Rev. Geo. Hooper, of Eston, concluded on Wednesday week a twelve days' united mission at Dudley, organised by the Free Church Council. The meetings were held in the King-street Congregational Chapel, the largest in Dudley. Mr. Hooper received great assistance from the Free Church ministers, all of whom threw themselves heartily into the movement, arranging daily Bible-readings, and also open-air services in the evenings, which were the means of bringing many people from the streets into the meetings. Considerable interest was manifested from the first, and in a few nights the spacious building, accommodating over 1200, was crowded to its utmost capacity. As a result of the mission, 169 names were taken in the inquiry rooms, and the spiritual life of many was deepened.

In connection with the Sittingbourne and Milton Council of Evangelical Free Churches, a mission has been held by Mr. O. L. Heatley in Sittingbourne. The series began on February 7 with a Bible reading in the afternoon, and an evangelistic service in the evening. The attendance was good, and the meetings were greatly appreciated. The congregations increased, until on Sunday, the 13th, the Baptist Tabernacle was packed with an audience of 800 people. On Monday Mr. Heatley gave his lecture on "The Story of My Life" to a very large and enthusiastic audience. The meetings have been most stimulating to Christians and impressive to the unconverted. The missioner does not adopt great pressure in the services, but believes in the truth itself forcing people into confession of Christ.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—The committee have united with the Portsmouth Rescue Society in holding meetings for the outcast of Landport and Portsea. Larger numbers were induced to attend than at any effort made for some years past. Several girls from both meetings entered Homes, and some were restored to sorrowing friends. It was most encouraging to learn that the rescued cases from the gatherings held last September were still doing well in the Homes, and being fitted for respectable domestic service. Mr. and Mrs. Fison, Captain Key, R.N., Mr. Denning, Miss Sals, and Mr. McCree, secretary of the parent society, took part, with other local friends.

MR. W. R. LANE AT SOUTHAMPTON.

From exceptional local causes Southampton has experienced a boom of commercial prosperity in recent years, and this has resulted in the usual, if not inevitable, deadening of spiritual life and accession to the forces of evil. While the ranks of the ungodly have been continually reinforced, there has been no corresponding increase of energy and zeal in the Christian churches to meet the soul-needs of the growing population. This fact has lain heavily on the hearts of those who longed that others should participate with them in the great Salvation, and their prayers and efforts have resulted in several special missions which are now being held.

The Albion Congregational Church (Rev. H. J. Perkins, pastor), guided undoubtedly by the Holy Spirit, as results have proved, arranged some months since for a mission to be conducted by Mr. Lane from February 6 to 17. It was preceded by continuous, earnest, believing prayer, and the prayer-answering God has sent showers of blessing. Great expectations of an outpouring of the Spirit—searching, saving, and cleansing—were entertained, and from the first service it was felt that these expectations would not be disappointed. The early meetings were large, but not crowded, and Mr. Lane's strong, manly, yet simple and tender, words, "took hold" at once." It was felt that no undue sentimentalism would be resorted to, and that the truth as it is in Jesus would be presented simply in its own attractive beauty and power.

It proved so; from the young people's meeting on the first Sunday afternoon to the closing meeting of thanksgiving and praise it was evident that the message of love, and of warning from neglected love, was winning its way to the hearts and consciences of the hearers. The audiences continued to increase in numbers, until on the Friday night, when Mr. Lane took as his subject "The Pilgrim's Progress" (with lantern illustrations), it was crowded. On Sunday, the 13th, a men's service in the afternoon was attended by about 700, and the solemn address on purity of life is known to have called forth from some the cry, "Create in me a clean heart, O God." At the evening service the crowded audience listened to a most impressive discourse on Pilate's question, "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" while the pastor preached to an overflow meeting in the school-room adjoining. A women's meeting, attended by about 500, was held on Monday afternoon. During the last four nights the interest increased rapidly. The address on "The Great White Throne" was probably the most impressive of the series, and the solemn warnings founded on a contemplation of the incidents and issues of the Final Judgment sank deep into the consciences of many, leading some to seek counsel and prayer in the after-meeting. On seven afternoons Bible-readings were held in the Shaftesbury Hall of the Y.M.C.A., which were fully attended from the first, and at last were very crowded. They were times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, who revealed glorious things out of his Word.

The invitations to the inquiry-room throughout the mission were responded to by about 280, of whom 192 professed decision for Christ, the remainder being either persons under conviction of sin, backsliders seeking recovery, or souls yearning for a deeper spiritual life, "a closer walk with God." Statistics can convey no just estimate of the results of a spiritual awakening like this. A better testimony, perhaps, than that supplied by figures was that given at the memorable thanksgiving service on Thursday night with which the mission closed. The thronged audience had been deeply interested in Mr. Lane's recital of his own conversion, and his closing appeals and "farewell" moved the hearts of all. When the pastor asked that those who had received spiritual blessing during the mission would indicate it by standing, there appeared to be few, if any, who could resist the call to this simple act of testimony and thanksgiving. It was a grand and thrilling sight to see a crowded audience of some 1200 thus literally "stand up for Jesus," and although only the Great Day can reveal how much of this fervour will abide the test of time and temptation, our trust is in Him who "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." The evangelist is gone to other spheres of labour, but the blessing remains, and an overwhelming sense of gratitude pervades the church. Special services will still be continued, and were fitly commenced by an earnest declaration of "the keeping power of God" by the pastor on Sunday night. The prayers of God's believing people for evidences of his Spirit's influence and power to be continued are earnestly requested. E. R. G.

February 20.

MR. MOODY'S COMING MISSION.

Mr. Dwight L. Moody, who only lately closed a remarkable series of revival meetings in Carnegie Hall, New York, will begin, on March 13, a new movement on a much larger scale. So much spiritual benefit has resulted from the Carnegie Hall gatherings that urgent demands were made in many quarters for a continuance of the grand spiritual work which had begun to be felt throughout a very large section of the country. Accordingly, the Industrial Building, known as the Grand Central Palace, New York City, has been secured for the week from March 13 to 20, when it is expected that one of the grandest series of revival services ever seen in the United States will take place. This great hall is one of the largest in the States in point of seating capacity. There are 7,000 chairs, and more can be provided, if necessary, so that as many as 10,000 can be comfortably accommodated.

Mr. Moody would be glad if friends on this side would pray earnestly for much blessing on these great gatherings.

GIPSY SMITH AT READING.

Great spiritual power and abounding manifestations of blessing marked the United Mission, conducted from Feb. 6 to 14, in the Town Hall, Reading, by Gipsy Smith. The local Free Church Council organised the work, and the churches laboured most harmoniously in its promotion. The spacious building, accommodating about 2,000, was nightly crowded to excess, and hundreds turned away. In response to the appeals of the evangelist, nearly 500 men and women went to the inquiry-room, and hundreds professed conversion. It is felt that a great deal of solid work was done, and a thanksgiving meeting of the converts, inquirers, and workers is being arranged for Monday, Feb. 28.

MR. B. F. WEAVER IN GLASGOW.

For fourteen years evangelistic work, in connection with the Cowcaddens Free Church, has been carried on every night without intermission in the northern districts of Glasgow. Local helpers have always been glad to give service in a mission which is generally acknowledged to be situated "where Satan's seat is." But we have often the help of evangelists and ministers. Such assistance we are always glad to avail ourselves of in the month of January—that being one of the most fruitful months of the year. This time it was arranged the Brothers Weaver should give us a three weeks' mission. There was much prayer and preparation beforehand. Fruit began to appear even before the mission began. An old fisher was heard to say, "It is time to haul the nets when the fish are leaping into the boat," and so we found it. Mr. Frank Weaver was not able to come owing to cold caught at Cardiff, but Mr. Bewley F. Weaver is a great favourite, and from the very first meeting the attendance was very large on Sabbaths and remarkably good on weekdays.

Mr. Weaver does not spare himself in study, prayer, or preaching. He knows his Bible well, and knows how to apply it to the needs of the soul. His presentation of the Gospel always comes after dealing with the conscience, and the Spirit of God blesses the message wonderfully.

Two things have been notable about this mission. Backsliders who had almost given up hope regarding themselves have been restored, and hardened sinners have professed surrender to Christ. Some of the nights were very remarkable for conscious power. On the last evening there was a praise and testimony meeting, when Christians of many years' standing as well as young converts confessed that they had experienced a revival. Upwards of one hundred cases were dealt with, several being as clear and definite in their profession as any we have met with these many years. Our earnest prayer is that the sons of Richard Weaver may be increasingly blessed in winning souls for Christ.

To-day we had the annual meeting of our Pioneer Missions—this being what has come to be known with us as Founders' Day. There was a gathering of 360 of the poorest of the poor, along with their six missionaries (ladies). These missions have proved a great blessing to the poor of these districts. There are now 275 families connected with them, and altogether 381 in regular attendance. There are 149 living witnesses for Christ. It is the Lord's doing and wonderful in our eyes.

(Rev.) William Ross.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

A mission has been held at St George's Presbyterian Church, Sunderland, by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A., from February 6 to February 11. There have been meetings in the afternoons for Christians, while in the evenings the work has been principally with the unsaved. The time has been one of singular refreshment. God has richly blessed his people and greatly increased his inheritance. There has been nothing like it for many years. The interest grew from day to day, and at the final meeting there were close on one thousand persons present. A large number openly confessed Christ; young men and women were converted to God—fully a score stood up to mark their choice of Christ on the closing night. On Sunday, February 13, the services were conducted by the minister, Rev. J. Smyth Wood. In the evening the spacious church was crowded, and it was evident that the time of revival had not closed with the departure of Mr. Macgregor. It is confidently hoped that in every channel of congregational activity the throb of the new and higher life will be felt.

Mr. J. J. Sims has concluded a four weeks' very fruitful mission in connection with Rev. John Robertson's work in the City Temple, Glasgow. He preached for Mr. Robertson on the Sabbath evenings in the City Hall, and on the other evenings of the week in our own hall to large and appreciative audiences. We had some very striking cases of conversion, and many of God's people were greatly helped by his teaching. Through the singing of the Gospel by Mrs. Sims, many hearts were touched by the earnest appeal in song.—A. Bell.

The parish mission in Broughton, near Kettering, conducted by Rev. Alan H. Watts, Vicar of Lenton, was brought to a close on Tuesday week by a hearty service of thanksgiving. During the twelve days the mission lasted the attendance was good. On the Sunday evenings it was difficult to seat, even with the aid of benches, the large numbers present. The interest deepened as the mission advanced, and the spiritual life of the village has been greatly helped.

A week's united mission has been held in Torquay by Mr. George Clark. The largest available building in the town—the Royal Public Hall—was crowded night by night. Week-day services and Sunday services were held in the Congregational, Baptist, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan Churches, and very considerable interest has been aroused.

Much joy has been occasioned by the blessing given to the fortnight's mission to young people, held in Earlham Hall, one of the centres of the N.-East London Gospel Mission, by Mr. Josiah Spiers, of the Children's Special Service Mission. There was a large and very happy gathering of converts and friends at the closing meeting on Friday last, to offer praise for the Divine blessing vouchsafed, in which the readers of The Christian are asked to join. Friends and teachers from other schools came with contingents of young people during the mission, and many very distinct cases of conversion were the happy rewards of such true soul seekers' solicitude, and most heartily did sower and reaper rejoice together. It is believed that fruit will continue to be found appearing, if "after many days." Mr. Spiers's next mission is at Plymouth, for which prayer is requested.—W. C.

Marked blessing is accompanying the mission of Rev. J. Manton Smith, in Toronto, where, with the co-operation of all the ministers of the city, he is conducting a six weeks' engagement. Although the snow is very heavy, this does not interfere. Crowds gather nightly to hear the Word, and many are led to confess Christ. A special sermon was preached at McMaster's University to the students by the evangelist, which was warmly appreciated. Never has he met with more hearty sympathy and help from ministers than in Toronto. He has still four weeks more to stay in the city before returning to Philadelphia. Will Christians kindly unite in prayer and praise for this work of God among the churches in Toronto?—L.A.S.

Mr. Wm. Thomson, jun., of Glasgow, has concluded a three weeks' united mission between the Strand Street Friends' Institute and Dublin Medical Mission. Limelight views were used at the children's and adults' gatherings, which attracted numbers who would not otherwise have attended. From the commencement and each night following many professed to trust the Lord as their Saviour; amongst these were some interesting cases of poor, dark Roman Catholics. The Bible readings drew numbers of Christians from all denominations, and many testimonies have been received from those who have entered into a new life of surrender to the power of the Holy Spirit. Prayer is asked for the young Christians who are surrounded by great difficulties, many of them living in the slums of the city.—E. Edith Figgis.

A fourteen days' special Gospel mission, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Woolley, of Cromer, has been brought to a close at Pinchbeck Baptist Chapel. The meetings throughout have been of an encouraging character, and resulted in much blessing.

Mr. Ned Wright has concluded a twelve days' mission at Morice-square Baptist Chapel, Devonport, under the auspices of the Young People's Society. His stirring addresses were listened to with great interest, and it is hoped that much blessing may result from his faithful preaching of the Gospel.

Mr. J. C. Smith, evangelist, of Aberdeen, is at present in the Orkney Islands. Reports tell of crowded meetings in Stromness, real interest awakened, and evident signs following the Word preached.

Mr. A. Stewart and Mr. and Mrs. S. Thomson have been having special meetings in Chirnside, in Berwickshire. There has been a real movement among the people, and the first week was of so encouraging a nature that it was decided to go on for a week longer. The Spirit of God was manifestly present in the meetings, and some interesting cases of blessing have been the result of the Word preached. No doubt Mrs. Thomson's singing was an attraction, and was used of God to convey the message to not a few hearts. Personal visitation was another factor, as it always is in work of this kind.

A ten days' mission in the parish of Middleton, conducted by Canon Atherton and other missioners, was brought to a close last week. The meetings were of a successful character throughout, Canon Atherton's meetings with men in the Co-operative Hall, and those of Mrs. Atherton for women, being particularly satisfactory. The Bishop of Manchester paid a visit to the parish on Friday, and congratulated the rector and parish upon the success of the mission.

A week of special meetings has been held in the Station-road Hall, Chesham, by Mr. George Hunter. A week of special prayer was held before the meetings began, and these prayers have been abundantly answered. The meetings grew from the first night, and many souls have been saved, some being very noted cases. The crowning meeting came on Sunday evening. Before the time of commencing the hall was packed to the door, as also the small hall behind, and many, unable to get in, had to turn away. The after meeting will never be forgotten by those who were present; the vestry was filled with the anxious, and here and there over the hall the workers were dealing with young men and women broken down under the Word of God. It would be impossible to say how many were saved, the Day will declare it; we can only praise and bless God for the numbers that rose at the end of the meeting (which continued four hours) to confess that God had saved them that night. It was encouraging to note how Christians of all denominations were helping in the after meeting, pointing souls to Jesus, and some of the most earnest were young men saved during Mr. Hunter's last visit, three months ago. Prayer is asked for continued blessing.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has been holding meetings during the past five weeks in Brooklyn, New York, and various parts of New Jersey. Hundreds have professed conversion, and great good has been done. Frequently in a single meeting from fifty to one hundred have come out into the light, and have been ready in a day or two to tell the story of their conversion. On February 2 about 150 young converts and Christians went with the evangelist in large sleighs from one town to another, to assist in the work. Many in England who have attended his meetings will rejoice in this good news and pray for his labours.

A simultaneous mission, held in the Methodist chapels of Newcastle and Gateshead, has proved a season of much blessing. Rev. Thomas Cook, at High West-street, has had a stirring time. Here, as elsewhere, the fullest possible preparation was made beforehand, and over 10,000 homes in the neighbourhood were visited. On the first Saturday Mr. Cook gave an address on dealing with those seeking salvation in the inquiry-rooms. From the first the services were largely attended, and many came forward seeking the Saviour. On the Friday night the service was specially for the deepening of spiritual life. It was a revelation of spiritual privilege, which made an epoch in the religious life of many. The separate services for men, for women, and for young people were much blessed. On the second Sunday a singing band, 200 strong, headed by Mr. Cook and one of the ministers, as also the mayor of the borough, paraded the streets at 7 a.m., and the Gospel was sung to many as they lay in their beds. Large numbers have given in their names as having received spiritual blessing during the mission.

A special mission has been conducted by Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society, in the United Methodist chapel, Middlesbrough. Each evening there have been splendid congregations, and the result has been that numbers have openly confessed Christ.

Gipsy Smith, Batley, to Feb. 28.
Mr. Monro Collings, Enfield, to March 8.
Mr. E. P. Telford, Leyton, Feb. 27-Mar. 10.
Mr. J. S. Harrison, East London Tabernacle, Feb. 27.
Sergeant Pullinger, Christchurch, Hants, to Mar. 6.
Mr. F. C. Spurr, to Easter, Penzance, Falmouth, and Truro.
Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken, Castle Hall, Stalybridge, to Mar. 7.
Mr. J. J. Sims, St. James' Hall, Portsmouth, to Mar. 6; Merrion Hall, Dublin, during March.
Mr. J. Bennett Anderson, Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New Cut, to Mar. 3.
The Weaver Bros., Coatbridge, Mar. 1; Stoke Newington, Mar. 6-18; Liverpool, March 19-Apr. 1.
Mr. George Clarke, East Finchley, to Mar. 4; Wood Green, Mar. 6-21; Holloway, Mar. 27-Apr. 3.
Mr. Charles Inglis, New Brompton, Feb. 27-Mar. 7; Rochester, Mar. 13-21; Tottenham, Mar. 27-Apr. 5.
Mr. W. R. Lane, Kidderminster, Feb. 27-Mar. 7; Maidstone, Mar. 13-21; Sudbury (Suffolk), Mar. 27-Apr. 3.

The Evangelization Society.—The following missions, amongst others, will be in progress on Sunday next:—Oswaldtwistle, J. Shields; Dorking, J. H. Cooke; Great Harwood, J. Greenwood; Paignton, F. Holmes; Normanby, A. Clark; Ipswich, J. Johnson; Toppesfield, S. J. West; Chalk Farm, A. Knight; Elie, John Galletly; Blantyre, J. W. Moodie; Glasgow, R. Hill; Glasgow, T. Canning; Grantown-on-Spey, C. G. Roger; Paisley, D. Pittendrigh.

Requests for Prayer.

On behalf of Gospel work in the village of Whitletts, Ayrshire.

For an outpouring of the Spirit on the churches in Doune, Perthshire.

For special services at the Gospel Hall, Colyton, Devon, by Fred. A. Glover.

For a mission by Mr. John Simmonds, at Ottery St. Mary, Feb. 20 to March 4.

For the true enlightenment of two natives of India, long resident in this country.

For Mr. Moody's coming mission (March 13-20) in the Grand Central Palace in New York.

For great blessing on a fortnight's mission at Nitshill, near Glasgow, by Mr. Lapsley, from March 6.

For a six-days' mission to be held on Sunday, February 27, at Round's-green, Oldbury, by Mrs. Cheeseman.

For much blessing on special services at St. Mary-street Baptist Chapel, Newport, Mon., conducted by Mr. T. M. Wintle on Sunday next.

For a Sunday-school class held every Sunday evening at Copperfield-road Schools, Limehouse, that many of the children may be saved.

For a mission in connection with the Irish Church Mission, in Mission Buildings, Townsend-street, Dublin, by Rev. William Baillie, commencing March 1.

Mrs. Banks (Keswick) asks prayer for a mission now being conducted at Keswick by Mr. Hall, evangelist, Annan. The many who visit Keswick in the summer are earnestly asked to plead with God for a blessing on the inhabitants of this privileged town.

Rev. C. H. Waller, D.D., Principal of St. John's Hall, Highbury, has been ordered by the doctor complete rest for six months, his health having given way, and will take a sea voyage. It is hoped that he will be able in the autumn to resume his loved work.

Irish Notes.

The Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance has appointed Thursday, March 17, as a day of special prayer on behalf of Ireland.

Under the auspices of the Dublin Methodist Council it has been resolved that a tent is to be provided for evangelistic work in the city and suburbs.

In connection with an open-air service in Cork on Sunday week, Rev. Mr. Ainley and a number of workers were fiercely attacked by a savage mob, and obliged to fly for their lives.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin recently visited the police cells of the city at 12 o'clock on a Saturday night. He has stated that the scenes he witnessed "startled and appalled him," and that some remedy must be found for them.

Dublin Protestantism has sustained a severe loss in the death of Mr. John R. Fowler, J.P., of Bray. Deceased took a deep interest in every good work, and was one of the founders and most earnest supporters of the Dublin Christian Convention.

A new philanthropy, called the Police-aided Children's Clothing Society, has been established in Dublin for the purpose of clothing the children of the very poor. Gross abuse is prevented by each policeman taking particulars about certain cases and watching the recipients to see that the clothes are not sold or pawned.

Fisherwick-place Church, Belfast, of which Rev. Dr. Williamson is pastor, has been sold for £16,000, as a site for a hall for the meetings of the General Assembly, for premises for young men and young women workers, for central church offices, and for a hall for evangelistic purposes. The congregation intend to build a church in the suburbs of the city.

Rev. P. B. Johnson says that he has the names of over thirty ministers in the Church of Ireland who were either converts or the children of converts from the Church of Rome. He also states that during the past four years 131 adults have publicly renounced their connection with Roman Catholicism, and have openly joined his church in Townsend-street, Dublin.

Scottish Notes.

The united gathering of Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A., mentioned in last week's issue, was held in Inverness, not in Dundee, as stated in error.

Rev. W. Todd, Auchterarder, has unanimously been elected as colleague and successor to Rev. Dr. Macphail, Pilrig Free Church, Edinburgh.

The building at Greyfriars, Edinburgh, formerly used as a place of worship by the Free Church of Scotland, has become a Jewish synagogue.

Mr. J. G. Alexander, of the Anti-Opium Society, has been addressing a number of meetings, in several towns in Scotland, with a view to quickening the public mind and conscience in regard to the evils of the opium traffic.

Rev. J. S. Rae, Newington U.P. Church, has been presented, on the occasion of his semi-jubilee, with substantial tokens of goodwill from his congregation and friends. Mr. Rae is an earnest and faithful preacher, well known for his sympathy with evangelistic work, and his connection with the Edinburgh Convention for the deepening of spiritual life.

The question of the "Modern Dearth of Conversions" was earnestly discussed last week by the Dundee Baptist Association. Rev. J. W. Kettle traced certain higher causes in the working of God's spirit which might account for the absence of visible tokens of results, and dwelt on the enervating influence of the negative and nebulous preaching now so prevalent. Another cause of the dearth of conversions was the faint line of demarcation between the converted and the unconverted; or, in other words, the worldliness of the Church. In the majority of the churches there was no sort of pretension that the Church was to be the home of the regenerated only. Without being asked whether they were the Lord's children, young people were being driven to the Lord's table in shoals. Even the gate of the ministry was open to youths about whose spiritual fitness there had been no sort of inquiry.

A Plea for the Workhouses.—Notwithstanding that many workhouses are well looked after by visiting friends, it is doubtless true, as an esteemed correspondent states, that there are workhouses in various parts of the country that are quite without literature, Christian or general. Our correspondent writes: "If you mention the fact, the result will be that hundreds of people will send literature to the nearest workhouse, and thus a large number of the unfortunate inmates will be benefited." We are sure that this intimation will open up an opportunity to many of cheering and instructing large bodies of poor people.

Among the Churches

Church of England.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn, who has been missioning in India, is to start to-morrow on his return home.

The Archbishop of York, who is still suffering from acute rheumatism, intends to go abroad very shortly.

Canon Richmond has announced his intention of resigning the charge of Sherburn, which he has held for twenty-six years.

Rev. J. Edgar Sheppard has already resigned the Canonry in Gloucester Cathedral to which he was appointed the other day.

Archdeacon Sinclair preached last week to over 500 men in the service for men organised by Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield in Bethnal Green.

The Bishop of Bangor, since his recent seizure, has been seriously ill, but a denial has been given to a report that he proposed resigning his see.

Mrs. Carus, widow of the late Canon Carus, has given £1500 towards the new vicarage building fund of St. John's, Boscombe, in memory of her late husband.

Mr. Gladstone will contribute £1000, and Rev. Stephen Gladstone £500, towards providing for a new church at Shotton, a populous district near Hawarden.

Rev. Norton F. Duncan, clerical secretary of the Irish Church Missions, was to be married to Miss Evelyn Alice Sherbrooke at Clifton Parish Church on Tuesday.

The Bishop of London has promised to deliver the inaugural address at the new session of the Education Committee at the Geological Museum to-morrow (Friday).

Rev. J. Harford Battersby, who has now entered on his duties as vice-principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, has had a stirring farewell from his parishioners at Pembury.

The leaning tower of Chesterfield parish church has to be restored. Strangely enough, the Nonconformists of the town exhibit more practical interest in the work than Churchmen themselves.

The Bishop of Liverpool, speaking in Liverpool, said many clergymen in that city observed auricular confession. He had refused to license one clergyman because he intimated his intention of continuing it.

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners propose to amalgamate the two City benefices of St. Giles', Cripplegate, and St. Bartholomew the Little. This will be a wise measure, especially if the saving effected be devoted to providing a church in some new and needy district.

Rev. H. G. D. Latham, warden of the Inns of Court Mission, Drury-lane, speaking in the Temple Church on behalf of the mission, said one could not nowadays go to any part of London without discovering some new effort by the more privileged classes to do something for the welfare of their poorer brethren.

Archdeacon Sinclair spoke to nearly 700 men on Sunday last (Feb. 20) at St. Peter's, Upper Holloway, on "The Power of Habit," as influenced by communion with Christ. It is encouraging that these weekly services for men have, in point of numbers, gone up under the ministry of the Rev. Arthur Hart, and there is certainly no lack of high spiritual teaching.

The Bishop of Bristol, in presiding at a large meeting in Clifton last week, in aid of the work of the Church Army among the outcast and destitute, said it was always a pleasure for him to take any part in the work of the Church Army, for from his experience in London he knew so well what a great work it did. The High Sheriff of Bristol (Mr. Richardson Cross) presided last week, in the Colston Hall, at the annual meeting of the local Church Army Labour Home, and made an eloquent appeal for increased support for the work.

Rev. E. Miller, one of the C.M.S. missionaries in Uganda, who left for that country on Wednesday, after a few months' furlough, gave an interesting address on mission work in Uganda to the London Younger Clergy Union, at their meeting on Monday. Mr. Millar spoke of the great contrast between the present and past conditions of the country. During the last few years a great change had taken place, and that was in a great measure due to the Bible and to the work of the missionaries. During the four years he himself had been in the country 75,000 copies of the various portions of the Bible had been circulated. Six years ago there were only 5000 copies in the country, and not a whole Bible. Now they had a complete Bible, and the knowledge of the Bible displayed by the natives in Uganda was wonderful.

Congregational.

The pastorate at Grays has been accepted by Rev. H. D. Bull.

The vacancy at Guildford has now been happily filled by Rev. Alexander Cowe.

Rev. A. B. Tebb has completed a quarter of a century's ministry at Winlaton.

The new cause, formed 16 months ago, at Stoney-lane, Birmingham, is growing vigorously and doing good service.

Rev. U. R. Thomas has completed thirty-six years' pastorate at Redland-park Church, Bristol. He has now 484 members on the roll.

Rev. G. H. Lea, of Lodge-street Chapel, Bristol, has resigned that pastorate in order to proceed to Jamaica to take charge of the First Hill Church.

Rev. J. Wilberforce Sibree, who for two years was the assistant of Dr. Rogers at Clapham, is about to sail for Savaii (Samoa), in connection with the L.M.S.

For some years a fruitful evangelistic work has been done by Mr. James Learmount at Leicester, and latterly at Junction-road Chapel, of which he has now been ordained pastor.

An effort is being made to purchase the old house at Acton (just opposite the parish church) in which Richard Baxter resided from 1615 to 1670, and in which he wrote "The Saints' Everlasting Rest."

The manual of Finsbury-park Church, under the care of Rev. Ll. H. Parsons, shows 841 members, and in the Sunday-school 814 scholars, with 44 teachers. During the year 62 scholars have joined the church. All the agencies in connection with the church, which is situated in a very poor neighbourhood, are in a flourishing condition. Special aggressive work is caried on by two missions in the poorer streets surrounding the chapel.

Baptist.

The membership at Dr. Z. Dowen's church in Brixton is now 340.

Mr. E. C. Monk has been recognised as pastor at Zion Chapel, Tenterden.

The church at Westbourne-grove, W., have given a call to Rev. Geo. Freeman, of New Southgate.

The pastorate at East-street, Southampton, has been accepted by Rev. G. W. Brooker, of Bolton.

The bi-centenary of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge will be celebrated on March 8.

At Wood Green Chapel Rev. W. W. Haines reports 359 members, and a large circle of Earnest Endeavour.

Rev. G. M. Rice has been recognised as pastor at Gildersome, and Mr. G. S. Read at Brentwood Tabernacle.

Rev. H. J. Preece, of Maidenhead, having accepted a call to Tewkesbury, commences his ministry the first Sunday of April.

Rev. J. C. Forth, who has laboured for twenty-five years at Carley-street, Leicester, has accepted a call to Kirby Muxloe, Leicestershire.

Rev. C. H. Watkins has been recognised as pastor at Coupland-street, Manchester. Dr. McLaren, in the course of an address, said they had a swarming population around the place, with an enormous proportion of them living in a state of practical heathenism. The call to intense aggressive work among these Godless, Christless masses is both imperative and urgent.

At Hampden Chapel, South Hackney, the pastor, Rev. John Hillman, has celebrated his seventeenth anniversary. In commemoration of the jubilee year of the opening of the chapel, which has recently ended, and of the completion of the seventeenth year of his pastorate, the members of the church and congregation have presented him with a testimonial and a handsome study chair.

Methodist.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference has been addressing great congregations at the Leeds Central Mission.

Mr. E. W. Smith, son of Rev. John Smith, Primitive Missionary Secretary, has offered to accompany Rev. A. Baldwin on his return to Central Africa in April.

Mrs. Price Hughes and Sister Lily are about to make a tour through Ireland, in the interests of the "Sisters of the People," in connection with the West London Mission.

Within the past week a new village chapel has been opened at Stainton, in Teesdale, the site being the gift of the Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorne of Streatham Castle.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson has been preaching at Brunswick-place, Newcastle, in connection with the Home Missionary anniversary, to very large and appreciative congregations. He also took part in the annual Home Missionary meeting along with Major-General Campbell, of Sheffield.

The Convention of Local Preachers, held at Birmingham last week, is stated to have been an occasion of exceptional importance; there being actually 450 local preachers present. So large a gathering of English Wesleyan Methodist local preachers has scarcely ever been held before.

A movement has been inaugurated to work the Manor Chapel, Bermondsey, on mission lines. So far everything indicates success. Rev. W. K. Dunn, who is in charge, and was formerly associated with King's Cross Mission, thinks that there is an opening for a Connexional South London Mission and for a Free Methodist Settlement.

The Clapton Mission, under the care of Rev. Thomas Jackson, reports a deficiency in its social fund of £370 for the year. No less than 3000 destitute persons have been assisted at Whitechapel branch during the last nine months, and the Home of Rest Medical Mission, Maternity Society, and Free Breakfast Funds have all had a most prosperous year.

Presbyterian.

Rev. G. Elder has completed a quarter of a century's pastorate at St. Mark's, Greenwich.

At Seacombe, Liverpool, a membership of 289 is reported and much activity in Christian work.

Rev. W. Hutton, Moderator Elect of the Synod, reports 500 members in his church at Birkenhead.

Rev. Dr. Hastings, formerly of Newcastle, now of Edinburgh, has obtained twelve weeks' leave of absence to make a tour in the East.

The Synod evangelists, Rev. A. Allan, J. A. Irvine, W. Harcus, W. A. Macallan, D. M'Queen, and Geo. Patterson, have been engaged in a mission in Manchester and Salford.

Most encouraging reports have been given as to the mission work in connection with St. John's Wood Church, and of the numerous auxiliary agencies in active operation both at Marlborough-place, and at Kilburn, Portland Town, and at Cricklewood.

Fallen Asleep.

At Carysfort House, Boscombe, Hants, MARIA TARN COCKLE, aged seventy-two, for many years lady superintendent of the Manor House, a training branch of the C.E.Z. Missionary Society.—At Bournemouth, on 15th inst., Rev. J. T. COOKE, aged sixty-eight, for twenty-two years vicar of Walton-on-the-Naze.—At Liverpool, Rev. W. R. DUNCAN, an earnest curate at St. Peter's, Liverpool.—At Worthing, on 14th inst., Rev. CHARLES HOLE, D.D., aged sixty-nine, rector of Christ Church, Worthing, and formerly of Halifax, N.S., and Cape Town.—At Dover, on 12th inst., Rev. G. L. TOWERS, vicar of St. Margaret's, and for many years travelling secretary to the S.P.G.—At Blandford, Mr. T. H. BASTARD, aged 101, a Christian educationalist, and an earnest supporter of mission and philanthropic undertakings.—In Nottingham, on 11th inst., Mr. JOHN T. HILL, aged forty-seven, a prominent leader among Methodists, as also in municipal affairs.—At Halifax, Mr. A. LEEMING, aged eighty-two, for fifty-nine years an earnest worker in connection with Square Church.—At Leeds, on 12th inst., Mr. T. THOMPSON, aged fifty-one, an active Sunday-school and temperance worker.—At his office in St. Mary Axe, on 15th inst., Mr. H. T. GOLDING, a leader in Christian and benevolent work at Victoria Park Chapel, E.C.—At Kingswood, Bristol, Rev. SAMUEL BROWN, aged seventy-six, a retired Wesleyan minister, who for many years did good work in the West Indian Islands.—At Wrentham, Mrs. BROWNE, aged seventy-seven, widow of Rev. John Browne, a well-known Congregational minister.—At Sunderland, on 12th inst., Alderman S. S. ROBSON, aged seventy-three, formerly mayor of the town, and well known as an earnest Christian.—At St. Leonards, on 11th inst., Mrs. FISON, wife of Rev. Thomas Fison, of Hendon, and sister of "Christopher Crayon." For thirty-three years she laboured at Hendon with ever-increasing success. Her Bible-class was so large that it had to meet in the church; her mothers' meeting was equally successful, and in the Sunday-school and church her presence was everywhere felt.—At Donaghmore, co. Down, Mr. ROBERT SLOANE, an active worker in the Presbyterian Church.—At Waterford, Rev. J. HICKSON, lately diocesan curate, Waterford.—At Milltown, co. Kerry, Rev. CHAS. TYNER, greatly regretted.

Theological Students' Conference.

THE last few years have been marked by two great movements amongst the students of the world—the one in the direction of an awakening of spiritual life, and the other towards foreign missions. The former has been used to bring hundreds of college men to Christ, and to quicken the Christian life of others, while the latter has been the means of leading over 5000 students in America, Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australasia to decide to work, if God permit, in heathen and Mohammedan lands. In this country these movements are represented by the British College Christian Union and the Student Volunteer Missionary Union.

It is felt that the time has now come when a conference for the theological students of the British Isles should be convened, and the executive committees of the B.C.C.U. and S.V.M.U. have decided, after prayerful consideration, to hold a British Theological Students' Conference in the Y.M.C.A. Masonic Hall, Birmingham, April 12 to 16.

1. To determine the relation of British theological students to the student Christian movement in Britain.

2. To deepen the spiritual life of our theological colleges.

3. To stimulate missionary enthusiasm among theological students generally.

It is expected that 250 student delegates will be present; the committee hope that these will represent every hall of divinity in the United Kingdom. The speakers will include: The Bishop of Ripon, Revs. W. Barber, M.A., W. E. Burroughs, B.D., A. M. Fairbairn, D.D., J. H. Jowett, M.A., G. H. C. MacGregor, M.A., H. C. G. Handley Moule, D.D., A. J. Robinson, M.A., George Robson, D.D., Geo. Adam Smith, M.A., and Geo. Wilson.

The subjects treated will be such as are of special interest to theological students, e.g., "The Mission of the Ministry," "Motives for Ministering the Gospel," and "The Minister and the Devotional Study of the Word." One day will be devoted to missionary topics, with addresses on the "Value and Need of a Home Missionary Pastorate," "The Duty of the Church of Christ to the World."

Mr. H. Whitwell has kindly consented to act as local secretary, and will receive all communications at the Y.M.C.A., Needless Alley, Birmingham.

THE LYDD Y.M.C.A. appeals for help to carry on the Lord's work amongst the soldiers who visit the town, sometimes numbering 1000 to 2000. Last year opportunities for doing good were lost through lack of means and workers. Our Y.M. and S.C.A. room was only open on Sundays, Tuesdays, and Saturdays. CLAPTON MISSION'S SOCIAL AGENCIES. — The various philanthropic agencies of Clapton Mission include Medical Mission, Seaside Home of Rest, maternity aid, distribution of food and clothing to destitute persons and families, and free breakfasts to necessitous children. The Medical Mission has assisted upwards of 40,000 cases, and 150,000 free meals have been supplied to poor children. The districts embraced by the operations of our Mission are Lower Clapton, Homerton, Hoxton, and Whitechapel, and relief is given to the needy and suffering poor, irrespective of creed or party. The past fourteen years' ministry of Christian benevolence to the poor of London by our Mission, considering its extent and character, invests it with more than local interest, importance, and obligation, hence I ask the favour of being permitted to state to your readers that, in consequence of a deficit of £370 in our fund for social work we are being compelled to discontinue some of the ministries of our Mission. Some of the friends to whom our work is more fully known regard this as a most regrettable necessity, and amongst them is Mr. W. P. Hartley, who offers to give £100 if I can raise £270 by March 31. May I appeal to your readers for aid in my effort to claim this generous offer, and so clear off the debt?

NOTES AND COMMENTS

THE meetings held this week, in connection with the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, once more emphasized the iniquity of this traffic. The annual meeting on Monday evening, presided over by Sir Joseph W. Pease, Bart., was a very representative one. At the all-day meetings on Tuesday, which were commenced by a prayer hour, India, Ceylon, Singapore, and Burma each had its respective speaker, while the evening gathering was addressed by ministers and doctors (medical) from all the great missionary societies. These important gatherings should have considerable influence in guiding the mind of Christian people on the great question at issue.

In connection with this we would call attention to the full report given in the March issue of NATIONAL RIGHTEOUSNESS (1d. Morgan & Scott), of the important addresses delivered at the breakfast meeting, on January 12, by Revs. H. C. G. Moule, D.D., E. O. Williams, Arnold Foster, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and others. These timely and well-weighed utterances ought to be pondered by all who wish to know the truth as to the opium traffic, and its inevitable consequences. It is a matter on which too much light cannot be thrown.

Lent always brings a number of free, healthy criticisms on our crying national sins and follies. Some of the popular preachers do not spare their congregations, and the congregations do not seem to resent the rod. Prebendary Montagu Villiers has been pointing out to the people of Mayfair that "fashion" is a coercive thing in religion as well as in dress. "Men say, with conceit and folly rolled into one, 'I don't care for religion.'" And the ungodly fashion imposes itself upon others. Mr. Villiers named the case of a young lady who, at a dinner-party, looked up into the face of her neighbour and said "Do you believe in God? I don't." That pert remark might have been put to shame had another question been asked—"Why don't you?" We agree with Mr. Villiers when he says that the details of ritualism, like the shape of a bonnet, become a fashion, and are thought of more importance than eternal verities. It is also possible to be imposed upon by fashion in religion without being ritualists.

It is a great misfortune that a more determined and systematic effort is not made by the Churches to avail themselves of the opportunity of opposing efforts to extend temptations to drink afforded by the recurring licensing sessions. If we cannot have Local Option entirely, we should at least make good use of the means within our reach. Yet there is an urgent need for education on this point, and through mere supineness we are everywhere permitting the establishment of centres of an evil which we find it afterwards impossible to stem. Not only public-house licences, but grocers' and other "off" licences, need the closest vigilance, and opposition to them should form one of the invariable tasks of every temperance society. (See also p. 12, col. 1.)

An instance of the ignorance prevailing—if indifference, it springs from the same source—occurred last week in a "respectable" district of Hampstead, where a canvasser for a petition to be presented at the current sessions against a license applied for close by, though informed that everyone in the house was a "teetotaller," was told that they could have nothing to do with petitions of that sort! Surely there is room for improvement and agitation when such a thing as this can occur. All who wish to know how to proceed in this matter should communicate with the London Temperance Council, 33, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., which will advise how to act, and furnish legal representatives at the Sessions, a work which calls for hearty financial support.

The following passage from an article in the Spectator on "Wines for the Sedentary" is worthy of notice on the part of all "moderate" drinkers, who imagine that by drinking only "light wines" they are escaping the perils of indulgence in heavier beverages and in spirits. These wines never quite satisfy the palate; the temptation is to take still another glass of what seems so harmless, and a habit is set up which is nearly incurable, and which destroys the nerve and lowers the physical tone almost as badly as drinking spirits. This is most true of all the Sauternes, and least true of fine Rhine wine, though the taste for the latter, when indulged, is recognised by all German doctors as most dangerous. Its victim is apt not to know how much he takes.

This article is not written in the interests of total abstinence, but it would be hard to find a more valid reason for it than is contained in this warning.

The case against grocers' licences in Scotland for the sale of drink was powerfully stated by Sir John Leng, M.P., before the Royal Commission. The licensed grocers are assisted financially by the brewers and distillers. They obtain an extra profit, and can give long credit; they keep open long hours, and enable women to obtain drink under the name of groceries. He desired, by legislation, to separate the grocery trade from the liquor trade. And one would think that every self-respecting grocer would support his wish. As the law now stands, an old and respectable trade has been dragged down to supply the needs of persons who are unwilling to go to the public-house. Just as the latter has declined in respectability, the former has served the amour propre of tipplers. The windows of some grocers' shops are more like spirit-shop windows than anything else. The need for an Act of Parliament to make things as they used to be is most urgent.

Dr. Barnardo writes us that, having been urged by several local friends to offer himself as a Parliamentary candidate for the Stepney division of the Tower Hamlets, he is considering the question and is taking measures to ascertain the feeling of the constituency and the opinion of his friends before coming to a decision. In a letter which he addressed to these on Saturday, after referring to his work carried on in Stepney for thirty-two years, he says:—

As one result of my social and philanthropic work important legislation affecting the welfare of the children and of the poor has been effected, and it is not too much to say that the whole trend of public opinion in the same direction has been also favourably affected by my efforts on their behalf.

I have no partisan aims or ambitions to gratify in seeking to represent this constituency. I do most earnestly desire, however, to do my utmost to promote and safeguard such legislation as will make the lives of the people, and especially of the young, who hold the future in their keeping, purer, brighter, nobler, and happier. Such aims as these are too often overlooked amid the din and strife of the political arena.

It is clear from the notices which have appeared in the press that neither of the two great Parliamentary parties are willing to choose him as a candidate, and that if he does contest the division it will be as an Independent. Dr. Barnardo's friends will await with interest the decision at which he may arrive.

The prevalent religious indifference is a subject that may well exercise the spiritual mind. Having regard to remarks in our last issue, based on some observations in the Church Times, an esteemed correspondent asks whether the sacerdotal movement has not much to do with the condition of things which is at length causing alarm in High Church circles. He says in explanation:—

Thoughtful men with Protestant convictions, or even with only the persuasion that the services conducted by so-called priests are opposed to the Church of England, abstain from sanctioning such services by their presence, and will either frequent some Nonconformist place, or else go nowhere, and sink into indifference or scepticism.

But your readers may be well assured that a more cheering side to the picture can be shown. A reference to the Church Pastoral Aid Society's monthly paper will show that in churches where the good old Gospel is preached, and work done in accordance, services are well attended, and frequently filled by earnest listeners, devout worshippers, and willing helpers.

At the anniversary of the Manchester [Wesleyan] Mission, Dr. Maclaren declared that

It is as clear as the sun in the sky that the people will not come to our chapels. For good or for evil the religious communities of England have to look that fact in the face—that the non-church or chapel-going community will remain non-church or chapel-going till the Day of Judgment unless we do something to alter the condition of things.

The Manchester Mission and such-like agencies are the result of an honest facing of the fact indicated. If the people will not come to the preacher, clearly it is the duty of the preacher to go to the people. Of course, by "the people," only a section of the community is meant; in hundreds, if not thousands, of parishes and districts this section has been reached, by means of mission-halls, in a proportion fully corresponding to other grades and classes of the population. In courts and alleys there may be cases of "the church in the house"—realisations of God's ideal of worship equally with ornate buildings in which multitudes congregate for praise and prayer. It is beyond question that many a church touches "the people" simply by means of the mission-hall. In the degree that this is done, the problem of how to reach the masses is being solved.

In The Friend for February 25, Mr. William Tallack dwells upon the importance of reasonable organisation in Christian work. He says:

It has repeatedly been remarked that if Friends conducted their own businesses as they too often do their meetings they would become bankrupts generally. Our Saviour organised. So did the apostles. He ordained the twelve and then "other seventy also." They "ordained elders in every city," who were more or less set apart for the work. The sovereign command of the Holy Spirit, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul," indicated the characteristic principle of action of the early Church and of all prosperous Churches ever since.

On another point Mr. Tallack says a helpful word. While agreeing that Christ must be "manifest within," he also maintains the great importance of our being clear as to a testimony to the historic and risen Christ, and emphasizes the need of a theology like that of St. Paul, Wesley, Whitefield, and Spurgeon, with its sense of our absolute, indispensable need of a Saviour, and of our own abiding helplessness, apart from what He has for ever secured for us (outside of us), as also apart from what He must, to the end of our lives, daily be prayed unto, to do in us, by sending his Holy Spirit to help and sustain us.

It has hitherto been a written or unwritten law in the conduct of missions that ecclesiastical differences should have no place in the programme. As far as possible, even doctrinal differences have been ignored. It would seem that the zeal of the High Church party is about to overstep even that wise and reasonable barrier. A correspondent in a contemporary, in describing a "Church mission" held recently at Chatham, says that it was largely a preaching of mediæval Catholicism and an abuse of Free Churchmen.

Apostolical succession was treated as a fact beyond the range of question; Nonconformist ministers were declared impostors, their churches referred to as "clubs," or "little Dissenting places," to attend which was to be guilty of the sin of schism, a sin which required confession and priestly absolution; the elements of the Eucharist were not symbols, but Christ's actual body and blood.

Those who attended after the meetings in the Vestry on being questioned as to baptism, confirmation, etc., if they were Nonconformists, were solemnly told they were outside the true Church, and urged to return and be confirmed. These are lengths of which even reasonable High Churchmen might well be ashamed.

The Catholics continue to show extraordinary zeal for the "re-conversion" of England to Romanism. The Bishop of Clifton (Dr. Brownlow) has addressed a pastoral for Lent which has this subject for its burden. While acknowledging in words of studied moderation the "zeal and generosity, the courage and manly straightforwardness of our Protestant fellow-citizens," he shows the old uncompromising attitude on the question of the Popish claims, and says:—

We cannot forsake our faith and go to them, neither can we "meet them half-way," as they express it, and give up some portions of our religion in order to embrace them; and therefore they must come to us.

To secure this end, we are told that the Pope has followed up his appeals to the British nation to return to the true fold by establishing an arch-confraternity, whose duty it is to work and pray for it, the only obligation imposed on the members being, however, "to say daily one 'Hail Mary' for the object of the confraternity." It will be hard to say whether this attitude is more remarkable for its calm assumption of being alone in the right, or blind to the true inwardness of British Protestantism. It altogether ignores the fact that we build our repudiation of Romanism on our faith in God and the Bible.

Meanwhile Roman appeals for reunion with the Greek Church have received a significant reply in the canonisation of "St. Isidore and the seventy-two martyrs" put to death by Papal authority in 1472—100 years before Luther gave the impulse to Protestantism. The situation is a striking one. The Greek Church is older than the Roman as the repository of the "orthodox faith," and renounces the Pope and all his works; the Roman Church in its turn renounces the Anglican; and the High Anglican denies the validity of Nonconformist "orders" and churches. It is a comforting reflection to true believers that in spite of these successive repudiations, the "way of the Holiest" is open apart from all popes and priests to the simplest souls who seek salvation through Christ. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free."

Dr. Alexander Whyte in his introduction to his latest work on "Father John of the Greek Church" gives an interesting account of the evangelical elements intermingled with the corruptions of that Church, especially in the breviaries and devotional works. In the office-book called the "Princely Canon" the penitent is taken through the whole of Scripture, "putting him into the penitential position and into the spiritual case of all the successive sinners whose sins are discovered, confessed and forgiven in the Word of God," and at the name of each fallen forerunner he stops and says "I am the man!" Dr. Whyte says that if only Mary be taken out of these office-books, and other Greek intrusions, and if they were but edited up to our Protestant and evangelical truth and taste, "they might become a cherished possession for all our household and personal needs also." Thus amid all the accumulated errors of ages there are embers of sacred fire of faith burning, and the cross shines through the darkness with its healing beams.

There is another lesson which many Protestant teachers may learn from this most unprogressive of Churches. We are told that the reading of the Scriptures occupies so large and important a place in the liturgy of the Greek Church that every member who attends the services regularly is sure to hear the words of the Scriptures read to him in a short space of time. It is a hopeful sign for Russia that even the Holy Synod, according to Dr. Whyte, has now placed the whole of the Bible within reach of the poorest purse. "For sixpence a well printed and well bound copy of the New Testament may be purchased anywhere in Russia." The Bible Society has furthered this movement by their system of agents and colporteurs throughout the Empire, these colporteurs being general favourites and universally respected. Wherever the Bible freely penetrates there is hope of reform and toleration and religious progress, and Russia will in the end prove no exception to the universal rule.

The Zola trial, after dragging on its wearisome course for 15 days, ended as all who knew the temper of the French people felt it must end. So far as M. Zola's immediate purpose was concerned he failed. But a great object-lesson has been given of the lengths of fanatical injustice to which a sensible but emotional nation will go when once it is in the hands of an unprincipled militarism. If calm reflection on the affair brings France to her sober mind and rouses her to a sense of the corruption that is eating into her whole public life, the "martyrdom" of this public-spirited man will not be in vain. Whether Dreyfus be guilty or not, the leaders of public opinion across the Channel have been proved to be hopelessly wrong in the eyes of Europe. At present the forces of injustice are triumphant, but a great and healthy awakening is sure to come.

The close of the trial is said to have caused quietness in Paris; but for how long? The feeling against the Jews is as hot as ever, and may burst forth on any occasion. The things which excited Zola's anger also remain unchanged. The only difference is that the man who disinterestedly attempted to get what he and the rest of Europe believe to be justice, a fair trial for an accused man, is himself punished for his endeavour. He seems now to care nothing for himself, but he confesses that he is cut to the heart by the condition of a country in which such a verdict as was passed upon himself was possible. The largest question, he thinks, is what is to become of such a country now blinded and its ears stopped.

It looks as if we are to have a recrudescence of Mohammedan fanaticism and Turkish brutality. Macedonia has already suffered by the imprisonment of hundreds of its people, by the death and torture of many, and by outrage committed on women and children. It is said that we may expect an insurrection in the spring. Is, then, the Concert of Europe going to show the world more of its impotence, or will it take timely steps to prevent further crime? It has plenty of resources, if only it can subdue jealousy and combine in the interests of humanity.

The Christian subjects of the Sultan seem to be in as hopeless a case as ever. In spite of all his promises to the Powers he is proving himself absolutely incorrigible. A fresh Blue-book on our diplomatic relations with Turkey shows an endless series of evasions of the most solemn pledges, and a repetition of the most terrible cruelties against law-abiding and inoffensive subjects whose only crime is faith in Christ. "The amnesty granted [at Van and elsewhere] turns out to be not so much a concession to the Christian as a means of 'white-washing' everyone mixed up in the ghastly events" of the massacre of 1896. The details of the persecutions still going on are unspeakably painful. Sir Philip Currie closes a stern indictment with these words:—

The massacres have greatly increased the contempt with which the race of the victims is regarded by the ruling class of Moslems, and whatever might have been the effect of the reforms in quieter times, it is becoming evident that no scheme, however carefully devised, will now suffice to confer equal rights upon the Armenian population under the existing system of administration. Only a strong European control on the spot could bring about such a result.

Just now a European control of any kind seems a forlorn hope. This is the worst feature of a shameful situation.

All lovers of true progress and enlightenment, as well as all believers in missionary enterprise, must rejoice in the result of the loan negotiations that have resulted in the prospect of further opening China to Western civilisation. With trade and commerce, the way for Christian influences will expand steadily in that great country. Already much has been done to break down the barriers of prejudice against foreigners in China, and a widespread interest and curiosity is being shown in the Bible, from the Court downwards. A matchless opportunity is being thrown down as a challenge to the Christian Churches of the West. It is of vital importance that it should be accepted and utilised before the darker side of so-called Christian civilisation has once more raised a barrier against the power of the Cross.

The Congregationalist (Boston, U.S.A.) believes that if men had as many dollars invested in the stock of a railway as they have put into missions they would know all about its location and prospects, and seize upon every bit of news that could affect its interests. To us it is the other way about. If men had as many dollars invested in missions as they have put into railways and other things, they would know, &c. The men who give largely, according to their means, do know: it is the men who give a regulation pound or a few shillings, when they ought to give pounds, who are ignorant of how their money is used in missionary work.

One of the difficulties of reform in the treatment of employés in places of business, is the fact that tradesmen anxious to introduce reforms complain that unprincipled competitors make it impossible. To obviate this hindrance, the Christian Social Union executive recently published a little pamphlet advocating the principle of "preferential dealing," which means "the practice of purchasing goods only from tradesmen who observe the standard regulations for each trade," but as these vary, they are taken to mean "the best that can be secured at a given time in a particular locality."

We must be slow to admit the principle of boycotting; but certainly some pressure should be brought to bear on such tradesmen as stand out against humane regulations in the treatment of those who work for them. Some men are so selfish that not until their interests are affected will they fall into line with right.

The Testimony of Jesus

Concerning Himself.

By Rev. DR. JAMES CULROSS.

I. CHRIST THE SAVIOUR (Luke xix. 10).

IN these words Jesus claims to be the world's Saviour. He was so named of the angel before his birth. And when He was announced to the shepherds at Bethlehem it was in these terms: Unto you is born a Saviour.

It is one of the painful things to which no Christian man can shut his eyes, that so many immortal beings around us are living only for the present world. The things that they believe in and seek after are things that they can see and touch. Invisible realities are round about them unperceived. God is not in all their thoughts, except when they cannot help it, and then He seems an intruder. At the best they treat Him with a kind of reverent neglect.

And yet a dull, uneasy feeling haunts them of something wrong in their condition—they scarcely know what. They do not like to speak about this feeling. A stranger might never suspect its existence. They themselves sometimes forget it in the hurry of business, the excitement of pleasure, the delights of social intercourse; but it comes back upon them at the most unexpected moments—in the very midst of their gaiety, or when they wake suddenly at midnight and the darkness is full of God.

What does this haunting uneasiness mean? It is the Saviour saying, "Awake, thou that sleepest, awake from the stupor of carnal security." You are dowered with the awful capacity of saying Yes or No to the living God. You have said No to Him. Your life has been a prolonged No. You have refused Him your love and homage. You have set up your will against the Holy and Blessed will. In this way you have broken the first law of your being. Here is the deepest thing wrong with you—the very root of evil living and misery.

When Jesus began to preach in Galilee his first word was "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." It is the word He speaks by his Spirit to-day. However superficially our modern evangelism may deal with it, it is one of the profoundest words in human speech. It marks no mere temporary pain in the feelings, such as many reduce it to. It marks no mere resolution formed in the glow and flush of excited feeling to live another life. In its deep Bible sense repentance is the heart's sincere acknowledgment of having been sinfully in the wrong, and the heart's turning trustfully from all "refuges of lies" to the God of grace for pardon and renewing. It is the man taking God's side against his own sin. It is the man humbling himself before God on that kneeling-place which mercy has provided. It is the prodigal "coming to himself," and saying to God, "Father, I have sinned." Without repentance no life can be right, but will go on from bad to worse. Without repentance heaven itself would be no heaven, but only a place of banishment, cut off from every joy that the heart values. Do not shrink, then, when the Lord carries his candle into the secret places of the heart, and shows you what you are in the light of eternal purity. If there is pain in this—bitter pain and shame and humiliation—there is also love in it and hope. It shows that He has not given you up in despair, nor pronounced the awful words, "Let him alone."

But this is not the end. He did not mean to leave you law-condemned, self-condemned, rattling those chains which you cannot break. He also deals with you that you may repent—brings with Him the gift of a free pardon. You look back over your past life. There may have been no shameful hour in it over which you sob: "Let darkness and the shadow of death stain it!" It may have seemed blameless, even virtuous, in the eyes of men as well as in your own eyes. But now in the light of eternal purity how black and stained it appears! And there are black spots in it which all the water in the ocean could not wash out. As you look, sin after sin rises from the grave of forgetfulness in which you had buried it, and confronts you, and your cheeks grow hot and crimson with secret shame, and a voice cries out, or whispers awfully within your breast, awaking a dull agony: "It is done; I did it; and I cannot recall it." That is the misery of it—"I cannot undo it."

And God answers, Even so: it is done and cannot be recalled. No pungency of sorrow for it; no tears even of blood can wash it out: but it may be forgiven, at once, frankly, freely, righteously, eternally. Not by works of righteousness that we have done, but by the ever-availing deed of Him whose blood was shed for the remission of sins there is pardon for the very chief of sinners. This is how God puts sin out of the way and extinguishes it: He forgives it, blots it out, undertakes to deal with its consequences, and sheds abroad the blessed assurance of pardon in the heart; and so we learn to say, Abba, Father, and to live in the joy of his love.

In crying for pardon, something deeper is sought than merely release from punishment. The heart remembers the mischief that has been wrought, and craves that God would undo and counteract the mischief and hurt we have done, and make it as if it had never been. This craving is deeper still than the craving that we may be saved from the punishment we have merited.

(To be continued.)

Our Child-Drunkards.

III.—THE REMEDY.

WHAT can be, and what has been done? In some cases the magistrates, Watch Committees, and County Standing Joint Committees have been appealed to most successfully.

The Liverpool City Justices in September, 1896, passed the following resolution:—

That the Watch Committee be requested to instruct the head constable to report to the justices at the general annual licensing meeting, 1897, any case in which, after written warning, a licensee persists in serving children apparently under thirteen years of age with liquor for consumption off the premises, or in offering such children sweets, toys, or other gifts, as inducements to visit the licensed premises.

The result of this action has been that the practice has ceased to a very large extent, the licence-holders giving instructions that children should not be served, and many of them placing the following printed notice in their windows:—

Children under thirteen years of age are not served here.

The White Ribbon for January gives a portrait of these windows, and from the size of the placard and print it is evident that the licensee intended the order to be observed. Although a deputation of brewers, etc., laid their side of the case before the city justices, the latter saw no reason to modify their former resolution. Space would fail us to catalogue all the resolutions that have sprung from this good seed. Suffice it to say that Bootle, Birkenhead, Cheshire, Birmingham, and many other authorities have passed similar vetoes with a similar happy effect. Of course, the old cry has been raised that it is "interfering with the liberty of the individual"; but it has long been recognised that parents cannot maltreat or starve their children, that masters cannot in certain directions oppress their servants with impunity. In fact, the basis of all legislation is to prevent one man from using his liberty for the hurt or ruin of another.

AS TO FUTURE ACTION,

we would suggest more strenuous endeavour in Band of Hope work. It is a difficult matter to uproot the disease of drunkenness from the character of one who has been its victim for years. Nothing, we know, is impossible for God—but it is our obvious duty to save the child from the virulent devastation of so relentless a vice.

The nation must be informed on the subject. It is not public opinion that needs educating, for among all right-thinking people there can be but one opinion on this question once they are informed.

LET THE FACTS BE KNOWN, and a public opinion will find voice which will soon impel reluctant magistrates to place stern restriction on those to whom they grant "off" as well as full licences.

Definite teaching should also occasionally be given in the Sunday and Board schools on the nature and evil effects of alcohol. The first steps along the road of wrong are as a rule taken in ignorance. Special instruction with regard to one evil may be looked upon by some as the policy of a fanatic, but in our country the liquor traffic has assumed such gigantic proportions that we need drastic measures to put down so mighty a foe.

The followers of Christ should rise in their strength. We used to sing in our Sabbath schools,

> They are waiting for our coming,
> Angels on the other shore, which is true enough. But there are angels on this shore who are waiting with tear-filled eyes, peering through the bars of their prison-house for the coming of deliverers. Let us remember the words of our Master, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish"; and its converse, "It is the will of your Father which is in heaven that every one of these little ones should be saved."

Now that temperance legislation on a large scale seems to be blocked, for the time being, it will be wise for those who desire reform to turn their direction to some phase of the movement which is feasible and undebatable. Such is certainly this question of serving children even as messengers with drink. But it is needless to wait for legislation. Much can be done by petitions and memorials to influence licensing magistrates, urging them to bring pressure upon the local publicans to discontinue the practice.

It is one of the most encouraging temperance movements of the present day—especially as, so far, not a single body of working-men has appealed against the restriction, but, on the contrary, in certain Yorkshire towns ninety per cent. of the genuine working men of the place have petitioned for similar restrictions to be introduced into their towns!—that is, they have asked that children under thirteen should no longer be allowed to be served with drink, even as messengers. Were this restriction enforced by law and made universal, England would still lag far behind nearly every other country in her protection of the young.

All success to the splendid movement that has been so warmly taken up—though it is mainly, so far, in the North of England—with the object of closing public-houses to children, even as messengers. If this movement proves such a blessing to a large town like Liverpool, surely it would have the same effect elsewhere. The school attendance there has improved, the streets at night are no longer thronged with poor, frightened, shivering dots hastening to the public-houses; and home drunkenness has necessarily lessened, because previously a man or woman, even when too drunk to be supplied themselves, could always send their children for more drink.

Let ministers have petitions in their churches, and let householders be waited upon for signatures, and every legitimate effort be put forth, by the spread of literature and public meetings, to stop the wheels of the awful machinery for this "massacre of the innocents."

Let us no longer lie supinely under the sting of King Khama's rebuke:—

"You English take great care of your goods, but you throw away your people."

Copies of this and the two preceding articles on this subject, with additions and illustrations, may be had in pamphlet form, price 6d. per dozen; 3s. per 100; 25s. per 1000. Will friends also aid us in supplying copies for gratuitous distribution by contributing to our fund for this purpose?

Open-Air Preachers.—On Monday week the open-air preachers of South London gathered at Surrey Chapel to the annual meeting of the South London Auxiliary, Mr. F. W. Lawrence presiding. The report showed that during the summer of 1897 open-air meetings had been held in nearly all the southern suburbs, also conferences and lectures at various places of worship during the winter. The membership numbered 162. Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, in a stirring address, said that politicians had just discovered the value of open-air meetings as a means of reaching the people. Captain Orde Browne contrasted the liberty enjoyed in England with the want of it in several continental states, and gave an account of outdoor preaching in Ireland.

Your Own Salvation.

By Rev. JOHN McNEILL.

Work out your own salvation.—Phil. ii. 12.

I AM not dealing now with the original Greek. I think it was Mr. Moody who wished that people would pay more attention to the original English! But let us take the phrase as it stands, "Your own salvation." Salvation needs to be your own first before you can work it out. A dead man cannot work. Taking the passage in the sense of the analogy of faith, and what a wonderful word it is! The Bible is a book that does not call anything our own except our sin. "Ye shall eat the fruit of your own ways; ye shall be filled with your own doings." My sin, in all its power to blight and condemn me for ever, is my own; and it is all I have that is really mine. Of every other kind of possession the Bible strikes me naked and bare.

Carry that thought round a little, just to enhance this great Gospel idea, "Your own salvation." There are many things we call our own, but they are not our own in any real sense of possession. For example, a man says, "My own property." A man will take you out and show you his property—a fine block of buildings, say. "That is my own; there are the title deeds; it is all mine." Is it so? Is it his own with a real grip of inalienable possession? Shut your Bible, and the newspaper will convince you that it is not. Overnight this property takes fire, and it was not insured: and next morning the owner is pottering among the ashes with a stick. "His property" went up in a fiery chariot, and came down in a shower of soot!

A man says, "My wealth," "my fortune," or as it is expressed, vulgarly but graphically, "my pile." He scraped it together, clean and dirty. What happens very often? You know. A bank breaks, or there is a slump in Kaffirs, and this man who talks about "my wealth, my fortune," is a bankrupt and worse.

RICHES TAKE TO THEMSELVES WINGS and flee away; and they do not leave their address either, or you would flee after them. There is a man down there, and if he only knew to-night where the money has gone that he used to call his own, neither I nor a better preacher could keep him here another ten minutes; he would be off. But after all, my friend, a man's life consisteth not in the things that he possesseth. They do not count.

I will come closer. There are other possessions. There are health and strength, for example. If you wake up in the morning fit and well in body and brain, you do not need to take off your hat to anybody. What an endowment health and strength are! And yet you cannot call it your own. Just when you need it most it fails you, and you are crushed and helpless. There is a woman; she is a widow, with a young, hungry family, and it is amazing how the widow gets through; I think there must be somebody at her back. She rose and looked at her day's work. It was not a big day's work, and she has a loving heart, and ordinarily she is stout of arm. But to-day, in the middle of her work, she had to lie down, dead beat. You cannot command health, or call it your own. It is a great possession, but we have no certain grip of it.

There are other possessions, too—for example, friends. You can do without wealth if you have real friends. As Shakespeare says, if you have a true friend "Grapple him to thy soul with hoops of steel." But too often, when they are most necessary, they fail us.

Friend after friend departs.
Who hath not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That finds not here an end.

Come closer still. There is "my wife." Surely she is mine; my own. I won her, and I will wear her. Is not that a possession you may call your own, with a real absolute grip? You know it is not. "My wife," says a man; and his eyes sparkle and his bosom heaves in manhood's pride. But next week, like some of us, he walks a broken-hearted man behind her coffin. How does that happen if you can call her your own with any real grip of possession?

I have said all that to enhance this word, "Your own salvation." Blessed be God, the very thing to which I have no right or title, which I could never buy or earn, is the only thing that is absolutely mine: to have, to hold, and to enjoy with a grip that death shall only intensify. I will never know the full sweetness of "my own salvation" till death shall come and usher me into its deepest, sweetest, eternal, perfect possession.

You know how it is your own—because it is a gift to you. "The wages of sin is death." We work for them and the devil wants to pay the wages. But blessed be God there is a break in the terrible "entail." "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." It is a gift from a Hand with the hole of a nail through it. If you have not humbled yourself from your pride, or come up from your despair and accepted eternal life as a free gift, you are not saved yet, and it is time you knew it. God help you to begin at the beginning. Then, having accepted Christ as God's free gift to you, as your Saviour, go on, as the apostle says, to work out this salvation.

IT IS A FAR BIGGER THING

than you thought it was. You work it out, because God is working in; and you deserve no credit for that. There never was a text that more immediately traces salvation up to God and more utterly stops the mouth of all self-righteous boasting.

Thank God this salvation will work out. Christ is a deep mine: work Him out. Some of you have a very little Christ; but it is not the true Christ. Many false Christs have gone abroad into the world. Get rid of them and get the real Christ. The day never dawns and the night never darkens when Jesus, his blood, his Spirit, his Word, prayer, the promises may not be more to me than they were the day before; Jesus is no end of a Saviour; no end of a lift; no end of a friend. The Bible is no end of a book for help and guidance; it is inexhaustible. If you, poor backslider, have gone back, come forward again. You have not exhausted the unsearchable riches of Christ; they would not be unsearchable if you could. "Age cannot wither nor custom stale his infinite variety." You need Him, just where you are broken down, to build you up. Trust in Him, not in yourselves, your good resolutions, your wisdom, your cleverness. God never asks mortal man to do more than to trust in Him. "I am thy God, fear not; I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." God helps us to be ashamed of our unbelief.

The Glasgow Half-yearly Meetings for believers will be held on Monday and Tuesday, April 11 and 12. From the exhortation, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," it is reasonable to conclude that the Lord intends to give blessing when assembled, whether it be in weekly gatherings or occasional and larger gatherings. The need for godly exhortation increases as the end draws near, and such meetings afford the opportunity. Prayer is asked on behalf of these meetings. Communications to be addressed to Mr. W. C. Johnston, 175, St. Vincent-street.

Old Gravel Pit Mission, Hackney.—The old and historic building (dating back to 1716), which has for some time been closed, will be reopened as a mission centre on Sunday next, March 6. The mission work, with which is incorporated the "Charles Button Adult Bible-class"—carried on for the past eight years at the Homerton Evangelical Hall, will be transferred to the Old Gravel Pit premises, which afford increased accommodation necessary to meet the present requirements of the work. Opening services will be held on Sunday at 11 a.m., 2.45, 7 p.m., and a public meeting on Monday at 7.45 p.m.

Rightly Dividing.

THE above principle has a wider application than we may usually have accorded to it, but its primary reference to the method in which we should approach the study of Holy Scripture is all-important, and, we are compelled to affirm, much neglected. It is in the Church who seek the commendation not of men but of God. "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth" (2 Tim. ii. 15) The Apostle Peter recognised (1 Pet. i. 10-12) the significance of such dividing, and the privilege we enjoy in this age of being in a position to do it rightly, when he penned the following words, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost; he looked back upon the ancient prophets of Israel, "searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of God which was in them did signify when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed that, not unto themselves but unto us they did minister the things which are now reported unto you, by them that have preached the Gospel unto you, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which things the angels desire to look into."

AN APPEAL TO PASTORS AND TEACHERS

Our Blessed Lord on a well-known occasion in the synagogue at Nazareth (Luke iv. 18), appropriating to Himself the prophecy (Isa. lxi. 1, 2) concerning his coming with the anointing of Jehovah to proclaim glad tidings of salvation, gave the impress of his authority to the principle we are urging, by stopping short in the middle of the sentence, omitting the prophecy of a future "day of vengeance," which, of course, belongs to the series of events which cluster round his second coming. The Old Testament prophecies are incomprehensible unless we recognise the dispensation which includes "the sufferings of Christ" as being far separated and easily distinguishable from the age which will witness "the glory that should follow"; and believers must surely discern that the Church is at present in fellowship with her rejected Saviour and Lord, but is by-and-by to share his glory. "If we suffer we shall also reign with Him" (2 Tim. ii. 12).

The Jews, fixing their forward gaze upon the promised Messiah and Deliverer, recoiled from the thought of one who must suffer indignity, utter humiliation and cruel death; and, when He appeared, they would have none of Him. The Church to-day, to a very large extent, turning its backward gaze upon the Man of Sorrows and his finished atoning work, seems reluctant to hail our returning Lord, or to cry unceasingly, "Come! Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

And, further. The misappropriation by God's heavenly people, the Church, of the promises made to God's earthly people, Israel, is an unfailing source of confusion in the teachings of men who will not regard the distinctions which are clearly laid down between promises of earthly and temporal blessing to the Jews, who walk by sight, and of heavenly and eternal blessing to believers in this age, who "walk by faith." And thus great and precious promises which are to have a literal and complete fulfilment are dissipated into thin air*—"volatilized," someone has suggested as correctly describing the process—though the claim has long been made that "spiritualised" is the correct expression; as if there could be anything spiritual in wresting the Scriptures and putting an imaginary construction upon the plain truth of God.

II. Leaving the lofty region of inquiry into the true meaning of the revelations of God's will and purposes in Holy Scripture, we do not think it out of place, or any degradation of the great principle of "rightly dividing," if we claim it as authoritative

IN THE SOCIAL SPHERE.

We cannot, as followers of Christ, ignore the difficulties which overtake the vast majority of the human race with regard to their temporal welfare; and, whilst steering clear of earthly politics, we need not shun to declare the necessity and the wisdom of "rightly (or righteously) dividing" the abundance of this world's good things.

One of the most alarming symptoms of these modern days is manifest in the increasing divergence between labour and capital, and the root of the trouble may be discovered in the refusal to divide rightly.

True, we have seen in our own generation marked improvement in the condition of the sons of labour; but is there not room for further concessions to the toilers who form the backbone of our nation, and thus avert heart-burnings and discontent, which, if allowed to survive, may find us disunited and weak in some hour of national crisis—an hour which may not be far distant, for we see clouds even now hanging upon the horizon, which may be the precursors of storm and tempest difficult to withstand?

CHRISTIAN GIVING.

III. For believers there is one more aspect of "rightly dividing" which claims consideration, and claims it urgently—the right division of the rental, the income, the salary, the wages, whatever it may be called, which comes to us in the good providence of God, and with which we have the responsibility and the privilege of dealing. How much of this am I entitled to spend upon personal and family needs? how much belongs to my poor brethren? how much shall I bestow upon the furtherance of God's cause in the earth?

Circumstances are so diverse that no general rules will apply—no tithing would be suitable, no exhortations to Christian giving coming from without would be admissible; for it is "from within out of the heart" that the decision to give or to withhold must come; it is in this, as in many other spheres of action, that we must "judge ourselves"; but a sensitive conscience will readily decide between self-pleasing and self-denial, between what the world demands and what our Lord requires. The Apostle did not lay stress upon the gifts of the Corinthian believers until they "first gave their ownselves to the Lord" (2 Cor. viii. 5). When that question is settled, all other questions fall into their right places.

It is because there are in the visible Church so many people who are Christ's by mere profession, not his in real possession, that there arises the need of outcry about empty missionary treasuries and indifference to the claims of the heathen and Mohammedan worlds, to say nothing of work lying undone at our own doors in City slums and neglected country places; work amongst the submerged masses whom drink and other temptations have brought low; work amongst the chosen race, the Jews, brought to our own shores, but whom we fail to evangelise; work in our own homes amongst our children and servants; work much of which can be accomplished with little outlay of money, but never without the fire of Divine love inbreathed by the Holy Ghost.

One source of supply for the maintenance and spread of works of philanthropy and charity, and, in measure, for the spread of the Gospel, is largely dried up in this country owing to the prevalent "fetish" in connection with the ownership of land. Property of this kind, like the sacred beasts of the Egyptians, must not be meddled with. But, even in this, "where there's a will there's a way." Splendid gifts are sometimes offered for beneficent and missionary purposes, but almost invariably by men who have made their money in commerce or some manufacturing industry. A few years ago the Church Missionary Society published a statement to prove how little their missions were aided by the nobility. When the Lord comes "to reckon with his servants" about their stewardship, many excuses which now seem to prevail will be swept away.

For what purpose has "the grace of God that bringeth salvation appeared unto men"? Is it not that, "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 11-13). The humble, diligent, and intelligent study of God's Word, in view of the speedy coming of our Lord, will teach us to live soberly in our personal and family life; righteously as regards our dealings with our fellowmen; godly as we take as large a share as we can in the extension of the kingdom of our Lord and Master. Let us seek and we shall find his guidance in rightly dividing his Word, in righteously dividing all we may gather, in rightly dividing all we have to spend.

Mr. Meyer in America.

AGAIN I would ask the readers of The Christian to join with me in praise and thanksgiving for God's marvellous goodness to me. Since last I wrote, I have visited three more of these mighty cities—Washington, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, and in each case have had the same wonderful response.

At Washington the spacious church was crowded long before the hour of meeting, and many representative men attended the services. The ministers' meeting was a very memorable one, and in addition to all else I opened the session of the Senate with prayer on the day of the great Cuba debate, at the request of the blind chaplain, Dr. Milburn; and was honoured by an interview with Mr. McKinley, the President, who views the reciprocal influence of the Christian Church on either side of the Atlantic as a mighty and enduring bond of amity between the two countries.

At Baltimore we had glorious times. The noble Methodist church, which the late Rev. Dr. Morley Punshon declared to be the finest in the world, was the scene of never-to-be-forgotten gatherings, especially on Sunday afternoon, when it was calculated that 2500 people must have been present, whilst I spoke of the Anointing of the Spirit. Ten meetings were held there.

Then Philadelphia seemed the climax of all. The beloved Dr. Wilbur Chapman arranged the meetings. About 600 clergymen and ministers on the morning of arrival; meetings in the great Y.M.C.A. auditorium and in Bethany church; association with Mr. Baer, Mr. Wanamaker, Dr. Weston, and many others. One's heart is bowed to the ground with thankfulness. And perhaps the most radiant feature of the whole is the testimony to lives and ministries which have been entirely altered by the meetings of last year. It almost brings tears to my eyes as I write.

One colporteur told me that he had left one of my books at the home of a family residing on the Rocky Mountains. They were not very keen on receiving it, but when he returned that way six months afterwards, he was saluted by the husband saying, "Sally (that was his wife) has read that book you left, and she has lost her red head" (referring to her violent temper).

Brooklyn, Rochester, and Cleveland are still in prospect; and then Saturday, February 26, with its joyful embarkation for home and church. May I still ask your prayers that I may return in the fulness of God's blessing.

Home Missions.

Southwark Home Mission.

MR. FEGAN'S BID FOR "THE HOOLIGANS."

"EVERY man," so runs the proverb, "does well to keep his own doorstep clean." Somewhat in this fashion Mr. Fegan has long felt that while living in poverty-haunted Southwark his attention has been naturally concentrated on his own large household of rescued boys, and he has done but little for "the hooligans," or corner boys, who infest the locality, and, according to the police reports, make night hideous for the unlucky wayfarers. As our readers know, from intimations in our own pages, he is now inaugurating a new departure in the form of a mission-hall, designed as the centre of vigorous work, on behalf of these "male and female hooligans" on the Surrey side of the river.

Buildings, long used as parochial schools, had been vacated—new schools having been erected—and with the concurrence of his council Mr. Fegan secured the lease just in time. After considerable repairs and needful alterations, the hall was opened last Friday as the Southwark Home Mission. On the ground floor are several class-rooms, and a comfortable mission hall. On the upper floor is a large room and gymnasium intended for the rough lads, who it is hoped will be induced to attend—attracted at first, probably, by the recreation and physical exercise provided. The aim, of course, is their conversion; but and have to be got hold of, ere they can be effectually helped to some perception of higher things. Much prayer, that many of these may be won to Christ, was made at the inaugural gatherings on Friday.

Mr. T. B. Miller, who presided at the afternoon meeting, very cordially reviewed the proposed "plan of campaign," and commended the endeavour to the sympathies and prayers of the Lord's people. He made a striking point of the analysis recently published in the United States, showing how the descendants of four neglected waif girls have in seventy-five years produced twelve hundred descendants, largely criminals, who have cost the State of New York one and a-quarter million of dollars, besides the private loss inflicted on people who have suffered by their predatory practices. Every effort for the rescue of the street youth and wastrels is, therefore, a matter of public concern.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan bade the assembled friends a cordial welcome, and proceeded to show that according to Mr. Charles Booth's "Life and Labour of the People" the parish of St. George's, Southwark, is "the most distressful" district in London—being the poorest, the most overcrowded, and the most unhealthy. In this needy place God had led the way for the opening of a new mission centre. After reciting how the buildings had been secured, at a rental of £240 per annum, Mr. Fegan described the work it was hoped to do among rough boys and girls. While a firm believer in the old Gospel, he felt that methods of presentation might be modified, and among the class contemplated very special methods were needed to gain a hearing at all. As to finance, he rejoiced to say that the initial outlay for expenses, etc.—£680—has been fully met, while £140 has been received towards the anticipated annual expenditure of £800.

After a season of prayer, in which Messrs. W. Nobbs, W. R. Lane, W. Grove, and D. Rea took part, sympathetic and hearty addresses were given by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, Rev. J. G. Train, Mr. John Churchill, Pastor Frank H. White, and Dr. Henry Soltau.

In the evening another meeting was held, when Mr. Henry Wood, J.P., chairman of the Ragged School Union, presided, in the unavoidable absence of Dr. Anderson. The speakers were Messrs. T. B. Miller, David Rea, and George Soltau. Special emphasis was laid on the urgent need for the establishment of a medical mission, and the importance of such an auxiliary in winning a hearing for the Gospel amongst the poor and wholly indifferent. This burden seemed to be laid on all hearts during the season of prayer, and towards the £300 required one offer of £50, two of £10, one of £8, and one of £5 were announced during the evening. In all, the contributions made in the room, during the afternoon and evening, amounted to about £375.

The "Bridge of Hope."

I AM quite sure we should want for nothing if, by pen or voice, I could tell the stories of my children. But this I cannot often do, and for months we have had scarcely enough for the daily needs. As I write we have simply nothing. We know that God is able to supply all wants, but He does it through his children, to whom we now appeal. I can only draw one or two pictures, but they will serve my purpose.

W. J., nine years of age, with her little sister of four, brought out of slum life, away from a mother so degraded by drink that all the sacredness of motherhood is forgotten. The father is dead, and the home is gone, an aged grandmother being the only frail protectress of the little ones, to whom even our night shelter seemed a glorious play-room and plain food the greatest delicacy.

Then there was G. M., an older girl, dragged the round of public-houses whilst anything could be got to drink, and then to the door of every shelter for a lodging. At length mother and child were somehow parted, and in her loneliness a good policeman sent G. to us. Every possible effort was made to find someone belonging to her, but without success. Soon after she came to us our young people were to have a little excursion, and G. looked forward to it with childish delight. Alas! on the longed-for day it rained, and there could be no outing. G. was found crying most bitterly, and, being questioned, she said, "I've never had a treat in all my life, and I'm so disappointed!" Quite recently she was not well, and we sent her to the infirmary, hoping that she would soon be back again. But the Good Shepherd had something better in store for the desolate girl into whose life had ever come. Out of the parish infirmary ward she passed into the city where God shall wipe away all tears.

Yet another child, with a story equally but somewhat differently sad. She was literally hated by both her parents, and made to suffer accordingly. They brought her to us, giving her a terrible character, and expressing a virtuous desire to save from ruin a child of such evil tendencies! I had grave suspicions, which were confirmed by subsequent inquiries. It was, in brief, the timely interference of an officer of the N.S.P.C.C. that had frightened them into bringing the child to us. Up to that time their persistent and unnatural cruelty had made her life a constant torment. From the first her conduct proved how false were all their charges, and the poor, stunted, bruised little frame soon grew strong under kind treatment. After being some years with us we sent her far away into the country to a sweet Christian home, where she is earning golden opinions.

I carefully avoid the least exaggeration, or any attempt to garnish these pitiful tales into sensational ones, but surely there is underlying the barest facts for those who can read between the lines. Each little face utters a strong plea of its own.

Three little maidens, ranging from four to eight years of age, now in the Homes sweetly and naturally happy, were all in their infancy nursed in our arms, with little hope of saving life, but only of alleviating their suffering. Oh! what horrors of starvation and neglect each tiny form revealed! What a terrible caricature on babyhood! But nights and days of careful nursing were their own reward, and now they are all bonny bairns. Two of the mothers have been in constant service all these years, and have proved their gratitude. The third child, now a charming, winsome little lassie, has no relatives; she is, however, lovingly provided for by children little older than herself, but born in very different circumstances.

And yet how many others are waiting for someone to save them—others just as needy, just as desolate, just as helpless and suffering. But we must turn even such away unless generous help soon comes. And surely it will, for "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not unto Me."

Beside all that is done for the children in these seven Cottage Homes at Chingford, the night shelter and the refuge here are constantly full; and although of a totally different character, the work is not less needed, nor is it less interesting.

A "Ragged Church."

BEHIND the fine shop fronts in Oxford-street, W., hard by Grosvenor-square, and right at the door of Belgravian mansions, lies a nest of squalor and poverty, extending from Marylebone-lane to Duke-street. In the heart of this district an earnest and most fruitful work has been carried on since 1835 by voluntary workers. The Sunday morning service for casuals, or "Ragged Church," the model lodging-house, and the flourishing ragged school have become widely known as leading the way in some difficult departments of service.

Few, probably, are aware of the many and varied forms of effort among poor adults and children associated with the Gray's-yard centre, hence it may be noted that these include Gospel services every Sunday, attended by from 600 to 800 of the very poorest class; free meals, 30,000 having been given during last year after the Sunday services; a self-supporting 4d. lodging-house with 64 beds, which are always full; a soup-kitchen open every day except Sunday; a relief committee for the investigation and relief of deserving cases; Sunday-schools and Bible-classes for the poor children of the neighbourhood, about 300 being on the books; a girls' club, with 80 members; a Band of Hope, with 50 members; a gymnasium and musical drill class; a boys' club and company of the Boys' Brigade; a mothers' meeting, with 140 members; also clothing, coal, sick and boot clubs. The Park Mission branch of the Y.W.C.A. and a district City missionary also find their working base in these buildings. These numerous agencies and operations form an important evangelistic citadel in an area of need and neglect.

God has greatly blessed this work, not only among the children and resident poor, but also and specially among the tramps, beggars, and broken-down men who frequent the Sunday morning service. Many of these have been literally and with fresh heart of hope helped to an honest living, and taught where alone strength is to be found in dire temptation. The following letter to the secretary, dated February 1, speaks volumes, considering the class it comes from:—

"Sir,—On Sunday last you put a question to me when leaving the chapel at Gray's-yard, and as I may not have the opportunity of attending there again, I would like to reply to it, and ease my mind at the same time. I should have liked to do so at the time, but didn't, as I feared you might imagine I spoke from interested motives.

"Well, I have been knocking about the world without a thought of God (unless I was in a tight place) for the last twelve years—soldier, sailor, bull-puncher, etc.—and on my first Sunday in London a happy chance took me to your hall, and I heard you preach from these words, 'Behold, I stand at the door and knock.' The words appealed particularly to me, as my dear mother used to be very fond of that old hymn—

'Tis Jesus who is knocking,
And, lo! his hands are scarred,
And thorns his brow encircle;
With tears his face is marred.

'Tis Jesus who is pleading,
In accents meek and low,
"I died for you, my children;
Why will you treat Me so?"

So one thought led to another, and the black degradation of my past life was bit by bit made clear to me. I had a bit of a struggle at first, but I think I was fairly sick of sin and ripe for a change, and I just gave myself up into Christ's hands, and God giving me strength, will serve Him in the future as faithfully as I served my late master, the devil. I thank God for directing me to your hall three Sundays ago, and I am deeply grateful to you, through whose ministry I am made right; and, if I leave this country this week, as I fully expect to do, I will carry your kindly words with me, and will esteem it a privilege to write you as to my troubles from whatever part of the world it pleases God to station me in.—Yours respectfully, H. M."

It may well be understood that work of this stamp demands funds. The annual expenditure is about £600. A debt exists of £200, which three gentlemen have promised to clear off, providing another sum of £200 be raised towards current expenses. Communications should be made to the treasurer, Col. H. G. Macgregor, C.B., 4, Brechin-place, S.W., or Hon. Granville Waldegrave, 4, Park-square West, N.W.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, March 6.

"He was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto Him."—Mark i. 13.

IN what different circumstances is the second Adam to the first. He began in a garden which the Lord God had planted; but his great Antitype in a wilderness, the thorns of which spoke of that primal sin. But whereas the first Adam transformed the garden into a wilderness, the second will convert all desert places into gardens, whether they be in the heart, or the world around, so that they shall blossom as the rose.

To Adam the beasts came, that he might name them; but at the coming of the second Adam they were wild. "He was with the wild beasts." Yet they were tame to his pure manhood. He had "dominion over the works of God's hands." On his brow the crown of royalty over the inferior races, which man had lost, was already placed.

Again, it is true of thee, O son of man, that, like thy Lord, thou art between the wild beasts and the angels. On the one side thou touchest the lower, and on the other the higher. At every moment thou art called to choose between these twain. Thy body calls thee this way, and thy spirit that. Be sure to deny the lower appetites; rule them; be king and lord in the realm of thy soul. Make them crouch around thee, as the lions of Daniel's den. Get thy Lord to master them for thee. Else thou wilt miss the angels of God, who come to encamp around thee, and minister to thee, as one of the heirs of salvation. Was it here that Christ learnt to contrast his homelessness with the lairs of the beasts? Ah, but He might always lay his head on the bosom of God!

MONDAY, March 7.

"New wine into fresh wine-skins."—Mark ii. 22.

Ah, our Lord! Thou hast been speaking of the bridegroom and his coming to the Feast. Thou remindest us of the olden comparison of thy love as "better than wine," and of thy first miracle at Cana of Galilee. May thy love be poured into our hearts as the fresh juice crushed from the grapes! We have no love of our own to offer Thee; but, oh, pour thy love into hearts that yearn to love Thee with thy love. And let it not be only the memory of the love that was, but the living, fresh enjoyment of the love that is ever new. Oh, for the constraints of thy love—new, fresh, living! But the Master says, If you have your request, the new wine may refuse to take on with the old shapes; it will make for itself new channels and forms of manifestation; when others fast, you will feast; when others feast, you will be sad. You will be counted eccentric and peculiar. Men will murmur at you, and find fault. Can you bear this test?

There is but one answer: Leave us not to ourselves. Permit us not to follow the promptings and suggestions of our undisciplined wills; but provide for us the new wine-skins also. Show us what Thou wouldst have us be and do; and let the methods in which our hearts' devotion shall express itself be so lovely, so befitting, so helpful to the world, and so full of God, that men may recognise thy hand, and adore Thee. Let not thy love be spilled, but stored for the refreshment of others through our lives. Oh, give us love!

TUESDAY, March 8.

"He appointed twelve that they might be with him, and that He might send them forth to preach, and to have authority to cast out demons."—Mark iii. 14, 15 (R.V.).

This is the threefold work of the Church and of each disciple.

That we might be with Him. The Master dearly loves our company. Let us seek it more. Not necessarily praying, or praising, or learning—but just being quietly with Him. It was said of a holy man, Mons. de Rentz, that his union and converse with God were so wonderful, that after he had spent several hours therein, he found himself in the end as if he had only then begun it, except only that he had then yet more desire to continue it. And at length he arrived to that height that it seemed as though he never ended it at all, being wholly and constantly in inward recollection and application to God. After whose example let us press.

That He might send them forth to preach. He cannot come forth from the secret chamber of eternity to preach as once He was wont to do; and therefore He is ever raising up voices, witnesses, lips which He teaches how to speak, and touches with his live coal. Has he not sent you forth, if not by life, yet by life to bear witness to his love?

That they might have authority over demons. The power of Satan is strong; it mastered Adam, but it met more than its match in the Christ-nature. If that nature is regnant in you, you, too, will have power over all the power of the enemy. Nothing shall by any means hurt you, and you will be able to deliver others who have long been held captive at his will.

WEDNESDAY, March 9.

"Cares...riches...lusts."—Mark iv. 19.

There is enough nutriment in the land for the thorns alone or for the wheat alone, but not for both; and so there is a brief struggle for mastery, in which the sturdy weed prevails against the slender wheat, and clothes it. Nourishment which should go to its support is drained away from it, and though it does not actually expire, it leads a struggling existence, and ultimately becomes unfruitful. What are these brigand robbers that rob the tender growth of heaven?

For the poor man—Cares. These divide our heart, and distract it in many different directions. What shall we eat? What shall we drink? Wherewith shall we be clothed? How shall we meet our rent and other expenses? It is almost impossible to settle to our prayer, or Bible-study, or Christian work, or to the culture of the soul-life while questions like these intrude. What shall the poor man do to prevent the Word becoming unfruitful? He must take his cares to his Father, and by one act deposit them in his safe keeping.

For the prosperous man—Riches. They will distract as much as anxiety does. How much they amount to! Oh, the endless figurings in the brain. How to keep, or invest, or increase. The rich man must look on all he has as a stewardship for God, deducting only a moderate percentage for himself.

For us all—Lusts. Strong and inordinate desires for what may be right in itself, but which we follow with extravagant zest. What is right in itself may become wrong if we put it in God's place, and allow it to monopolise us unduly. O Great Husbandman, root up the thorns by thy Holy Spirit!

THURSDAY, March 10.

"Thy daughter is dead: why troublest thou the Master any further?"—Mark v. 35.

What hopelessness! They had watched the sweet flower fade, till no colour was left on the pale cheek, and the merry voice was still; and then they thought of the Galilean teacher: "Why cost him time and trouble, his visit will be useless now! It was very kind of Him to be willing to come! But it is now of no use! Very kind, but no use!"

We go to God in comparatively small trials, and think He can help us. But there are times when we say: It is no use troubling further; we must just bear our trial as well as we can, God Himself cannot help us. Can He give back that twin-soul? Can He restore the love that has died out? Can He undo this unhappy marriage? Can He deliver from that life-long paralysis? Life is extinct, hope is dead, the light has dipped below the horizon. It is no use to trouble God or man. We must suffer, till eternity explain the mysteries of time.

But Jesus knows the way out. He says in his sweet undertone, "Fear not; only believe." He has the keys of death. He never would have let things come to this awful pass by his delay unless He had known that, even if the worse came to the worst, all would end well. He has purposely delayed till this, that He might have the better opportunity of showing you what God can do. Fear not: the hand of the Almighty Saviour has yours within its grasp. He will not let you stumble as you go down this dark staircase by his side. Only believe: have faith in Him. All may seem very mysterious now, but you will come to see that it was the wisest and best after all.

FRIDAY, March 11.

"They told Him all things whatsoever they had done, and whatsover they had taught."—Mark vi. 30.

Talking things over with Jesus! It is a precious secret. When one has been out in the world, it is delightful to talk over what has happened in the seclusion of the home. We have read of a wife who reserved one room in the house, which no one was permitted to enter but her husband and herself; and there they interchanged their mutual confidences. So it is a blessed habit to talk over everything with Jesus, and to review the events of the past beneath the light of his loving eyes.

"We have had much success, Master," we cry; "the cities were moved, the devils were subject, the crowds followed us everywhere." Ah, children, He seems to say, "Those who cry Hosanna to-day will cry 'Crucify' to-morrow: the real work of God is not done amid congratulating crowds, but in the heart's depths, and in the ante-chamber. See that ye dwell not on the excitement of the outward reception, lest you attribute it to something in yourselves, and pride yourselves upon it, and become unsuitable for my use. A man can receive nothing unless it be given him from above."

"We have been greatly persecuted, and our mission seems to have been a failure, Master." We cry at another time, "Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" "Care not for it," the same wise Counsellor replies. "I at least am satisfied; I will see to it that your reward is according to your faithfulness, if not to your success; and there shall be a remnant of good soil that shall repay one hundredfold."

SATURDAY, March 12.

"This He said, making all meats clean."—Mark vii. 19 (R.V.).

This is a remarkable rendering of the Revisers, which has the support of profound scholarship. Before this hour arrived, men were clean if they ate certain kinds of food, and unclean if they ate others. But from this moment, the Evangelist tells us, these outward distinctions were abolished. Henceforth all meats were to be viewed by the followers of Jesus as equally clean. There is, however, need that we should remember two or three things in respect to food. (1) That every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused if it can be received with thanksgiving. The act of thanksgiving is the test for the fitness and unfitness of food. What you cannot thank God for you had better not partake of.

(2) Take care to eat for the need of the body rather than for its pleasure. There are a great many dainties and luxuries heaped on our tables which we take simply for the pleasure of eating. It is here that we are assailed with temptation, and need to be on our guard. Of course, we are not to reject articles of diet because they are pleasant. God Himself made the fruit of the garden good for food and pleasant. But the fact of food being pleasant eating is not in itself sufficient to justify our taking it. It may clog our digestion, and impair our power for thought and prayer and service.

(3) Be moderate in the amount you eat. Quite as many over-eat as over-drink. We should always have the girded loin. The majority of the diseases of modern life have been traced to the habit of eating to excess. We are told by eminent authorities that we ought not to rise from table with the sense of having eaten to the full. This also is the command of Christ. Let your moderation in this also be known to all men.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

THE great hall in Mile End-road has been the scene of many extraordinary gatherings. It is no new thing to see the hall long before the time of an announced meeting literally crowded in every part, the area, galleries, topmost gallery, the orchestra, all the aisles, and every vacant spot packed, even to the half of the large octagonal vestibule at the entrance of the hall. This is the sight one wishes to convey to the mind of your readers which presented itself on entering the Great Assembly Hall on Sunday week, when Rev. John McNeill began his work among the vast East-end population, of whom it has been written "They live in miles on miles of streets, where they work, suffer, do good and evil, and are saved from sinking into despair by certain hands that are stretched out to help and to rescue." The immense sea of faces that meets the gaze is singularly impressive, especially when the 5,000 persons are listening eagerly to catch every word that falls from the speaker's lips.

A large overflow meeting was held in the adjoining hall by Mr. Joseph Clarke, while an open-air meeting was conducted on the waste in front of the hall, and the police estimate that nearly as many were turned away as were inside. Mr. McNeill's kindly, genial, smiling face almost at once wins the attention of his hearers. As he proceeds with his discourse some remark creates a laugh, but in a moment as he applies it the audience is painfully still, and you could almost hear a pin drop. His method is, indeed, most simple. He takes a Bible subject and then the most homely everyday life-scenes are brought to bear upon the narrative. Thus by vivid word-painting he brings home with great force to the minds of his listeners the solemn truths he wishes them to embrace. It was a most homely, yet grand discourse, and few who listened to it would be able easily to shake off from their minds the telling appeals to decide for Christ without delay. An after-meeting followed, to which a large proportion of the audience stayed. It was conducted by Mr. Charrington and his workers. The inquiry-room was filled, and many were dealt with in the body of the hall.

The week-night services were of the same interesting and solemn character, and the great hall experienced a record in the way of attendances. Never has it been so packed for five consecutive nights. As the week advanced so it became evident that before its close the hall would almost see the Sunday congregation repeated, and on Thursday night this was the case. After-meetings were held every night, and great blessing has been the result. Some very interesting cases of conversion have been recorded. Some most intelligent and thoughtful people have been attracted by the popularity of the preacher; many of these doubtless never had the Gospel placed before them in such pungent and terse language. It is pleasing to be able to state that many of this class have given themselves over to the loving Saviour. Several members of the police force during the week decided for Christ. It may well be said that "all sorts and conditions of men" and women have boldly come out and declared their allegiance to the Son of God.

Mr. McNeill rested on Saturday, but an enormous prayer-meeting was held by Mr. Charrington. The burden of the meeting was praise to God for blessing received and prayer for a further downpour of the Holy Spirit upon those who were yet to assemble to hear the voice of the famous Scotch Evangelist.

The second Sunday was only a repetition of the former. In the morning the East London Tabernacle was crowded with an interested audience; in the evening the Great Assembly Hall was the scene of effort. Although the meeting was advertised to begin at 6.30 the doors had to be opened at 5 o'clock, and soon after six Mr. McNeill again faced another packed hall, while the smaller hall was also crowded to its fullest extent, and thousands were again turned away. Dr. Harry Guinness and Mr. John Colville, M.P., having led in prayer, Mr. McNeill gave a most thrilling and powerful exposition upon Rev. xxii. 17. He held his audience spellbound for over an hour. At the close, an immense gathering stayed to the after meeting. The scenes in the inquiry-room were most affecting, mothers crying over their children, sisters locked in each other's arms and sobbing upon one another's shoulders. The workers were busy among the anxious, and it was not until half-past nine that the second meeting was brought to the close with much rejoicing. Mr. McNeill closes his mission in the Great Assembly Hall on Friday.

THE MID-DAY MEETINGS

were continued last week in the Cannon-street Hotel from Monday till Thursday, with large daily audiences and the most eager responsive attention from the City men. The addresses were largely based on Old Testament themes, and were illustrative of the need for courageous confession of Christ, and for taking into our daily work the sanctions and consolations of the Gospel. These mid-day talks (from one to two) are being held this week in Exeter Hall. An excellent start was made on Monday, when the great hall was more than three-parts full. Mr. McNeill gave a practical up-to-date exposition of the meeting of Saul with Samuel, when the latter anointed him as king. The great lesson deduced was that to those who seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness all needful things for the present life will be added.

The Daily Mail of Monday last has a very appreciative sketch, in its series of articles on "Typical Churches," of the opening service by Mr. McNeill in the Great Assembly Hall, and of the general work carried on in East London by Mr. F. N. Charrington.

Keeping in Touch.

Suggested by a leaflet in verse, entitled "Out of Touch," by Jean H. Watson, of the South Africa General Mission.

O keep me in touch with thy Spirit Divine,
Lord Jesus, my heart would for ever be thine!
At home or abroad, or wherever I be,
Thy service I love when abiding in Thee.

If worldly in spirit what joy could I know?
For mourners in Zion what sympathy show?
No message of mercy for sinners were mine,
Unless keeping touch with thy Spirit Divine.

A word for the weary, or smile for the young,
A song in my heart to be cheerily sung;
Some witness, my Saviour, for Thee should be mine,
If keeping in touch with thy Spirit Divine.

How oft have I failed of the blessing they know,
Who the seed of the Kingdom unweariedly sow!
Imparting to others some message of thine,
While keeping in touch with thy Spirit divine.

More hearts by the word of thy Truth should be won,
My feet on thine errands more faithfully run;
More gladness in service should ever be mine
If keeping in touch with thy Spirit Divine.

Faint hearts might be lifted from sorrow and care;
My voice should be mighty for others in prayer;
My pen wouldst Thou use, and rich blessing be mine
If keeping in touch with thy Spirit Divine.

O grant me, dear Saviour, thy witness to be,
Nor, Jonah-like, ever thy service to flee;
That gladness around me may ceaselessly shine,
Lord, keep me in touch with thy Spirit Divine.

Clevedon. WM. KITCHING.

Home for the Dying.

A NUMBER of the friends and helpers of Miss Davidson's truly practical Christian institution, "Friedenheim," met at the Home, near Swiss Cottage, St. John's Wood, on Thursday last, for the annual meeting. It was a deeply interesting experience beforehand to visit the various wards, each with its quota of sick ones, some of them wonderfully bright and cheerful, others evidently bowed down by pain or weakness, and not far off from the appointed period of their release. In the bright afternoon sunshine of an early spring day, the large and airy wards looked most pleasant and restful. One could not but be thankful for such a place, where everything possible is done that kind Christian hearts and tender, skilful hands can accomplish to smooth the pathway to the confines of the other world, and make the dying bed "soft as downy pillows are." Most touching of all, perhaps, was the children's ward; early deaths have a pathos all their own. In some cases the little ones seemed to be recovering strength, and mayhap for them there are yet appointed a few years of life's burdens and opportunities ere they go hence and be no more. Out of a ruined conservatory there has been constructed a new ward on the ground floor, in which are placed, for purposes of isolation, the most critical cases; this is deemed desirable for the sake of the other inmates.

At the meeting held in one of the lower rooms Rev. HENRY SHARPE, of Hampstead, presided, and several friends led in earnest prayer for grace to the workers, and blessing on their daily ministries for the patients.

A brief but succinct statement of the past year's work was submitted by the visiting medical superintendent. The total income of Friedenheim for the year was nearly £4600, and on the ordinary account there was a small balance in hand at the close. Some £360 is still due to the builder for new drainage works. Eighty-five new patients were admitted last year, which, with thirty-three in the Home at its start, made a total of 118 who had experienced the help of the institution. Sixty-three died in the course of the year, and twenty-eight were on various grounds discharged. Some of these had become chronic lingerers on this side of the border land, and on the making of certain necessary alterations it was found desirable to part with them. The Home is, of course, intended, as far as possible, for those whose life-span is near its end. It was stated that patients are not, as a rule, informed on entrance that they are in a "Home for the Dying." Sometimes, when they discover the fact, they insist on being removed. The loss by death of Sister Jessie, one of the staff, was much deplored; she acted as dispensary sister, which made her services extremely valuable. If any of our readers know of a nursing sister qualified to dispense medicines under medical instruction, they will be doing a good action in the interests of the work of the Home by apprising Miss Davidson of the fact. Mention was also made of the death of Mr. Hugh Matheson, who was an effective helper of the work as chairman of the Council of Management.

The Chairman and Colonel Morton made to the assembled friends some very helpful and strengthening remarks on prayer as an element of the faithful Christian life.

A Men's Bible-class.—One of the features of Rev. Charles Spurgeon's ministry has long been his work amongst men. This was evidenced at the anniversary, on Thursday, 17th, of the men's Bible-class, which has 225 members, with an average attendance of 183. Twelve members have become teachers in the Sunday-school, and during the past year about a dozen have joined the church. The themes studied touch the vital points of Christian life. Much Christian work is carried on in connection with the class, including a Gospel Mission Band, whose visits have been highly valued by other missions; also a book fund, benefit club and dinners to starving children. Most stirring meetings were held in celebration of the anniversay, while Pastor A. G. Brown preached with force and fervour on Heb. ii. 3, pressing home the great question of the text.

THE LATE

Mr. J. R. Hall, of Newport.

WE give to-day a portrait of a devoted worker who was known to many of our readers, and is now mourned by a large number to whom he was a spiritual father.

John Rodger Hall was born at Lochwinnoch, Renfrewshire, in November, 1823. When he was still young his parents removed to Glasgow, and in the course of a few years both of them died, leaving five children, of whom John was the eldest. The little ones were then taken under the care of a godly grandmother, to whom the subject of our sketch owed his earliest religious impressions. The efforts of a Sunday-school teacher were also blest to him, and he made profession of being a Christian, and met with young men of the Free Church of Scotland.

His grandmother died when he was seventeen, leaving him with the responsibility of brother and sisters. Falling in with worldly companions, young Hall followed their ways, but he found no happiness in evil courses. Having married in 1852, Mr. Hall left Scotland for Hampshire, and afterwards he came to live in London. Here the good impressions of earlier years were carried forward, and in 1860 he was brought to a saving knowledge of Christ under the ministry of Rev. George Rose, of Jamaica Row Congregational Church, Bermondsey. Here he became a Sunday-school teacher, and served in the office of deacon.

In 1869 he left London for Newport, Mon., where he helped in the formation of a Y.M.C.A. The town was stirred in 1871 through mission services held in St. Paul's Church by Rev. Robert Aitken, the various denominations joining in prayer and effort for the good of souls. At this time Mr. Hall realised the high responsibilities of the Christian life, and consecrated himself to the Lord, to will and to do according to his good pleasure. Another truth which he now learned was the unity of the body of Christ—that God's blood-bought children, regardless of denominational associations, were one with Christ and also with one another.

Mr. Hall was used of the Lord to help many in the way of salvation, and being unsettled in business he sought guidance as to future duty. Just then he was invited to London, and to help in a mission at Maidstone, Brenchley, and Sandgate, conducted by Rev. Robert Aitken. This was the venerable clergyman's last mission, and it was accompanied by much blessing. Following this Mr. Hall helped in a mission at Stratford, E. In 1873, having left Newport, and put in a short stay at Marylebone, he was invited by the late Mrs. Mary Curtis, of Stratford, to become missionary to her tenantry and others.

In Stratford, as had been the case in other places, he promptly set up a Saturday evening prayer-meeting, helped in the organising of united missions, and laid himself out particularly for the good of the many railway employés. Large numbers of people, from all classes of society, were blessed by his instrumentality, the railway men especially responding to his appeals and sympathising with his work. It is gratifying to recall that the religious life among this large class so developed that kind friends came forward to foster it, and now there is a large Mission Hall, which is the centre of a round of helpful agencies.

Among the many striking incidents in Mr. Hall's work at Stratford, one may be mentioned. When out visiting, specially bent upon finding the son of some mother whom he had met while on holiday at Lowestoft, he sought direction of a policeman. Receiving a civil answer, in a tone that betrayed the Scotchman, Mr. Hall inquired about the man's soul. Being "on duty" the policeman could not engage in prolonged conversation, but he showed real interest in the question, and arranged to see Mr. Hall when at liberty. Gospel books were sent to him, and when the second interview took place Sergeant Lennox was in a very serious mood. Anxiety was followed by conviction and assurance, and prayer gave place to praise. With commendable boldness the officer told his fellows in the force of what God had done for him; he brought a backslider to his old love again, and in other ways his words and efforts were greatly blessed.

With others, P.S. Lennox held prayer-meetings, and exerted himself to promote Bible study among the men, with the result that in a short time twenty policemen attended a Bible-class. Of these, fourteen were professed Christians, ten of them having found the Saviour at Blenheim House, the residence of Mr. Hall. So many of these men as still live are scattered through promotion and other changes, but it is a comfort to know that many of them are testifying to the Lord's saving grace and keeping power.

Throughout his stay in Stratford, which extended over a period of twelve years, Mr. Hall engaged largely in visitation work, and held cottage meetings in all parts of his wide district, also laboured in the various mission halls. During this time Messrs. Moody and Sankey visited London twice, and Mr. Hall was a valued helper in the inquiry-room. On the occasion of the second visit, Mrs. Curtis, whose benefactions in aid of Gospel work had been substantial and numerous, gave a plot of land whereon to erect a temporary building. As a result of the mission many were won to the Saviour, and afterwards, when plans were in progress for giving permanency to the work thus begun, Miss Eccles gave ground on which to erect the well-known Conference Hall in West Hamlane. This gift was in memory of her lately deceased aunt, Mrs. Curtis, and it gave impetus to an undertaking upon which the blessing of God has rested until the present time.

The cluster of agencies of which the Conference Hall is the home engage the hearty devotion of many workers. The Y.M.C.A. is an institution full of life and vigour, while the evangelistic services on Sunday, and various meetings throughout the week, are kept up with unabated interest and continual blessing. Mr. C. Boardman is president, and Mr. E. Fox Butlin secretary.

Through failing health and the long-continued illness of his wife, and other considerations, Mr. Hall was at length compelled to consider the question of change of surroundings, and in 1885 he returned to Newport, to resume work under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A.; and here, settled in his new work, he formed the Daniel's Band, a Bible Class exclusively for Christians, and entered upon work among the police of the town, much encouragement attending his exertions. After about twelve years of happy service, Mr. Hall's health again gave way; and, although he had to relinquish many of his engagements, he kept up his Daniel's Band and policemen's class; also retaining a large measure of his correspondence with inquirers and Christian workers.

Gradually his powers failed, and on the evening of October 27, last year, he read Psalm xxiii. with some distress, owing to shortness of breath. In prayer afterwards the same difficulty was experienced, and as the symptoms increased in severity a doctor was called in. In about an hour and a-half from the time of prayer, in which, as was his rule, he was specially thoughtful of others and their needs, he entered into rest. Then his dear wife recalled with peculiar interest that the psalm he had read was the one which he had always read before leaving home or parting with friends! The Good Shepherd was his stay in the last hour, and with his last voice he extolled the name of Jesus, saying, "Oh, what a Saviour!" and giving joyous response to a relative who spoke of the efficacy of the blood of cleansing.

Mr. Hall was greatly missed, and so he is to-day. As mourning friends, including members of the classes which he had conducted, stood round the grave, the Shepherd Psalm was again read, and all rejoiced that the departed one lived, as he died, with abounding confidence in God. "I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me." Our old friend's children in grace have been scattered all over the world, so that, although he kept in the home land, he was glad not to be without influence in the foreign field. Among his last joys was the news that a member of the Daniel's Band had gone to Glasgow to study for missionary work. Mr. Hall was a man full of faith, and as humble as he was devoted, willing to labour unseen, and only anxious to please his Lord. The Church wants many workers of the same type, and we do well to pray for more such gleaners to be sent forth into the great harvest-field.

London City Mission.—The Lord Mayor will preside at a conversazione, at the Mansion House, on Thursday, March 17, at 8 p.m., on behalf of this society, which has been carrying on its beneficent work among the poor of our great metropolis for over sixty years. Through its efforts multitudes of the sunken and depraved have been upraised and transformed into respectable members of society and useful citizens. Addresses will be given by Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Principal Oswald Dykes, and Mr. F. A. Bevan.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF COLORADO.

WHEN Brigham Young and his followers crossed the continent as far as Utah, they considered the wilderness of Colorado a sufficient barrier to protect them against invasions from the East, little thinking how soon the favourite hunting-ground of the Indians would become the prey of white men. Later on, such a possibility must have dawned on Young. On one occasion when pieces of gold were brought to him which had been found near Salt Lake City, he ordered that the hole whence it had been taken should be filled up and no mention made of it whatever. It is probable that this precaution delayed for some years the immigration of gold-hunters. As soon as the signal was given, thousands rushed in at once. On the plains where, half-a-century before, elk, deer, and buffalo had wild play, knowing no enemy but the Indian, towns have grown up with all the accompaniments of modern civilisation, and are increasing in size and population year by year. The Rocky Mountains offer no longer an undisturbed retreat to wild animals. The eagle dares no more build her nests in the walls of high cliffs and soar above the fantastic forms of rugged rock masses. The region behind Pike's Peak—twelve miles from Maniton as the crow flies—is dotted with buildings, scarred by shafts, holes, and trenches, while roads and rails run in all directions. It is a network of mining-claims.

Yes, Colorado seems to be on the eve of a brilliant future as regards worldly prosperity. It is rapidly developing, and already claiming to be a self-supporting country. It is said that in extent, size, and riches the ore-lodes of Colorado excel the famed deposits of South Africa. At Cripple Creek, gold is being extracted from the solid granite, which is altogether a puzzle to geologists. The total product of silver and gold since 1859, when the first gold mines were started at Leadville, now the greatest mining camp in the world, amounts to millions on millions of dollars. Besides gold and silver, iron, copper, lead, and lime abound.

Six years ago the present gold-fields of Cripple Creek were a mountain wilderness save for cattle and cowboys; to-day more than 35,000 people are gathered within an area of forty square miles. Florence, about forty miles from Cripple Creek, is the petroleum centre of the Rocky Mountains; near by are extensive coalfields. The fact that Colorado is the richest mineral place in the Union, and that its mineral-bearing veins grow richer as they increase in depth, opens wide possibilities to all branches of business. The area of Colorado is twice as large as the States of New York and Pennsylvania combined, yet the entire population is no larger than that of Baltimore. There is plenty of room for such as know how to USE THEIR BRAINS AND HANDS.

It has also great advantages of climate and scenery. It is the Mecca of health seekers, especially people with delicate lungs. Colorado Springs, a town of 15,000 inhabitants, has an altitude of 6000 feet. It shares with Glenwood Springs the reputation of the best health resort of the Rocky Mountains. Thirty years ago people used to shoot antelopes in the place where the town stands. One of the physicians, Dr. White, told us that the first stage of consumption is generally cured out here. Many who came for a short stay have settled down for life. The ministers of the first Presbyterian and the first Baptist churches, Dr. Boyle and Mr. Blaisden, both came in a state of broken health and were benefited by the climate. The former confesses to be a living miracle of God's loving mercies. He had forty-two hæmorrhages in a comparatively short time. Six years have since elapsed, and Dr. Boyle still preaches the Gospel of the living Christ. His face bears the expression of tender sympathy with the sufferings of others, which doubtless his own suffering had taught him. Anxious to know a little of we have been attending several churches, and everywhere a warm welcome was tended to us. Our hearts rejoiced to hear the Gospel preached in its simplicity, and we were glad to witness the efforts made by different congregations on behalf of the poor and the fallen. "The poor ye have always with you." Even Colorado is not wanting in penniless widows and neglected children. Endeavour societies are appealing for old clothing and money gifts. A lady representing the Society for Protection of Children made a touching appeal to the Baptist Sunday School to help the less fortunate ones.

At the Wednesday prayer-meeting two sisters were present from the National Graded Home for Erring Women, Chicago. Mrs. Isabella Winglake related many touching incidents in connection with poor fallen women. Four committed suicide one night within two blocks of each other. She and two others had gone into the house of a woman in this locality, a daughter of a Christian family, thirty-five years old. Ten years she had been living a life of sin, and during that time no one had spoken to her about her soul. They sang with her and prayed, and she gave herself up to God. In closing, the speaker pressed on the churches the duty of caring for these lost sisters.

Her companion said there was a regular traffic in girls, quite an organised business. In many cities the railway stations were regularly watched. One case was that of a girl who missed her train. There was not another for twenty minutes. A young woman, a little older than herself, who had taken her seat by her, asked her to come and stay at her home until the train went. It was a nice cosy little parlour into which she was invited, and went, but it was six months before she came out again, ruined, disgraced, lost. In the meantime her mother had died broken-hearted. It is the duty of Christian women to mother these broken-hearted and wrecked creatures.

In one of the worst streets of Chicago, with brothels on each side, is a small house with the words—A Christian Home. It has been kept for three years by Mrs. Winglake, and now a piece of land had been donated to it for the purpose of building a graded Home, which is separated into classes. This everywhere. In a town in Indiana some eighteen young girls formed themselves into a band for prayer and Christian work. They were led to devote themselves to seek out their wandering sisters and bring them to homes of rescue. Forty-nine out of one hundred are permanently restored to society.

In concluding, the sister said that while we were sending missionaries abroad, David, the Tamil, came to convert our own people. Does this not prove that there is a crying need lying at our own doors, giving splendid opportunities to those unable to leave their homes? What a glorious work—to deliver sinners out of their bondage and bring them into the light, and freedom, and liberty of the Kingdom of God!

The pastor who presided made a few closing remarks, saying that the question had arisen whether the door-keeper would admit such poor girls to the church. A pastor said to a lady who asked him that question, that if not, he would go and build a church where they should be admitted.

At the Y.M.C.A. a young man, Mr. Thos. J. Jones, of Kansas, gave an interesting account of his work among cowboys in the southern ranges of the Rocky Mountains.

A pastor at Denver had spoken to him of a neglected region, which was very much in need of the Gospel. He prayed about it, and as the Lord opened the way he obeyed the call. On his way to Norwood, a hamlet high up in the mountains, he had to go through another small settlement, Placerville. As it was the time when the cowboys gathered at the post-office, he entered the hotel and asked permission to hold a meeting there. The landlord, though an infidel, did not object. As the young man began to sing, one by one the cowboys and domestic servants came in. At last, eight men entered the room at once. It was the saloon-keeper, who, hearing singing—an unusual sound—shut up his house and took his customers with him.

In spite of the good beginning many a difficulty awaited Mr. Jones at Norwood. The people were reserved, and the cowboys kept at a distance. The saloon-man, fearing for his business if people should be converted, refused to open the Town Hall which he had let for dancing purposes. Meetings had to be held twenty miles away. When cold or deep snow made it impossible to meet at one place, the missionary went from house to house. Knowing that God reserves great things for those who are willing to do small things, he tried to be obliging and helpful to everybody, and soon succeeded in breaking the ice. His services were valued and asked for, both by the post-office and the store-keeper, and brought him in close contact with people. On one occasion he took care of 100 head of cattle during a ten days' absence of the farmer, which gained him the hearts of all the cowboys in the neighbourhood. Many conversions were the result of his labour. The saloon-keeper became his friend, no longer refused the key to the Town Hall, and an old man, who had grown up in sin and swearing, turned to Christ, and confessed Him openly as his Saviour.

WILMA MORGAN.

Carruthers Institute, Pisa.

IT was in 1861 that Miss S. H. Carruthers went first to Italy, in the hope of finding a climate suited to her delicate health. Settling, some years later, at Cisanello, near Pisa, she opened, in 1869, a school in the entrance-hall of her villa with fifteen pupils, who not only received secular education, but were instructed in the Word of God.

The work thus begun, nearly thirty years ago, has grown till it comprises to-day a school at Cisanello, with thirty infants, thirty children in the first elementary class, and thirty-six and fifty respectively in the girls' and boys' schools; at San Michele (a mile away) eighty-five boys are received; while at the Institute in Pisa there are about 150 children, beside twenty-one in the Normal School and fifty girls—factory employées, sewing girls, and clear-starchers—in the night school; making a total of 452 children, who receive a liberal education as well as sound Scriptural instruction.

Italy, so long under the sway of Priestcraft and Popery, has for many years been drifting into rationalism and indifference. The chief "religion" seems to be anarchism, but though opposition to the work of the Gospel is still unabated, Miss Carruthers has very much to thank God for. One source of encouragement exists in the fact that the Government inspection of the work resulted in the granting her a gold medal by the Minister of Public Instruction as a token of his "particular satisfaction," accompanied by an approving letter written in his name by the Prefect of Pisa. Another source of encouragement exists in connection with the San Michele school for boys. In this suburb of Pisa the Roman Catholics have built a large establishment, intending to swamp the work, but it is now without scholars, while the villagers have petitioned Miss Carruthers for a girls' school.

But a source of discouragement exists in the insufficient recognition of the claims of the work, which is absolutely undenominational, by the Christian public, for of all the Christian holiday-makers in Italy, only two from England visited the schools last year. Perhaps when the value and importance of the work is urged, and the advancing age of Miss Carruthers as well as the difficulties of obtaining the necessary funds are emphasised, the Lord's stewards in our highly-favoured land may be led to subscribe more liberally and interest themselves in the welfare of the Gospel in Italy. All information can be obtained from Miss S. H. Carruthers, Pisa per Cisanello, Italy; or from the present writer,

A Plea from Paris.

It is generally admitted that the philanthropic institutions which, under the management of Roman Catholic societies, exist in Paris for the purpose of offering night shelter to homeless men, are, though excellent in many respects, far from sufficient to meet the actual needs. Furthermore, the usefulness of some of these shelters is limited on account of the existence of certain regulations with regard to admission. There is, for example, a rule that a man cannot avail himself of their hospitality more than a certain number of nights every month or every quarter. But there are hundreds of people in Paris who are in a continual state of destitution, and who, not only a few days or weeks of the year, but the whole year round, are without a place where they can lay their heads to rest. For many of those, the only alternatives are: to sleep in the open air, or to take refuge in one of those miserable places which are a disgrace to Paris, and which the authorities have repeatedly tried to suppress. We refer to those places which exist under a pretence of being some kind of restaurant, and where hundreds of poor wretches, men and women, having paid for a light refreshment, are allowed to remain seated during three or four hours of the night, huddled together in a worse manner than cattle, and in a stifling atmosphere.

In a book published in Paris a few months ago, one of these miserable refuges was thus described: —"We are outside the door of the Red Castle. It is midnight, and in the month of February. We step in. At first it is impossible to see anything except a long bar with its shining tin. A paraffin lamp is suspended from the ceiling. Your eyes gradually get accustomed to the semi-obscurity. Everywhere tables and seats, everywhere dark shadows of men seated or sunk together on the floor, filling every corner. Some of them sleep, their fists tightly closed. Others lean against the walls, with eyes wide-open and set, in an insomnia of starvation and disease. From time to time there are attacks of coughing, terrible, hollow, and heart-rending. In this mass of human misery there are to be seen grown-up people and children, old men and women of despair. On a table a baby sleeps, or on the arm of a mother landed in this hell. Whether there is snow, or rain, or frost, everybody must, however, soon leave. The Red Castle only gives shelter until two o'clock in the morning."

The Salvation Army, in addition to its present work amongst the poor, has undertaken to establish immediately a shelter, where any homeless man, for a small charge, can be admitted, without any question as to how often he has been there before. A suitable property has been secured in a good position, close to the Gare du Nord. When fitted up, it will accommodate between three and four hundred men. Here a man will be able to find for three-halfpence a decent bed in a warm and pleasant room, hot and cold water for washing himself and his linen (if such he possesses), and facilities for mending his clothes in case of need. The fitting up of the place will cost about £800, which the benevolent public is asked to supply. After this first outlay the institution will support itself.

A part of the money required we shall be able to raise in France, and we have no doubt whatever that, when once opened, the French will take a great interest in this shelter, and very likely help us to open similar ones in other parts of Paris. But, for this first experiment, we have to appeal for help to friends in England who are interested in evangelical work in this country. And we need not say that this proposed shelter, where meetings will be held daily, will enable us to reach with the Gospel thousands of the darkest and most neglected souls.

Bed and Supper for a Penny.—While the question of the housing of the poor remains a matter of considerable moment, the fact that a meal and a night's lodging can be obtained for a penny in New York, and yet leave the proprietor a profit, is worth notice. This is in Division-street, on the Bowery, and, contrary to expectation, the place is bright and clean, while two large stoves keep it warm and comfortable even on the coldest nights, for they are never allowed to go out. Having paid his penny, the "guest" seats himself at a long table, and a waiter brings him a bowl of beef stew with coffee and a bun, or a plate of pork and beans with the coffee and bun. The men sleep on the floor and on the benches; for another penny they can also get breakfast.—Daily Chronicle.

Awakening in Ceylon.

A SPIRITUAL movement going on in Ceylon has attracted notice by the secular press. Mr. Moscrop, in one of a series of articles in The Ceylon Observer, says:—

"Ceylon is undoubtedly awakening, but the great question is, What shall it be? Shall it become conscious of the working of spiritual energies, the powers of the world to come, or of merely material forces? The material is at present possessive and obtrusive. Our island revenue is going up by 'leaps and bounds,' the near future is to see the opening up of the country by railways, and by advance in many ways. The currents of the world's thoughts and feeling, deflected to our shores by many influences, sweep by us, and we are bound to be awake—but to what? And are our eyes enlightened enough to see the relation of this material progress to the kingdom of Christ? I believe all true progress and achievement are his, and that every triumph of intelligence is part of his great victory. I cannot, in my thoughts, cut Him away from inventions and discoveries, from progress of any kind.

"The Christian Church, whilst Christ is preparing the future for it, must be making itself ready to make use of the world's heightened capacities and quickened intercourse, so that Christ may be the more speedily put into possession of the inheritance which is his through redemption. Ceylon has a future and that future belongs to Christ. We must claim it for Him by the appropriation of faith, by heralding its approach, and by preaching his Gospel in such a way as to make every man feel his present energies are so real that the future must be his."

Mr. Sankey in Egypt.

IN a letter dated "On the Nile," February 12, Mr. Ira D. Sankey says: We arrived at Assiout yesterday on our return journey, and our party accepted the kind invitation of Dr. Alexander, of the American Mission, to visit the schools and hold a service of song for the students there. The large hall was crowded with over six hundred boys and girls, teachers and missionaries.

The proceedings were opened with singing and prayer in the native language, and Psalm xxiii. was sung with wonderful effect, at least upon those of us who had never heard the grand old Psalm rendered in Arabic, both words and music.

Several solos followed, including "The Life-Line," "Saved by Grace," and "The Ninety and Nine," interspersed with short addresses by ex-Governor Flower, of New York, Sir Andrew McDonald, of Edinburgh, and others.

The meeting was one of the most interesting we ever attended. The mission here has over five hundred students, and is doing a splendid work for the uplifting of the children of Egypt.

Belleville Mission, Paris.

This Mission has been a lighthouse in the midst of atheism, superstition, and worldliness for twenty-seven years. The children's festival was recently held, and among the decorations in the large hall were the French, the English, and the American flags, showing the work to be established on an international and undenominational basis. It was a refreshing sight to see the hall crowded with children of both sexes and of all ages.

A large variety of presents were given to the little ones as prizes for regular attendance, good behaviour, and diligent study. The children sang the hymns with great enthusiasm, and listened to stirring addresses by pastors and other helpers. I felt that precious seed was sown in that hour that will yield fruit for time and eternity. What a blessing that these poor children, who neither at home nor at school are nurtured in the fear and admonition of the Lord, have been laid on the heart of one noble-minded woman!

Louise H. Kaverau.

Central Africa.—The deeply-interesting work started by Mr. F. S. Arnot is now carried on at three or four centres. Though broken in health, and prevented from returning personally to Africa, Mr. Arnot is diligently occupied in connection with the work, helping those who go forth, and seeing to their supplies. In April about seventeen more labourers hope to start to join the considerable number already on the field.

Miss Procter's Mission at Schwifat.

THE report for 1897, just issued, says:—"We have been all preserved in health and strength, when plague and sickness were all around us; not one single case of serious illness has been in the school. One girl who had a tumour in the breast for years had to go to the hospital to have it removed; she remained only one month and returned perfectly cured.

"As soon as she was well enough, she used to read her Bible to the other patients, and gather the children and young girls round her and seek to tell them of Jesus. Being Moslems they had not heard of Him before. She made herself beloved by both patients and nursing sisters, so that there was much regret at her leaving. They said, 'She has been quite a true missionary amongst us.' This girl is now happily placed as a teacher at Shafamer, near Nazareth, under Miss Townsend, who writes: 'I like Julia very much; she is an excellent teacher, and, best of all, an earnest Christian.'

"What cheers me most in my work is the testimony I receive of the teachers I have sent out. One who went out for the first time this year to teach at Jaffa is doing well. The country is quite studded with my girls now."

Details follow of financial difficulties through the loss caused by the storm and waterspout in February, 1897; also of the visit of Pastor Tanius Said to England, where he succeeded in raising the £300 required to repay a loan and discharge cost of repairs.

It is stated that the schools are always full; that the Y.W.C.A. branch is flourishing; and that the Medical Mission work carried on by Miss Helanie Baroody and Dr. Ispere Nassar has been greatly blessed.

Communications may now be made to Mr. Thomas J. Knight, Bush Hill, Winchmore Hill, N., who is acting as secretary in Great Britain.

Industrial Missions in Africa.

LADY ASHBURTON has recently bought an estate at Cholo, British Central Africa, which she has enabled the Nyassa Industrial Mission to acquire by purchase in annual instalments. Over 106 acres of this estate are already planted with coffee plants in bearing, and it is estimated that, after discharging the annual liabilities, there will be a sufficient income to enable the Society at the end of the year to begin the erection of the necessary buildings for an active missionary work amongst the natives of the district. These buildings could be commenced at once if the funds were forthcoming by contributions, and thus time that is precious might be saved. This Cholo station will be about thirty miles from the base station at Likabula, near Blantyre, which was the original estate with which the Society commenced operations about four years ago. During this time much has been done, with but little support, for the total subscriptions during the first three years amounted to little over £700.

The accounts for the year 1897 are not yet published, but the public support has increased as the work of the Mission has become better known. At the end of the year the Likabula station will have become self-supporting so far as ordinary expenditure is concerned. The Mission will thus have two stations virtually self-supporting, and the endeavours of the council will then be directed to the repayment of all existing loans (about £500), before seeking to make further advances in the field, for it is intended to proceed in future only so far as the contributions and any surplus revenue from the existing stations may permit, without the encumbrance of loans. It is hoped that funds will be provided to enable the Mission to move forward before the end of the year. A native church has been formed with more than thirty members, who contribute to the support of a native evangelist.

Palestine.—Mr. D. C. Joseph writes from Haifa: "The prayers of the Church of God are needed on behalf of missions in Palestine. In Jerusalem, Safed, and Tiberias, missions to Jews suffer from the tyranny of the Rabbis. At Haifa we have a different trouble. The Jews and Arabs are disposed to be friendly towards us, but the Government functionaries persecute us cruelly, and put every possible obstacle in our way. We have been compelled to relinquish open mission work, and fear we shall have to give up the school. All this is because we are English. The authorities refuse to transfer to us some ground we have bought for a home for sick Jews, also to deliver an iron tent which we brought over from England. The explanation is that we want these for English mission purposes."

The Snowdrop.

THE snow has hardly gone away when the snowdrop comes. We call it the first flower of spring; we might also call it the last snowflake of winter. But there is this difference between the snow and the snowdrop. The snow comes down from the skies; the snowdrop grows up from the earth.

Every white snowflake tells us of the beautiful white Child who came from above, bringing with Him the blessings of the first glad Christmas Day. But every white snowdrop is trembling with a message of the first Easter. For the sinless child grew up to be a sinless man, whom the world hated and killed. He was buried, yet the grave could not hold Him. He rose again from the dead, and that is how He gave us the first Easter, and why the snowdrop, when it rises from the earth, reminds us of Him.

Jesus rose, and went away into heaven, but He has still the same thought for every one of us as when He lived as a man upon the earth, and said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not," and took them up in his arms and blessed them. Does not the snowdrop teach us this? Notice how it droops its head. It has come from the earth, and yet it looks down towards the earth, just as if it could not forget the place where once it was hidden. How much less does Jesus forget the earth where He once lived, the grave where He lay, the people for whom He died! Stephen knew this, and was not afraid. You may read in your Bibles (Acts vii. 55) how just before he died a cruel death for Jesus' sake, he "looked up steadfastly into heaven and saw...Jesus standing on the right hand of God"—and that was enough. He could die bravely.

There is something else to remember also. When Jesus rose from the dead, He meant that we should rise too. Did He not say, "Because I live ye shall live also"? So the snowdrop, in teaching us about Jesus, teaches us about ourselves as well. All of us must die some day. They will put us in the ground, and we shall sleep the long sleep which men call death. But a time will come when Jesus will wake us all up again, and, if we have loved Him, now we shall rise from the grave made more white and beautiful than we can possibly imagine. Have you ever looked upon the face of a little friend lying in a coffin? I have. What a white face such an one always is! We cry, and wish it were rosy instead, as it used to be. One day it will be white with a more glorious freshness than any snowdrop of the spring; perfectly pure, perfectly beautiful—like Jesus. All these thoughts about the snowdrop, as well as its simple beauty, should surely, make us love it, and be glad to have it about our rooms, on the mantelpiece, on the table, anywhere.

Yet I have heard of people who are silly enough to think it unlucky to bring its flowers into the house when they are first in bloom. How strange! Can it be really possible that such a sweet little messenger of a loving Father can do us any harm? Nay, rather it will do us I know not how much good, if we will only let it. It is a very little angel of a very great God, but it goes on repeating and repeating, as long as we will listen, the wonderful story of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. The good folks in Russia (so I have read) greet each other on Easter morning with the cheery words "Christ is risen!" And "Christ is risen!" says the snowdrop. "Come, men and women, and boys and girls, stop amid your buying and selling, your business, your housekeeping, and your play, and think of the message of a simple little flower, and go your way rejoicing in a new and blessed Hope."

Never Do.

BY A. N. CARSON, D.D.

I. Never neglect daily private prayers; always remember that God hears your prayers. Heb. xi. 6.

II. Never neglect daily private Bible reading. I believe all backsliding begins with the neglect to these two rules. John. v. 39.

III. Never ask God for anything you do not truly want. John iv. 24.

IV. Never let a day pass without doing something for Jesus. Every night reflect on what Jesus has done for you, and then ask what have I done for Him? Matthew v. 13-16.

When you are in doubt as to a thing being right or wrong, go to your room, kneel, and ask God's blessing upon it. (Col. iii. 17). If you cannot do this, it is wrong. Rom. xiv. 23.—Selected.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (112).

1. "Jonathan spake good of David unto Saul, his father." (1 Sam. xix. 4.)

2. David was let down from a window by Michal, his wife, and escaped from Saul. (1 Sam. xix. 12.)

3. Jonathan loved David as he loved his own soul. (1 Sam. xx. 17.)

4. Jonathan told him. (1 Sam. xix. 2) or 1 Sam. xx. 35-40.

5. Doeg the Edomite at Saul's command. Because Ahimelech had given bread and a sword to David, and had inquired of the Lord for him. (1 Sam. xxii. 13-18.)

6. Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, escaped and fled after David. (1 Sam. xxii. 20) or 1 Sam. xix. 18.

7. David and his men fought the Philistines for them (1 Sam. xxiii. 5). He left Keilah because God told him Saul was coming to take him, and that the people would deliver him up unto the king. (1 Sam. xxiii. 11-13.)

8. While Saul lay asleep in a cave David came and cut off his skirt, instead of killing the king, as the men wished him to do. (1 Sam. xxiv. 3-10.)

Personal.

Many thanks to the kind friends who have made comforters and cuffs for the poor children, and also for the blotters sent for the soldiers.

Gladys Shaw.—As there are two nieces of the same name, it would be better if either or both happen to have two Christian names to give them each week to avoid any confusion.

Queenie Dale.—You forgot to stamp your letter this week.

Herbert Tomkins.—If I had corrected your paper by your shorthand answers you would have been wrong, but practice makes perfect.

G. B. McClure.—As your initials are the same as your sister's, please give your Christian name.

Dora Marples.—You will see I have given you a star, but I think you are old enough to write your answers in ink now.

Wm. C. A. Law.—Your paper is correct, but your style of writing out your answers is very careless. See what you can do next week.

Dora Corrie.—When were you thirteen? I see you did not answer all the questions set for your age. If you have had a birthday during this quarter, please always give the date, so that I may know in correcting your paper.

Faith and Irene Wilson.—You must each send me separate answers to the "Searcher," and please state your ages.

L. B. Macaulay.—It would be better not to send such a small piece of paper!

Frances J. Bennett.—After all you forgot to fill in No. 6 of this last week's "Searcher."

Hyacinth FitzSimons, Christina and Lizzie Murray.—Please answer every question set for your age; references are insufficient unless specially stated at the beginning or end of "Searcher."

Eric A. Field.—I am indeed very sorry to hear you have measles. It would hardly be fair, though, to give you a star on that account.

At the Feet of Christ.

Rev. i.

If I listen to his voice,
Turn—like John—to see his face,
Will He not reveal Himself
Full of love and full of grace?

Oh, one look at Christ the Lord
Makes me worship at his feet;
While his "Fear not!" lifts me up,
Gives me joy and rest so sweet.

Is this all? Ah no—a joy Brighter far than all between
Waits me. I shall be like Him,
Know as known, and see as seen.

—W. S. Warren Pond.

The Evangelistic Field.

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

DURING recent months, large and important missions have been held in undenominational buildings in many great centres of population, by various agents of the Society, and with the happiest results. From many quarters reports come of great blessing, so much so that the hon. secretary is encouraged to go forward wherever possible in arranging missions of a similar united character. In these efforts, Christians of all denominations join hands, and people the most difficult to reach are brought within reach of the Gospel. It seems to many as if God were reviving his work in this country. Not a few of our readers have long been praying earnestly for such a revival. Letters recently received by the hon. secretary tell of awakening in many parts and of numerous conversions. Ten, twenty or fifty, are sometimes spoken of hopefully as the result of a mission. For this, heartfelt praise is rendered, while prayer will be made that the Lord will open many fresh doors and equip all the evangelists with power and a solemn sense of the responsibility resting upon them.

A minister writes: —"We have had splendid meetings during the fifteen days' Mission, taken by one of the society's evangelists. Great good has been done. The Christians have been revived, and sinners have been led to decision; the simple truths of sin, atonement, faith, regeneration, and righteousness, with the awful consequences of rejecting Christ, have been made very plain; and, indeed, the Gospel plan has been explained and enforced with the greatest clearness and intensity."

Another minister writes:—"Our village is slow to move, but the Lord's arm has been made bare, and quite a number have been led to Christ. A lady writes from a neighbouring village (Notsgrove) rejoicing in the results of a similar Mission held there."

Mr. R. Hill has closed a Mission at Cadzowburn, Hamilton. The meetings were attended from first to last by much interest. God's people have been greatly stirred, and many definite cases of conversion have been made known.

A fifteen days' mission has been concluded by Mr. Henry Collins at Cox Green Mills. The meetings were well attended, and the addresses were listened to with the keenest attention. Every night after-meetings were held, and inquirers remained behind, many of whom professed conversion. From the human point of view this mission has been most encouraging. Numbers have been rescued from slumber and apathy, and some have been reclaimed from a lost and hopeless condition, and brought under the power of the grace of God to the salvation of their souls.

A friend writes: "We have again had the pleasure of a visit from Mr. John Harris in Burton-on-Trent, and he must have been highly gratified to find some who received the truth at his former mission standing firm and ready to give him a hearty welcome and willing aid. Many of God's people have been helped during the mission, and some have entered into life. It is very delightful to have the Gospel put so plainly. 'Thus saith the Lord' clenches every utterance and pierces many hearts."

At Hitchin, Mr. Charles Galletly has finished a special mission. "We had," writes a friend, "been pleading for blessing, and our workers had done all they could to prepare the town, so that when the mission commenced we felt sure the tide was rising. Nor were our expectations disappointed, for the flowing tide was with us from the very first meeting. Night by night, it rose higher and kept rising until the end of the mission. As it flowed in many were swept into the Gospel net."

Mr. Noah Taylor has concluded a fifteen days' mission at the Brunswick Rooms, Southampton, which in every way has been very cheering. The hall has been packed, and overflow meetings have had to be held. Many have been brought out of bondage into liberty, and turned from serving idols to serve the living God. Backsliders have been reclaimed, and Christians built up in the faith.

MISSION AT FELTHAM BANK.

A few Christians at Feltham Bank, feeling the terrible need of some definite Gospel effort in the village, arranged for a united mission, supported by most of the Free Churches. Mr. Monro Collings has accordingly held a fortnight's mission, commencing Sunday, Feb. 6, preceded by a week of earnest prayer. The spirit of supplication throughout that week was very real. Right from the first meeting the blessing began, and although about thirty services were held in the fortnight, not once did we close without definite sign of blessing. The daily Bible-readings were rich and fruitful, and the interest in them continued to grow day by day, until on the last afternoon the building was nearly full, some working-men losing hours of work in order to hear the solemn and stirring expositions of the Word of God. The Gospel meetings have been much blessed, and a number of adults in this small village have confessed Christ. Not the least important result of the mission has been the influence which the truth has exercised upon God's people, drawing them together in living, loving union, a union which is bound to exert a powerful influence in the neighbourhood. A great praise-meeting on Monday night brought this glorious mission to a close, the whole place being packed with grateful Christians, and notes of praise sounding forth from all parts of the building. It was most touching to hear one aged and highly-respected Christian testify that in fifty years of service for Christ he had never before experienced such fulness of blessing in this village. The whole neighbourhood has been moved, and no one can possibly tell even yet whereunto it will grow.—P. Mallinson.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

An encouraging six days' mission has been conducted in Dartford by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the auspices of the local Free Church Council. Previous to its commencement, representatives of the various churches visited the homes of the people and urged them to attend. The response was most gratifying, there being present at every meeting, in addition to the ordinary church-goers, numbers who are seldom seen in any place of worship. Mr. Lane soon won the hearts of his audience, and, better still, was used of God to bring some to a profession of Christ at every service. From the commencement of the mission, on Sunday, Feb. 20, to its termination on the 25th, the Holy Spirit's presence and power were greatly manifested. Not only were sinners saved, but saints were revived, comforted, and strengthened. Mr. Lane's addresses were characterised by conviction and fearlessness, as well as earnestness, pathos, and affection.—H. S.

The Brothers Weaver have recently conducted a special mission at Holderness-road Presbyterian Church, Hull, of which Rev. H. P. Slade is the minister. A large number confessed to having found the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and the membership of the church will be substantially increased as the result of these services. Right through there were manifest tokens of the Divine approval, the meetings increasing in numbers and interest nightly. Every address given by Mr. Bewley Weaver and every hymn sung by Mr. Frank seemed to be with power. Indeed, the meetings were most enjoyable and profitable to Christians, and it was with much regret and many earnest wishes that they might come back to us next winter that we parted with them.—H. P. S.

Mr. George Clarke has concluded a second visit to Torquay, where large gatherings were held and some precious fruit gathered. The mission was under the direction of a united committee, of which the late much-lamented Rev. F. W. Dodd was secretary and Rev. J. Nisbet Wallace chairman. About 130 names were given in of persons professing to receive definite blessing at the services.

A wonderful work is going on near Hebden Bridge. Young men and women are coming out for Christ. The older people say it is many years since they saw such a revival. Rev. David Ashby has finished a ten days' mission at Heptonstall, and the whole town has been stirred. The meetings have been large, and many have come over to the Lord's side; some who have been looked upon as almost beyond reach have taken a bold stand for Christ. The church that a few months ago was almost lifeless is now fully awake and full of vigorous life.

At the Bible Mission Hall, Tunbridge Wells, Mr. John H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, has closed an eight days' mission. Many people were helped in their spiritual life, backsliders were restored, and men and women converted unto God. The presence of men in the gatherings was a most cheering part of the enterprise. In connection with this mission, there is a Bible carriage and colportage department, which visited 250 villages last summer.

At the Congregational Chapel, Woolton, near Liverpool, on Tuesday last, Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, of Westgate, Burnley, concluded a ten days' mission. The after-meetings—at which the whole congregation remained—were specially hallowed seasons, and a number have already signified their decision for Christ.

Mr. William Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, has concluded a mission at Bevois-town, Southampton. From the very first the services have been marked by a manifestation of power. Many have been led into the enjoyment of peace, and are now eager for any work for God. A goodly number of unconverted have been brought to God, and there have been several beautiful instances of husbands or wives getting saved and then bringing their partners to the services with the same results.

A fortnight's mission has been conducted in Braughing, North-West Essex, by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander. The congregations increased night after night, and at nearly every service there were inquirers after salvation. At the closing service on Friday, Rev. E. Edwards had the joy of welcoming twenty-eight persons who stood up to declare that they had found Christ during the mission. As a result of this good work a Sunday-school and an additional class-meeting are to be commenced immediately. The older Christians are full of gratitude and hope.

Special services have been held at Norton by Rev. Frank Jones, who preached night after night with great power. Sinners came voluntarily out, sought and found Christ, and about twenty-five new members have been added to the church.

Special evangelistic services have been held in Cahir parish church and in Cahir barracks by Rev. W. Atkin, of Cork; similar services have been held in Bessbrook Methodist Church by Miss Shannon, of Belfast, and in Duncairn Gardens Methodist Church, Belfast, by Rev. Henry Ball, of Mountpottinger.

Mr. Josiah Nix has held a mission in the Wesleyan Chapel, Railway-street, Nelson. Much interest was aroused, and very large congregations gathered, especially at the closing services. A considerable number of persons of all ages entered the inquiry rooms. On the Saturday night a temperance meeting was held and many pledges were taken. There have been numerous testimonies to good received, and most of the churches in the town will share in the benefit.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a ten-days' mission at Enfield in connection with the Free Church Council. The centre of the mission was at the Wesleyan Church. Services were also held at Christ Church, Baker-street Church, and the Baptist Tabernacle.

A mission has been held at Coleham Mission Room, Shrewsbury, by Miss Haddon. Night after night inquirers remained, and many of the young people decided for Christ.

Mrs. Jennie Walker has concluded a very successful five days' temperance mission in the Old Town Hall, Scarboro', with a magnificent gathering, under the presidency of Mr. Joshua Rowntree.

Rev. John T. Vine has concluded another month's mission at the Edinburgh Castle, and it is believed that as a result many have passed "from darkness to light." At the closing service on Sunday last between twenty aud thirty stood up and professed conversion during the month, among them being a man and wife and their daughter.

Obituary.

MRS. SPENCER THORNTON, BROXBOURNE.

This devoted handmaid of Christ, who passed away on the 17th ult. in her 83rd year, was the widow of Rev. S. Thornton, of Wendover, and was the last survivor of the family of Mr. James Du Pré of Wilton Park, Bucks. A widow since 1850, Mrs. Thornton gave her life to faithful service at Wendover, Brighton, Streatham, Hertford Heath, and Broxbourne. At Brighton, her mothers' meeting of 200, her large weekly gatherings of young ladies for Bible study, by no means so common a branch of Christian work forty years ago as it is to-day; at Streatham, her work amongst the navvies, in conjunction with the late Sir S. A. Blackwood; and, in later years, her untiring interest in mission work of all kinds in Hertford and at Broxbourne—all attest to her feeling of responsibility for the talents entrusted to her by God.

REV. EDWARD PARKER, D.D., MANCHESTER.

But a few weeks ago we mentioned that Dr. E. Parker had resigned his presidency of Brightongrove College, by reason of ill-health. This ill-health seems to have been more serious than supposed, for already he has passed away, falling asleep on Monday, 21st ult., at the age of sixty-seven. By his death a great loss falls not only on the Strict Communion section of the Baptist denomination, with which he was more closely identified, but on the denomination generally, his high Christian character and his genial spirit commanding wide respect and esteem. As a preacher Dr. Parker was ever welcome in Yorkshire and Lancashire. His earnest and clear presentation of the fundamental truths of the Gospel was greatly appreciated. He began his ministry in 1857, at Milne's-bridge, removing to Farsley, near Leeds, two years later, where he remained until he succeeded Rev. Henry Dowson in the Principalship of the Manchester College, now twenty years ago.

MISS MATILDA ELIOTT-LOCKHART.

This generous helper of the Lord's work, well known for her practical sympathy, and help of all Christian effort in the South of Scotland and elsewhere, passed away on the 6th ult. at Newton House, Lanarkshire, at the age of sixty-six, and was interred in the family burial ground at Roberton, Roxburghshire. She was the eldest daughter of Allan Eliott-Lockhart, of Cleghorn and Borthwickbrae, for many years M.P. for Selkirkshire. Though of a distinguished house, she early discovered the frivolity and worthlessness of ordinary society life, and her after life was a case of entire consecration to the Lord. She was a vessel meet for use, and was greatly used. In her earlier efforts she took a great interest in the welfare of the factory girls of Hawick, and the Y.W.C.A. of Hawick owed its origin and early maintenance to her. Hers was a household name in the homes of the humble and poor. Wherever she lived she laboured for the Lord, in the church, in the homes of the people, in the Christian convention, and in the evangelistic inquiry room. She abridged her personal comforts, that she might enlarge her Christian liberality.

MR. JOHN R. FOWLER, J.P., BRAY.

A serious loss has been sustained by Protestant workers in Ireland through the death of this fearless, untiring, and intensely earnest advocate and upholder of the reformed faith and the simplicity of the Gospel. He passed away at his residence in Bray, co. Wicklow, on Sunday, February 13th, after a brief illness, and his funeral, which was very numerously attended, took place at Enniskerry. Canon O'Connor, at the request of the family, gave the funeral address on the occasion, in which he related the pathetic story of his last hours, as told him by the chief mourner:—"I write to tell you how gloriously peaceful his last hours were. When the attack first seized him, and I was called to him, he and I thought he was dying; but he raised his voice and said, 'I desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better.' He constantly repeated the 23rd Psalm, emphasizing sometimes 'my' and sometimes 'the still waters'—the waters of quietness, and, triumphantly, 'I will dwell in the House of the Lord for ever.' He said it was perfect, perfect peace, and praised the Lord for his wonderful condescension in saving such poor, insignificant creatures as we are. He longed that his dying testimony should be to Divine grace—its freeness, its sufficiency. He prayed for us, and then that God would raise up holy men to carry on his own work, and fill the many blanks left lately. He was occupied in dictating some letters about God's work when the end came. Present in power and consolation, the loving Master was by that dying pillow."

MRS. J. PRANKERD, TORQUAY.

This honoured servant of the Lord Jesus Christ fell asleep on Sunday morning, February 13th, age 91 years. For many years, at Langport, Bath, London, and latterly at Torquay, she has exerted a very holy influence, and endeared herself to a wide circle of friends. The native energy of her mind, her clear intellectual faculty, and the prompt decision of her character, were consecrated, early in life, to the service of her Lord and Master. It was granted to her to enter into a deep and sweet experimental knowledge of her risen Saviour, and she ever seemed thirsting for a more intimate fellowship with Christ. In conducting Bible-readings or giving addresses, her hearers were ever made to feel how real was her experience of the truths she inculcated; her very manner won love and admiration, and she always seemed overflowing with adoring love to her beloved Redeemer.

Perhaps her most striking gift was in the magnifying of Christ by her sanctified and profitable conversation. It is not every Christian who can wisely and successfully use the intercourse of daily life for the exaltation of the Lord, even by familiar and fireside talk. Mrs. Prankerd shone in this sphere; her radiant joy in Jesus, her extensive and minute knowledge of the Bible, her tender affability, and her lucid exposition of doctrine, combined to make her a special help and blessing to her friends in this way. Again, she exercised a widely-extended influence through her correspondence. There must be many hundreds of her letters scattered among those favoured with her friendship, letters which ever breathed a pure and heavenly atmosphere, lifting the soul to the regions of uninterrupted communion with God, regions where she seemed perpetually to dwell. God also greatly blessed her in visitation, in prayer, in private dealing with souls. She was honoured in winning many to the Saviour, and also in leading many Christians to a higher and more glorious experience in the Divine life. It is felt such a consecrated career should have more than a passing notice. If any reader of these lines should possess letters of Mrs. Prankerd, or materials from which a short memoir could be compiled, they would greatly oblige by the loan of them for a time to Rev. Charles Green, 60, Aubrey street, Everton, Liverpool.

MRS. ABRAHAM WALLIS, FOREST GATE.

The Bignold Hall, Forest Gate, Branch of the Evangelistic Mission has just sustained an irreparable loss by the "abundant entrance" into life of Mrs. Abraham Wallis, who for twenty-one years has seconded her husband's ministrations in the Gospel in that neighbourhood. Known and beloved as a true "mother in Israel," she went in and out amongst the people leaving cheer and encouragement everywhere, whilst the large mothers' meeting looked to her as leader, not a few of the women claiming to be her children in the faith. Mrs. Wallis was mainly instrumental in establishing a medical mission which is increasing in helpfulness and blessing to both souls and bodies of eager patients, to whom she frequently addressed the message of salvation.

Brought up as a member of the Society of Friends, Mrs. Wallis was a strong advocate in the cause of temperance and peace, although she always maintained that the most effective temperance work could not stop short of soul conversion to God. Perhaps no better testimonial of her life and work for Christ could be given than the well-known active service of her children in the kingdom of God, Mr. Ransome Wallis, the eldest son, being widely known as a preacher of the Gospel. On the occasion of the celebration of Mr. and Mrs. Wallis's golden wedding last May, nothing was more striking than the united testimony given by each of the family that it was due to the influence and prayers of mother and father that they were led out in the salvation of souls. For nearly two years Mrs. Wallis's health had visibly declined, and one by one her outward activities had to be curtailed, but with the true instinct of a child of God, she exchanged the outer service for that not less precious in God's sight, the ministry of intercession. Her last days, though spent amid much bodily suffering, were blessed by this ministry in a marked degree. She was enabled to glorify God in the fires of suffering, and her passage through the dark valley was lit up until it merged into the fulness of day. She fell asleep on Feb. 24, at the age of seventy-two, in the presence of her beloved partner of more than fifty years, and her children.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE O. A. M. Committee have decided upon the formation of a new body of workers in connection with the Mission, to be called The Voluntary Helpers' Union of the Open Air-Mission, to consist of Christian men who, while not actually open-air preachers, may yet render valuable assistance in the work. Such departments as the singing of the Gospel, the playing of musical instruments, the distribution of literature, and personal conversation with bystanders have long and urgently needed more efficient providing for by just such an auxiliary force. The voluntary helpers of the Mission could also render the greatest assistance by interesting Christian friends in its manifold operations, with a view to the increase of its funds and the general spread of the work.

It has long been felt that there are many earnest Christian workers desirous of identifying themselves with the Mission who have refrained from doing so by the knowledge that they were not qualified for the full status of an open-air evangelist. It is intended, by means of this new Union, to encourage such, especially young men, and to enable them to gain experience by using such abilities as they already possess for the Master's service, so that they shall, in many cases, qualify for full membership in time.

Heartily commending this new movement to your readers' personal and prayerful consideration, the secretary will be happy to answer any inquiries on the subject, and to send a form of application to those who desire to join.

George Mackinlay, Major, Hon. Sec.
Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

Army and Navy Prayer Union.

THE annual United Army and Navy prayer-meeting was held on Saturday afternoon at the Cannon-street Hotel. A large number of officers of both services were present; the chair was occupied by Rear-Admiral Alington, and it was pleasing to see so many young officers present. Earnest prayer was offered that a great blessing might be poured out on the gathering. The chairman read a portion of Acts xvii., and Colonel Seton Churchill gave a short address on the latter clause of the last verse, dwelling principally on Dionysius the Areopagite, and closing with an earnest appeal to the young officers present to cleave to the Lord Jesus, and to any unconverted men who might have come in to give their hearts to the Lord Jesus while yet there was time.

Much prayer followed, and then the secretary read a very touching letter from a Lieutenant-General of the German Army, stating that they proposed forming a similar Prayer Union for the German Army, and requesting information on the details. The letter was read amid enthusiasm, and a sympathetic letter was drafted, and the meeting requested its transmission to the German Lieutenant-General. Earnest prayer followed for the German Army and for the German Emperor.

Various special requests were made the subjects of prayer, and intercessory prayer was offered for the Queen and all the Royal Family, for the Commander-in-Chief, for all in command, for young officers, young soldiers and sailors, chaplains of both services, for the sick and wounded specially in North-West India and Central Africa, and other subjects. Thanksgiving followed for blessings received, many mentioned in detail, and the Benediction by one of the chaplains present closed a very remarkable meeting of this Prayer Union.
